A similar approach ought to be used to reduce the need for abortions. Money ought to be spent on the development of improved contraceptives and Americans ought to be better education on contraceptive use. The average failure rate for the condom and the diaphragm is 10 to 12 percent, Bialy says, but it was brought down to two percent in a program for underprivileged teen-agers when clinic employees took the time to carefully instruct them.

Bialy also believes there is a need for fundamental changes in Americans' attitudes toward contraceptives. "People are dissatisfied with what's available and when they are dissatisfied they use that as a rationalization for not using it. You talk to men and they give you a litany of reasons why they don't use the condom. In other elements of our lives we recognize we cannot have exactly what we want . . . That should be no excuse for not using what's currently available."

One-third of all abortions are performed on teen-agers. "If you can get the kids to think about the fact that fast foods don't provide them with good nutrition," he says, "isn't it possible that we could succeed in getting the idea across that junk sex is just as bad for them?"

Congress has spent far too much time debating such questions as when human life begins. No one, * * * knows the answer to that. But we do have some understanding of when the need for abortion begins: it begins with ignorance, with contraceptive failure, with poor attitudes about reproduction. We have found that public education has changed attitudes about smoking. It can also change attitudes about sex.

● Mr. JEPSEN. Mr. President, since the beginning of the 97th Congress, almost 2 years ago, this body has been actively debating and considering legislation which deals with our economy, our defense, our foreign policy, and our domestic policy. During this time, when Americans have asked the Congress to turn its attention to many of the pressing social issues which were the focal point of the 1980 elections, the immediacy of the economic problems has caused a diversion from these issues.

After almost 2 years of delaying action on social issues, the Senate is currently debating legislation that is of great interest to Americans of all political, religious, and social backgrounds—the issue of abortion.

Mr. President, I am on record in support of Senator HELMS' efforts to restrict abortion on demand. I firmly believe that life in the womb is just that, life, and that if that life does not meet natural disaster or deliberate attack, it will become a young child. I believe that the 1973 Roe against Wade decision which legalized abortion has perpetrated an even more tragic effect than the snuffing out of lives in the womb. It has legitimatized the ethic of human disposability. That is—life which is inconvenient has no right to exist.

Mr. President, the current attempt by several of my colleagues to stall further debate on the pressing issue of abortion is not only consuming the time of this body—it is distracting attention from an issue that is of great importance to all Americans—no matter what opinion one might have. This body is doing a great disservice to the constituents we serve by not forcing an up or down vote on this issue; 1.5 million lives are being terminated every year. The people of America are watching.●

● Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, today I will vote for cloture, having voted against cloture on the first attempt in keeping with my practice respecting the freedom of debate under Senate traditions.

My vote is cast in the belief that the opportunity for debate on the measure has been adequate. Today, for example, very little has been said and the Senate on other important matters is virtually at a standstill.

My vote for cloture does not indicate how I will vote on the pending measure. I firmly believe, however, the importance of the issues merits a vote, or votes, expressly on the issues of abortion and school prayer. My preference would be separate votes.●

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California should be reminded that under the previous order at 4 p.m. the clerk will state the motion to invoke cloture.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, before that happens, I cleared this on our side. I ask unanimous consent that after the cloture vote the Senator from Oregon (Mr. PACKWOOD) be recognized once more.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CLOTURE MOTION

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time for debate under the unanimous-consent agreement having expired, pursuant to rule XXII, the Chair lays before the Senate the pending cloture motion, which the clerk will state.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

CLOTURE MOTION

We the undersigned Senators, in accordance with the provisions of rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, hereby move to bring to a close debate on amendment number 2038 to amendment number 2031, as modified, to the committee substitute to House Joint Resolution 520, a joint resolution to provide for a temporary increase in the public debt limit.

VOTE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By unanimous consent, the quorum call has been waived. The question is, Is it the sense of the Senate that debate on the Helms amendment No. 2038 shall be brought to a close?

The yeas and nays are mandatory under the rule.

The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. PELL (when his name was called). Mr. President, I have a live pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY). If he were here and voting, he would vote "nay." If I were permitted to vote, I would vote "yea." I, therefore, withhold my vote.

Mr. STEVENS. I announce that the Senator from Missouri (Mr. DANFORTH), the Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER), the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. HEINZ), the Senator from Illinois (Mr. PERCY), the Senator from New Mexico (Mr. SCHMITT), the Senator from Vermont (Mr. STAFFORD), and the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. WALLOP) are necessarily absent.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Texas (Mr. BENTSEN), the Senator from Delaware (Mr. BIDEN), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. BUMPERS), the Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON), the Senator from Florida (Mr. CHILES), the Senator from California (Mr. CRANSTON), the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. INOUYE), the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY), the Senator from Montana (Mr. MELCHER), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. PRYOR), the Senator from Michigan (Mr. RIEGLE), and the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. BRADLEY) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Michigan (Mr. RIEGLE) would vote "nay."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber wishing to vote?

The yeas and nays resulted—yeas 45, nays 35, as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this vote, there are 45 yeas and 35 nays. Three-fifths of the Senators duly chosen and sworn not having voted in the affirmative, the motion is rejected.

The majority leader is recognized.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that notwithstanding the order for the Senator from Oregon to be recognized next, that I be recognized for 1 minute in advance of that time, without his right to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. BAKER. Mr President, all Senators may not be aware, but a cloture motion has been filed today against further debate on the Helms amendment. I would like to set a time certain for a vote on that cloture motion on Wednesday when it will mature. I would suggest 5 p.m.

I will inquire of the minority leader if he is in a position to agree to that at this time.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Not at this moment, but very shortly I am sure I will be.

Mr. BAKER. Very well. Mr. President, I will discuss this matter further with the minority leader. It is my hope that we can, as we have recently in the case of most cloture motions, establish a time certain for this vote.

A little later I would hope that we can get unanimous consent that without the rule XXII quorum a vote will occur at 5 p.m. on Wednesday next on the cloture motion which has been filed today.

Now, Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, will the majority leader answer a question? Does the majority leader know what he plans to do during tomorrow?

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, it would be my hope that during the day tomorrow, perhaps as soon as we conclude morning business in the morning, that we could proceed to the consideration of the Hatch amendment. It would be my hope, as I indicated earlier, that we would have a full day of debate on the Hatch amendment, perhaps even part of Wednesday, depending on the preference of Senators. But I have outstanding a representation that I will ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the Hatch amendment to the Constitution at some point. I despair of gaining unanimous consent to do that, but it is my present intention to ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of that matter tomorrow.

It is also my intention, Mr. President, to return to the consideration of the Helms amendment, which, of course, we must do under rule XXII at some time during the day on Wednesday.

At this time, I would expect that we would turn to the Helms amendment and continue debate on the Helms amendment either in preparation for another cloture vote, if that is required, or pursuant to the provisions of rule XXII postcloture, if that is appropriate.

Mr. President, answering the question of the Senator from Oregon, I would hope that tomorrow the Senate would agree to the consideration of the Hatch amendment for the remainder of the day and perhaps a part of Wednesday.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, will the distinguished majority leader yield for a question?

Mr. BAKER. I yield.

Mr. WEICKER. If I am not mistaken, making the motion to proceed is the prerogative of the majority leader but is the motion to proceed debatable?

Mr. BAKER. Yes, it is.

Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I believe the Senator from Oregon has the floor.

Mr. BAKER. Will the Senator from Oregon yield?

Mr. PACKWOOD. Yes, without losing my right to the floor.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I understand that procedurally it is necessary to return to the "debate" on the Helms amendment. But beyond that, I see no point in consuming the time of the Senate. I will say again what I have said for the last 3 or 4 weeks, that I am ready to vote and put an end to all these cloture votes. I hope we will have enough votes on Wednesday, but I am not certain of it. I do thank the majority leader for his patience.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the Senator from Oregon and the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. President, it would be my intention tomorrow, after we resume consideration of the unfinished business, to move to proceed to the consideration of the Hatch amendment which, of course, would have the effect of displacing the debt limit, but to return to the debt limit after perhaps a day of debate on the Hatch amendment.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I think the majority leader announced earlier there would be no more votes today.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I had not announced that, but I will now announce that. There will be no more record votes tonight.

Mr. President, I have consulted with the principals involved and earlier today with the minority leader. For the remainder of this day, I ask unanimous consent that no tabling motion be in order to the bill or any amendment thereto.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Before the Senator from Oregon proceeds, may we have order in the Chamber?

The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I think the time has come—I had hoped we might have had what the majority leader called a spirited debate, but I do not think we are going to have a spirited debate. So let me touch a bit on the subject of abortion itself, realizing that what we are actually debating and what we are rejecting cloture on is not so much the subject of abortion as to whether or not we should invoke cloture on the Helms amendment, which I contend is an effort to reverse the Supreme Court by legislation on a constitutional issue rather than a constitutional amendment. Be that as it may, I think it is appropriate to talk a bit about abortion and about the decision as to whether or not a woman should be able to make the choice for herself as to whether or not she wants to have an abortion. I emphasize "make the choice." Nobody is forcing her to have it. Neither should anyone prohibit her from having it.

Because of the efforts of the Moral Majority and others to paint this as a moral issue, and clearly they see it as the morality on the one side and those who favor a woman's right to choose as being on the other side, I should like to read a list of organizations who support a woman's right to choose whether or not she wants an abortion. To put it another way, they support the present Supreme Court decision on this subject, and the present Supreme Court decision is that a woman can make that choice if she wants. That is a constitutional right, and that right cannot be taken away properly without amending the Constitution. These are religious organizations which hold prochoice positions on abortion rights:

RELIGIOUS ORGANIZATIONS WHICH HOLD PRO-CHOICE POSITIONS ON ABORTION RIGHTS

American Baptist Churches, 1968 (reaffirmed 1981);

American Ethical Union, 1973 (reaffirmed 1977);

American Jewish Congress, 1972 (reaffirmed 1982);

American Humanist Association, 1972 (reaffirmed 1977);

B'Nai B'rith Women, 1970 (reaffirmed 1978);

Catholics for a Free Choice;

Christian Church (Disciples of Christ) 1975;

Episcopalian Church, 1967 (reaffirmed 1976, 1979);

Federation of Reconstructionist Congregations and Havurot, 1982;

Episcopal Urban Caucus, 1982;

Episcopal Women's Caucus, 1982;

Hawaii Council of Churches, 1981;

Lutheran Church in America, 1970 (reaffirmed 1978);

Massachusetts Council of Churches, 1976;

Moravian Church in America, Northern Province, 1970 (reaffirmed 1974);

Northern California Ecumenical Council and the Southern California Council of Churches, 1981;

National Council of Jewish Women, 1969 (reaffirmed 1979);

National Federation of Temple Sisterhoods, 1965 (reaffirmed 1975);
New York State Council of Churches, 1982;
Pennsylvania Council of Churches, 1980;
Presbyterian Church in the U.S., 1980;
Reconstructionist Rabbinical Association, 1981;
Union of American Hebrew Congregations, 1981;
North American Federation of Temple Youth, 1982;
Unitarian Universalist Association, 1977 (reaffirmed 1978);
United Church of Christ, 1981;
United Methodist Church, 1976 (reaffirmed 1980);
United Presbyterian Church, USA, 1970 (reaffirmed 1979);
United Synagogue of America, 1975;
Women's Caucus of the Church of the Brethen, 1982;
Women's League for Conservative Judaism, 1972 (reaffirmed 1974); and the Young Women's Christian Association, 1973 (reaffirmed 1979).

Mr. President, there may be other religious organizations that have endorsed choice. I hesitate to mention them unless I am sure they are on that side. If by chance I have offended anyone by leaving out a religious organization that has adopted a resolution in favor of supporting the Supreme Court's decision on choice, I would like to have its name and I shall add it to the list. I would simply rather err on the side of caution in mentioning the names rather than on the undue side of carelessness and, by chance, wrongly naming an organization.

Next I would like to name medical associations which hold pro choice positions on abortion rights:

American Academy of Child Psychiatry, 1977;
American Academy of Pediatrics, 1977;
American College Health Association, 1982;
American College of Obstetricians & Gynecologists, 1974;
American College of Osteopathic Obstetricians & Gynecologists, 1982;
American Medical Association, 1981;
American Medical Students Association, 1982;
American Medical Women's Association, 1982;
American Protestant Hospital Association, 1977;
American Psychiatric Association, 1981;
American Public Health Association, 1979;
Association, of Planned Parenthood Physicians, 1981;
Group for the Advancement of Psychiatry, 1969;
National Family Planning and Reproductive Health Association, 1982;
National Medical Association, 1982;
National Student Nurses Association, 1982; and the Physicians Forum, 1982.

Again, Mr. President, there may be other medical organizations that have endorsed a women's right to choose. If I do not know them, I would like to have their names to add to the list. I do know as far as medical organizations are concerned, the overwhelming bulk of those who have any position at all, including the American Medical Association, which is the dean of medical associations in this country, have taken a position on the side of the right of a woman to choose.

Mr. President, I should now like to read a list of other organizations. These are not medical, not religious, but they represent a great cross-section of American society that also supports a woman's right to make a choice as to whether or not she wishes to have an abortion:

American Association of University Women, 1982;
American Civil Liberties Union, 1973;
American Federation of Teachers, 1981;
American Home Economics Association, 1971;
American Psychoanalytic Association, 1970;
American Psychological Association, 1982;
American Veterans Committee, 1982;
Americans for Democratic Action, 1981;
Center for Population Options, 1981;
Center for Women Policy Studies, 1982;
Coalition of Labor Union Women, 1982;
Committee for Abortion Rights and Against Sterilization Abuse, 1981;
Committee To Defend Reproductive Rights of the Coalition for the Medical Rights of Women, 1982; Community Service Society, 1974;
Federation of Organizations for Professional Women, 1981;
Federation of Protestant Welfare Agencies, Inc., 1976;
Friends of Family Planning, 1982;
International Ladies Garment Workers Union, 1980;
Mexican-American Women's Association, 1981;
Ms. Foundation for Women, Inc., 1981;
National Abortion Federation, 1982;
National Abortion Rights Action League, 1982;
National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, 1982;
National Association of Social Workers, 1975;
National Capital TAY-SACHS Foundation, 1982;
National Council of Family Relations, 1971;
National Education Association, 1982;
National Emergency Civil Liberties Committee, 1982;
National Organization for Women, Inc., 1982;
National Women's Health Network, 1978;
National Women's Political Caucus, 1982;
Newspaper Guild, 1981;
Planned Parenthood Federation of America, 1976;
Population Association of America, 1982;
Reproductive Rights National Network, 1982;
Sierra Club, 1969;
United States' Women's Health Coalition, 1982;
Voters for Choice, 1979;
Women Against Pornography, 1982;
Women & Health Roundtable, 1982;
Women's Equity Action League, 1981;
Women's International League for Peace and Freedom, 1981;
Women's Legal Defense Fund, 1982;
Women's National Democratic Club, 1980; and Zero Population Growth, 1982.

Mr. President, if you count the religious, the medical, and the other organizations, it is an extraordinary array of a very valid cross section of American life. What it, indeed, proves is that this issue is one upon which Americans vehemently and strongly disagree, an issue that is a very private, personal one.

Let me emphasize that this is not a monetary issue in bulk. Whether or not a woman chooses to have an abortion is not a Federal expense. It is not going to make any difference to the President's budget. If the Helms amendment passes, it is not going to save any extraordinary amount of money. I personally think that the Federal Government under its medicaid program should be willing to fund abortions for poor women who cannot otherwise afford them. We fund most of their other medical costs because we say that they should not be without proper medical treatment, but we do not fund their abortions. That is a battle that has been fought in this Senate before and my side has lost.

What we are talking about now is a more fundamental issue. This is not, are we going to increase the President's budget by $1 billion or $500 million or are we going to save money. We are now going to the very heart of the situation, which is, are we going to reverse the Supreme Court on a constitutional matter, the right of a woman to make a choice as to whether or not she wants an abortion, to reverse it by a statute and impose upon everyone in this country, or at least attempt to impose upon them, a particular moral view with which the bulk of the country does not agree. I say attempt because we are all well aware that it will not work.

Prior to the Roe against Wade decision in 1973, abortion was illegal in most of the States of this country and yet illegal abortion was rampant. We tried a similar experiment with prohibition 60 years ago, an it did not work then either.

So when people talk about imposing morality on America, all they are simply saying is that if we have our way it will make our consciences feel better if we can change the Supreme Court's decision and tell a woman in America that if she has an abortion a stigma will attach to it that she has done something illegal and immoral. It will not change her mind to have it; we know that from our experience before abortion was legalized, but we will have imposed a morality, an attempted morality on this country that will not work.

The danger that I find in the approach of the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. HELMS) is the danger of attempting to reverse the Supreme Court with a statute. Tomorrow, apparently, we will debate the amendment of the Senator from Utah (Mr. HATCH). His is a constitutional amendment to reverse the Supreme Court decision on abortion. I do not agree with his amendment, but he has at least followed the process that our Founding Fathers intended when they drafted the Constitution. That process is that if you do not like a constitutional decision of the Supreme Court, you attempt to change it with a constitutional amendment. We have done it numerous times in the history of this country. We did it with the 11th amendment in which we prohibited a citizen of one State from suing another State. That constitutional amendment grew out of Chisholm against Georgia. Chisholm was a citizen of one State and sued the State of Georgia and the States did not like it. Congress proposed a constitutional amendment to prohibit it, and it was adopted.

We did it with the Civil War amendments, the 13th, 14th, and 15th amendments to overturn the Dred Scott decision. The Dred Scott decision was a U.S. Supreme Court decision in the mid-1850's that said blacks were not citizens. It did not matter that they were free blacks in Northern States. They still were not citizens. So those amendments overturned the Dred Scott decision and said that blacks were citizens.

It is interesting to note that we went the constitutional amendment route even when we were passionately involved in the Civil War. Despite Vietnam, despite any other activity of this country, the American Civil War remains in our history the single most divisive thing that ever happened in this country. At the height of northern victory and at the height of the hate and passion that that war engendered, Abraham Lincoln and Andrew Johnson did not attempt to amend the Constitution by statute. They clearly would have had the votes to do it; the South in essence had been purged of the Congress. Any statute would have passed overwhelmingly. But those men very carefully grasped the significance of what they would be doing and they went the proper route of the constitutional amendment.

We did it with the 16th amendment. The 16th amendment reversed a Supreme Court decision that said that the Congress could not levy an income tax. Congress had tried to. The Supreme Court found that it violated the Constitution as then written. There were discussions about the Court was wrong and the Court should not have ruled that way and we should try to reverse the Court by statute, but no one seriously tried it. Finally, the 16th amendment was sent out by the Congress for ratification and the States ratified it allowing the imposition of an income tax.

And, of course, we did it recently with the 26th amendment which was the 18-year-old vote in State elections. Congress had passed a law saying that 18-year-olds could vote in Federal and State elections. The U.S. Supreme Court held that while the Congress had the power to do that for Federal elections, it did not have the power to do it for State elections. So the 26th amendment was offered by the Congress and ratified by the States which said that 18-year-olds could vote in State as well as Federal elections.

That is the proper way to amend the Constitution, if you do not like a constitutional decision of the Supreme Court. Our founders did not intend the Constitution to be easily amended. The recent battle for the equal rights amendment truly proves how hard it is. Ten years of effort at ratification of the equal rights amendment and it was not ratified. It will one day, I hope, be ratified, but again those who wanted the equal rights amendment followed the avenue that our founders intended, which was a constitutional amendment.

In the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. HELMS) there are a series of findings. The argument may be made that these findings are not binding on the Court, but indeed the Court has given deferance to findings of Congress in the past, much more so than the findings of State legislatures.

Time and again in cases, the Supreme Court—first the Federal district courts and then the Supreme Court—has said Congress has found such and such, and far be it from the Court to overturn the findings of fact of Congress, because the Supreme Court is not involved in factfinding. They are involved in reviewing decisions to see if they are constitutional. But they do not have witnesses. They do not have lawyers come in and cross-examine defendants and plaintiffs. They review a record that comes from a court below, and one of the things that can come from the court below is that Congress made the following findings of fact. One of the findings is that "scientific evidence demonstrates the life of each human being begins at conception."

I will read that again, because these three taken together are critical.

> Scientific evidence demonstrates the life of each human being begins at conception.

When we had hearings before the Senate Judiciary Committee on the so-called human life bill which Senator HELMS introduced, this particular point, that "scientific evidence demonstrates the life of each human being begins at conception," was debated extensively.

I will read one quotation from the National Academy of Sciences, which is probably our most prestigious scientific organization:

> It is the view of the National Academy of Sciences that the statement in Chapter 101, Section 1, of U.S. Senate Bill S158, 1981, cannot stand up to the scrutiny of science. This section reads "The Congress finds that present day scientific evidence indicates a significant likelihood that actual human life exists from conception." This statement purports to derive its conclusions from science, but it deals with a question to which science can provide no answer.

Indeed, life exists in all of us all the time. It is ongoing. But if by this sentence you mean that life and personhood exist from conception and that, from that moment on, if the Court were to accept that finding of fact, you can reverse a Supreme Court decision, that is exactly what is the intent of the Senator from North Carolina, because his two subsequent findings read as follows:

> The Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Roe against Wade erred in not recognizing the humanity of the unborn child and the compelling interest of the several States in protecting the life of each person before birth; and
> The Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Roe against Wade erred in excluding unborn children from the safeguards afforded by the equal protection and due process provisions of the Constitution of the United States.

The amendment of the Senator from North Carolina has many other findings, most of which are wrong in part—not in total, but in part—but those three are the critical ones.

It is said that the scientific evidence is that life begins at conception, which even the National Academy of Science has said is beyond the speculation of science; and with the two findings that the Supreme Court erred in the Supreme Court decision in Roe against Wade, it is hoped that, by putting those three together, a basis for a finding of fact will have been laid that by the simple passage of a bill, in this Congress, we will overturn a constitutional decision.

The reason why those on my side feel so passionately about this issue is not just the issue of abortion. It is not just the issue of abortion, because that issue has been clouded by the fact that the abortion amendment is attached to another amendment, and that amendment is equally pernicious in terms of the procedures it intends to invoke. It reads as follows:

> Notwithstanding the provisions of sections 1253, 1254, and 1257 of this chapter, the Supreme Court shall not have jurisdiction to review, by appeal, writ of certiorari, or otherwise, any case arising out of any State statute, ordinance, rule, regulation, or any part thereof, or arising out of any act interpreting, applying, or enforcing a State statute, ordinance, rule, or regulation, which relates to voluntary prayers in public schools and public buildings.

It goes on further to say that any of the inferior Federal courts cannot have jurisdiction of any case the Supreme Court cannot hear. That is a clear effort to overturn the constitutional decision of the Supreme Court on prayer, by simply taking away the jurisdiction of the Court. With 51 votes in this body and 218 in the House of Representatives, you do not have to go the route of getting two-thirds here and two-thirds in the House for a constitutional amendment and getting three-fourths of the States to ratify it. All you need is two-thirds of Congress being swept off its feet in a passionate moment, and you can take away anybody's rights by saying they cannot get into court.

My predecessor in this body, Wayne Morse, said time and time again, "Give me control of the procedures of democracy, and I will control the substance of democracy."

All you have to do is change the wording of that amendment very slightly. Instead of saying that the Supreme Court cannot review any decision involving school prayer, change it to read, "The Supreme Court cannot review any decision involving abridgement of freedom of speech or of the press or unlawful search and seizure."

How many times have all of us in this body had complaints about some of the actions of the Internal Revenue Service in swooping down upon a small business, demanding to see books, harassing the owner of the business, frightening the owner to death? Think how much that power can be magnified if you have no right to go to court to protest the searching of your premises or the seizing of your documents.

Or, picture a situation—and I can imagine this easily, in which we would be swept off our feet—a Lindberg kind of kidnaping, in which a suspect is caught. On the way to the police station, he says a few words to the police officers and then the trial comes. The defendant chooses not to take the stand. The statements to the police officers are admitted in evidence. The defendant is convicted and is sentenced to be executed.

The case goes to the U.S. Supreme Court. The Supreme Court overturns it, saying that the statements given to the police officers were illegally admitted and violated the defendant's rights against self-incrimination. The country is in an uproar, because the baby of a famous couple has been kidnaped and murdered, and the country wants vengeance on somebody. Retribution would make us feel better, and I understand that.

In that moment of passion, I could picture a Congress passing a law that says that henceforth, the Supreme Court cannot review any cases involving self-incrimination. Then there would be no limit to the protection of the traditional civil liberties of this country. We would have overturned 200 years of history—certainly, 180 years of constitutional history since Marbury against Madison in 1803.

What we will have said is that, henceforth, it will be Congress that will decide what the Constitution means, not the Supreme Court.

That is certainly a topic worthy of debate. I would hope that in rational discussion and rational debate this Congress would not come to that conclusion, but it should not be decided in the heat of passion over abortion or prayer.

If we are going to change what our founders intended, and they clearly knew what they were doing, our civil liberties, our Bill of Rights reads very much as the traditional civil liberties in England. Most of them came from England. Many of them word for word came from England. But all of the English protections are simply acts of Parliament, and they can be reversed by a majority at any time. It has been a strong sense of English tradition that they do not reverse them.

Our founders understood that, if we gave those civil liberties in this country no more protection than they had in England, if we simply made them statutes of Congress, any subsequent Congress could reverse them. If that is what they had intended, that is what they would have done. They were fully well aware of the process because that was the process in Great Britain, where there was nothing more than the protection of the Parliament. They went way beyond that. They took those liberties that English men and women had fought, bled, and died for, been imprisoned for and forfeited properties for, for over 500 years from Magna Carta to their Bill of Rights in 1789 and wrote them in our Constitution and said, "We are giving them a higher elevation than Britain. We are giving them a greater protection, and we are saying that those rights cannot be taken away by an act of Congress the way they can be taken away in Great Britain."

If we pass the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina we are reversing what the Founding Fathers intended without following the process that they intended.

I pray we will not come to that because if we do I fear it will be the day that we will see a declining light over protections that have made this country extraordinarily free, historically, traditionally the freest in the world. Many of the liberties, as far as they involve establishment of religion, the press, the right to assemble, are greater than those in Great Britain. If we decide that henceforth the Supreme Court may review only those things that Congress chooses, that is the day that we take those liberties out of the hands of those whom our founders intended to review them and put them in the hands of a transitory Congress easily subject to passion.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum and ask unanimous consent that when the quorum is called off I might again have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there now be a brief period for the transaction of routine morning business to extend not past 5:30 p.m. in which Senators may speak.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SUPPLEMENTAL REPORT OF THE SPECIAL PROSECUTOR IN THE RAYMOND DONOVAN INVESTIGATION

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I wish to inform my Senate colleagues that I have today received a copy of the "Supplemental Report of the Special Prosecutor" in the investigation of Secretary of Labor Raymond J. Donovan.

Special Prosecutor Leon Silverman has reported that he has investigated all additional allegations of wrongdoing by Mr. Donovan which surfaced since his first report and has concluded that there is insufficient credible evidence of any violation of the law by Secretary Donovan. In his letter of transmittal to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, Mr. Silverman also pointed out that the source of 17 of the previously investigated allegations has since admitted having deliberately lied about all of his allegations and that a subsequent polygraph examination of the source confirmed that the source was now telling the truth in reporting the fabrication of all his previous allegations.

Mr. President, this supplemental report of the Special Prosecutor is further good news for Secretary of Labor Raymond Donovan. Its conclusion is the same as the earlier voluminous report by Prosecutor Silverman; that is, no credible evidence of wrongdoing. It is my hope that the filing of this additional report, in what has obviously been a very thorough investigation by the Special Prosecutor, will finally and definitively put an end to these accusations about Secretary Donovan.

Our Secretary of Labor is an able, knowledgeable leader whose integrity has been upheld in every respect by this lengthy, detailed investigation conducted pursuant to the Ethics in Government Act. I am pleased for him and his family that this burden has been lifted and express the hope that he will now be permitted to pursue the responsibilities of his important Cabinet post without any further harassment or distraction with respect to these baseless charges.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD following these remarks copies of Special Prosecutor Silverman's letter to me as Chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, his letter to Judges Robb, Lumbard, and Morgan of the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals, and the introduction from his supplemental report.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. GOVERNMENT SPECIAL PROSECUTOR,
New York, N.Y., September 13, 1982.

Hon. STROM THURMOND,
Chairman, Judiciary Committee of the U.S. Senate, Russell Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C.

(Attention of Duke Short).

DEAR SENATOR THURMOND: On September 11, 1982 I filed with the Division for the Purpose of Appointing Special Prosecutors of the United States Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, a supplement to my report of the investigation of Secretary of Labor Raymond J. Donovan pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 595(b)(2). I have today submitted to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the Vice President of the United States copies of the supplemental public report pursuant to Section 595(a) and the Order of the Court filed September 11, 1982. Since I know that you have a continuing interest in this matter, I am furnishing a copy of this supplemental public report to you as Chairman of the Judiciary Committee of the United States Senate.

Respectfully,

LEON SILVERMAN,
Special Prosecutor.

INTRODUCTION

Subsequent to the preparation of the four volume Report of the Special Prosecutor filed with the Court on June 26, 1982, a series of allegations concerning Secretary Donovan was received by the Special Prosecutor. Pursuant to decretal paragraph 3 of the December 29 Order, the Special Prosecutor investigated all of the allegations, some of which were in part duplicative of, or strongly resembled, allegations set forth in the Report. In each instance, the Special Prosecutor concluded that there was insufficient credible evidence to support a prosecution of Secretary Donovan for any of the alleged wrongdoing or for his statements concerning such allegations. The allegations and the attendant investigation are described in this Supplemental Report.

U.S. GOVERNMENT SPECIAL PROSECUTOR,
New York, N.Y., September 11, 1982.

Hon. ROGER ROBB,
Senior Circuit Court Judge, U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, U.S. Courthouse, Washington, D.C.

Hon. J. EDWARD LUMBARD,
Senior Circuit Court Judge, U.S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, New York, N.Y.

HON. LEWIS R. MORGAN,
Senior Circuit Court Judge, U.S. Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit, Newman, Ga.

DEAR JUDGES ROBB, LUMBARD, AND MORGAN: Your Honors will recall that when my report was filed with the Court on June 26, 1982, I informed the Court that I believed it timely to give the notification to the Attorney General provided for in 28 U.S.C. 596(b)(1) thereby terminating the Office of Special Prosecutor. It was suggested that I should delay notification to the Attorney General until all of the administrative details associated with the winding up of my office had been completed which it was anticipated would take between three and four weeks.

During the winding up period I received additional allegations which, I believe, required me to reopen the investigation under the mandate contained in the Court's Order dated December 29, 1981. I informed the Court of that decision and immediately began this additional investigation.

I submit herewith a report of the investigation which, together with my report filed on June 26, 1982, will constitute my final report under 28 U.S.C. 595(b) (1) and (2). I shall, on Monday, September 13, 1982, submit to the Attorney General my notification pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 596(b)(1) that the investigation of all matters within my prosecutorial jurisdiction has been completed and that I have filed a report with the Court in full compliance with 28 U.S.C. 595(b). The office which I have occupied since December 29, 1981, will thereupon be terminated.

The Court will be aware that in connection with the murder of Nathan Masselli I requested the Federal Bureau of Investigation to conduct a full investigation into any possible federal criminal offense arising out of the murder. To date there has been developed no evidence of any relationship between Secretary Donovan and the murder of Nathan Masselli. I have therefore directed the FBI to report the results of this ongoing investigation to the Attorney General. If any evidence is subsequently developed indicating such a relationship and if the Attorney General shall apply to the Court for the appointment of a Special Prosecutor pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 592, and if the Court requests that I resume the Office of Special Prosecutor under those circumstances, I will be willing to accept such an appointment.

The Court should also be aware that, after my report was filed on June 26, the source of seventeen (17) of the allegations that I previously had investigated was interviewed and submitted to a polygraph examination. In the interview, the source admitted having deliberately lied about all of the allegations and stated that none of them was true. During the polygraph examination, the source stated that the source had deliberately fabricated the allegations and was now telling the truth in stating that the allegations had all been lies. In the opinion of the polygraph examiner, the source was truthful in so stating.

I cannot end my services without expressing to the Court my gratitude for the signal honor which you conferred on me by appointing me Special Prosecutor with respect to the matter concerning Secretary of Labor Raymond J. Donovan. This post was one of the most interesting and challenging experiences that I have had in the practice of law. I have learned much. It is given to few lawyers to perform public service in the way that has been permitted me and I am grateful for the opportunity.

Sincerely,

LEON SILVERMAN,
Special Prosecutor.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I hope shortly to be able to take care of certain closing details.

There is one matter that I believe can be passed by unanimous consent on our Calendar of General Orders for tonight, and I would especially like to deal with it, if possible.

Is the minority leader in position to consider Calendar Order 780, H.R. 3835, a bill for the relief of Rutherford K. Clarke and Ida T. Clarke?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, there is no objection to proceeding to its consideration.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the Senator.

RELIEF OF RUTHERFORD K. CLARKE AND IDA T. CLARKE

The bill (H.R. 3835) for the relief of Rutherford K. Clarke and his wife Ida T. Clarke, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

ORDERS FOR TUESDAY

ORDER FOR RECESS UNTIL 10:30 A.M.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today it stand in recess until 10:30 a.m. tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR THE RECOGNITION OF SENATOR CHILES

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, after the recognition of the two leaders under the standing order there are special orders for the recognition of Senators THURMOND and SPECTER. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Florida (Mr. CHILES) be recognized on special order to follow after the distinguished President pro tempore, the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. THURMOND) for not to exceed 15 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR A PERIOD FOR THE TRANSACTION OF ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that, after the recognition of the two leaders and the execution of the special orders, there be a period for the transaction of routine morning business to extend not past 11:30 a.m. in which Senators may speak for not more than 3 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR RECESS FROM 12 NOON UNTIL 2 P.M.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, the minority leader and I have consulted and, as is usually the case on Tuesday, Senators on both sides of the aisle will be involved in caucuses off the Senate floor at midday.

Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess tomorrow between the hours of 12 noon and 2 p.m.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR CLOTURE VOTE ON HELMS AMENDMENT NO. 2038 AT 5 P.M. ON WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 15

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I indicated earlier that I hoped to establish a time certain to vote under rule XXII. Let me propound a unanimous-consent request now which, I believe, has been cleared by the minority leader, and I will state it for his consideration and for the consideration of other Senators.

I ask unanimous consent that notwithstanding rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, the rollcall vote occur on the cloture motion on the Helms amendment No. 2038 (to Helms modified amendment No. 2031) to the debt limit bill at 5 p.m. on Wednesday, September 15, and that the automatic quorum under rule XXII be waived.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the minority leader.

PROGRAM

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, on tomorrow, after the expiration of the time just provided for the transaction of routine morning business, it is anticipated that the Senate will be asked to proceed to the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 110, the Hatch amendment dealing with abortion, and that the Senate will debate that measure tomorrow and perhaps part of the day on Wednesday. A cloture vote will occur on the Helms amendment No. 2038 on Wednesday at 5 p.m., and the automatic quorum call will be waived.

Now, Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HAYAKAWA). Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECESS UNTIL 10:30 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I have no further business to transact, and I see no Senator seeking recognition. Therefore, I move, in accordance with the order previously entered, that the Senate stand in recess until the hour of 10:30 a.m., tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and at 5:25 p.m., the Senate recessed until Tuesday, September 14, 1982, at 10:30 a.m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Monday, September 13, 1982

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. WRIGHT).

DESIGNATION OF SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the Speaker:

WASHINGTON, D.C.,
September 10, 1982.

I hereby designate the Honorable JIM WRIGHT to act as Speaker pro tempore on Monday, September 13, 1982.

THOMAS P. O'NEILL, Jr.,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Rev. James David Ford, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Gracious God, send Your wisdom upon this assembly and upon all Your people, that we may be the people You would have us be. May our hearts be open to Your spirit and our souls touched with love, forgiveness, and peace. Grant us Your grace this day, we pray. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

SUNDRY MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House by Mr. Chirdon, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Sparrow, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate having proceeded to reconsider the bill (H.R. 6863) entitled "An act making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1982, and for other purposes," returned by the President of the United States with his objections, to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, and passed by the House of Representatives on reconsideration of the same, it was resolved, that the said bill pass, two-thirds of the Senators present having voted in the affirmative.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 6068) entitled "An act to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1983 for intelligence-related activities of the U.S. Government, for the intelligence community staff, for the Central Intelligence Agency retirement and disability system, to authorize supplemental appropriations for fiscal year 1982 for the intelligence and intelligence-related activities of the U.S. Government, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Vice President, pursuant to Public Law 84-689, appointed the following Senators as delegates to the North Atlantic Assembly meeting to be held in London, United Kingdom, November 14-19, 1982: Mr. MATHIAS (chairman), Mr. TOWER, Mr. PERCY, Mr. STEVENS, Mr. ROTH, Mr. MCCLURE, Mr. ANDREWS, Mr. MATTINGLY, Mr. MURKOWSKI, Mr. SPECTER, Mr. PELL (vice chairman), Mr. JACKSON, Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. EAGLETON, Mr. NUNN, and Mr. BIDEN.

CONGRATULATIONS MISS DEBRA SUE MAFFETT—MISS AMERICA, 1982

(Mr. DANNEMEYER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasant privilege this morning to congratulate Miss Debra Sue Maffett of Anaheim, Calif., who was crowned Miss America this weekend.

America, California, and the city of Anaheim are beautifully represented in her title. I applaud the evolution of the pageant into a program of beauty and talent. Miss Maffett's singing talent is certainly an exhibition of a God-given gift. Miss Maffett should also be honored for persistence. It is reported that she won her California title after another State failed to select her twice for its title.

For my Texas friends who may be here this morning, let me make this observation that Texas failure to recognize and honor the beauty of this young lady has now benefited California because she moved to California and was there crowned Miss America.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DANNEMEYER. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. I thank the gentleman for yielding and I commend him. The State of California does now have a Miss America.

Of course, as the gentleman knows, Mississippi has three Miss Americas and in this contest the Miss Mississippi was second to the charming young lady from California, a second alternate.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. I can only say that at least the people of Mississippi have the good judgment and discretion to honor their own whereas I say Texas loss is California's gain.

I know my colleagues join with me in congratulating Miss Debra Sue Maffett, this year's Miss America.

UNION OF COUNCILS FOR SOVIET JEWRY ACCLAIMED

(Mr. FRENZEL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, today I had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Naum Tselescin, formerly of Leningrad, U.S.S.R., who has now emigrated to the United States. Mr. Tselescin waited 4½ years to be allowed to leave the U.S.S.R.

He is in Washington today as the guest of the Union of Councils for Soviet Jewry, a group well known to most Members for its tireless work on behalf of Jews who wish to emigrate from Russia.

The Union of Councils, and the various regional committees identify, communicate with, and organize local, national, and international support for, refuseniks like Naum Tselescin.

The presence of Naum Tselescin in Washington today is a heart-warming tribute to the thousands of people throughout the United States and the world who work persistently and effectively for rights the rest of us take for granted. Their work is frustrating, because the Soviet Government allows so few people to emigrate, but, without them, there would be no hope for the otherwise nameless and faceless refuseniks.

Today, however, they, and we, see the tangible rewards of their noble efforts. To the volunteers of the Minnesota-Dakota Committee for Soviet Jewry, who took a deep interest in Naum Tselescin and his family, I give my special thanks.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the provisions of clause 5 of rule I, the Chair announces that he will postpone further proceedings today on each motion to suspend the rules on which a recorded vote or the yeas and nays are ordered, or on which the vote is objected to under clause 4 of rule XV.

Such rollcall votes, if postponed, will be taken on Wednesday, September 15, 1982.

DIRECTING THE SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE TO RELEASE CERTAIN CONNECTICUT LAND

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 6422) to direct the Secretary of Agriculture to release on behalf of the United States a reversionary interest in certain land previously conveyed to the State of Connecticut, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 6422

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. (a)(1) Subject to subsection (b), the Secretary of Agriculture shall release on behalf of the United States, with respect to the land—

(A) described in section 2 of this Act, and

(B) conveyed, along with certain other parcels of land situated within the town of Sterling, county of Windham, State of Connecticut, to the State of Connecticut by a quitclaim deed dated November 18, 1954, the condition in such deed which requires that such lands be used for public purposes, and if not so used, that the lands revert to and revest in the United States: Provided, That such release shall in no way affect the interests of the United States in coal, oil, gas, and other minerals (not outstanding or reserved in third parties) reserved by the United States in the described lands: Provided further, That such release shall be applicable so long as the described lands are used exclusively for cemetery purposes.

(2) Section 32(c) of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act (7 U.S.C. 1011(c)) shall not apply to the release authorized in paragraph (1) of this subsection.

(b) The Secretary of Agriculture shall not execute the release authorized in subsection (a)(1) until the State of Connecticut, in consideration of such release, enters into an agreement satisfactory to the Secretary of Agriculture which provides that the State will not sell, lease, exchange, or otherwise dispose of the lands to which the release applies—

(1) except to the Ekonk Cemetery, Incorporated, of Sterling, Connecticut, exclusively for the expansion of its existing cemetery; and

(2) unless the proceeds from such disposal are—

(A) deposited and held in an account open to inspection by the Secretary of Agriculture, and

(B) used, if withdrawn from such account, exclusively for public purposes.

SEC. 2. The land referred to in section 1(a)(1) is the certain parcel of land formerly vested in the United States (a portion of the land designated as the J. E. Tanner tract 6b) and situated in the town of Sterling, county of Windham, State of Connecticut, containing 0.93 acres of land, more or less, bounded and described as follows:

Beginning at a stonewall corner located in the southerly line of the Cedar Swamp Road, so-called, being the northeast corner of the herein described premises and the northwest corner of the existing Ekonk Cemetery, Incorporated; thence south 14 degrees, 49 minutes east, 152.1 feet, more or less, along a stonewall to a wall corner; thence north 64 degrees, 50 minutes east, 145.7 feet, more or less, along a stonewall to a wall corner, the last two courses bounding easterly and northerly on the aforesaid Ekonk Cemetery, Incorporated; thence south 14 degrees, 53 minutes east, 50 feet, more or less, to an iron pin; thence south 64 degrees, 50 minutes west, 308 feet, more or less, to an iron pin; thence north 14 degrees, 49 minutes west, 204 feet, more or less, to an iron pin set in the southerly line of the aforesaid Cedar Swamp Road, the last three courses bounding easterly, southerly, and westerly on remaining land of the State of Connecticut; thence north 66 degrees, 26 minutes east, 162.9 feet, more or less, to a wall corner the place of beginning, bounding northerly on the said Cedar Swamp Road.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from Oregon (Mr. WEAVER) will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL) will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. WEAVER).

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 6422, as amended, involves less than 1 acre of land, and no cost to the Federal Government. But it is a significant matter to the Ekonk Cemetery of Sterling, Conn., which needs about 1 acre of land to expand the cemetery.

The 0.93 of an acre in question is part of a larger parcel conveyed to the State of Connecticut by the United States in 1954 and which is now the Pachuag State Forest. The lands were granted to the State under authority of section 32(c) of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act of 1937. That section provides that lands acquired by the Federal Government under the act may be conveyed to public authorities and agencies, but with the condition that they be used for public purposes, and that if they are not so used, they revert to the United States. The 1954 deed contains this "public purpose reversionary clause" and this prevents the State from conveying any of the land in question to the cemetery corporation. The bill releases this clause for the tract of 0.93 of an acre but retains to the United States the mineral interests reserved in the original conveyance.

Our committee ordered the bill reported by a recorded vote of 25 ayes to 0 nays. Adoption of H.R. 6422, as amended, by the House will remove a rather technical obstacle and permit the Ekonk Cemetery to make a much-needed expansion.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, my understanding is there is no objection to this bill on our side.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill presently being considered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

● Mr. GEJDENSON. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to present for consideration by the House of Representatives H.R. 6422, a bill directing the Secretary of Agriculture to release on behalf of the United States a reversionary interest in certain lands previously conveyed to the State of Connecticut. The release of this 1 acre of land is contingent upon an agreement between the State of Connecticut and the Secretary of Agriculture in which the State would agree to dispose of the lands to which the release applies to the Ekonk Cemetery, Inc., of Sterling, Conn.

The Ekonk Cemetery is a nonprofit organization incorporated in 1926 under the laws of the State of Connecticut. For approximately 20 years, the Ekonk Cemetery, Inc., has been seeking an additional acre of land from the adjacent Pachuag State Forest for use as additional cemetery space. However, most of the Pachuag State Forest were lands acquired under the Federal Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act of 1935 and conveyed to the State of Connecticut in 1954. Section 32 of title III of the act requires that any deed of conveyance be conditioned on the land being used solely for public purposes. The deed effecting the 1954 transfer of land to the State of Connecticut contained a provision establishing the right to reversion of ownership to the United States if the land ever ceased being used for public purposes. Therefore, this legislation is necessary to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to release the State of Connecticut from the deed's reversionary condition for this parcel of land.

The trustees of the Ekonk Cemetery brought this problem to my attention many months ago. Apparently, the cemetery had run out of burying ground and the trustees were seeking help in obtaining additional acreage.

The trustees of the Ekonk Cemetery had previously contacted the State of Connecticut concerning this conveyance of property, but the State's attorney general ruled that the "public purpose" clause contained in the deed would make such a transfer impossible. Furthermore, the State of Connecticut Park and Forest Commission is favorably disposed to transfer the acre of land to the Ekonk Cemetery, Inc. I am pleased that we have been able to work out a solution for the Ekonk Cemetery, Inc.

The Department of Agriculture has no objection to the enactment of H.R. 6422 as amended. I note that the Congress has, in several instances in recent years, granted similar relief to that provided by H.R. 6422.

I would like to thank the chairman of House Agriculture Committee, the Honorable E DE LA GARZA for his timely assistance in considering this legislation. Furthermore, I extend my appreciation to the Honorable JAMES WEAVER for presenting this bill today for the House of Representatives consideration. Last, I would like to thank the staff of the Agriculture Committee for their professional work in preparing the report on H.R. 6422.

Mr. Speaker, I encourage your support for this legislation and extend the appreciation of myself and the trustees of the Ekonk Cemetery for your assistance in the resolution of this matter.●

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. WEAVER) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 6422, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MODIFYING WITHDRAWAL OF CERTAIN LANDS IN MONO COUNTY, CALIF.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 2475), to modify a withdrawal of certain lands in Mono County, Calif., to facilitate an exchange for certain other lands in Mono County, Calif., and for other purposes; with Senate amendments thereto, concur in the Senate amendment numbered 1 and disagree to the Senate amendments numbered 2 through 7.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 1, line 7, strike out "laws:" and insert "laws, including the mining laws:".

Page 2, line 3, strike out "2" and insert "102".

TITLE II

SEC. 201. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to convey by patent to the city of Miles City, a municipal corporation organized and existed under the laws of the State of Montana, to wit: Lots 9, 17, and 21 (all presently encumbered by the Miles City public water system); lots 28, 31, and 32, all in section 32; lots 16 and 17 in section 33, township 8 north, range 47 east, Principal meridian, Montana, and tract Q and tract S, townships 7 and 8 north, range 47 east, Principal meridian, Montana.

SEC. 202. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to convey to the city of Miles City, Montana, such evidence as is necessary to remove the reversionary provisions for public lands previously patented or conveyed by Act of Congress, to wit: Patent numbered 1021511, tracts A and B; patent numbered 1122295, tracts E and F; patent numbered 1173770, tract G; patent numbered 1173768, tract K; patent numbered 1173769, tract L; patent numbered 1178764, tract M; patent numbered 1219817, tract P, all located in townships 7 and 8 north, range 47 east; and tract D located in township 8 north, range 47 east, Principal meridian, Montana.

SEC. 203. The Secretary of the Interior is further authorized and directed to convey to county of Custer, State of Montana, such evidence as is necessary to remove the reversionary provisions for public lands previously patented, to wit: Patent numbered 1023689, tract C; patent numbered 25-76-0099, tract T, located in townships 7 and 8 north, range 47 east, Principal meridian, Montana, and patent numbered 25-76-0100, lot 20, located in section 33, township 8 north, range 47 east, Principal meridian, Montana.

SEC. 204. The patents and documents issued pursuant to sections 201, 202 and 203 of this title shall contain a reservation to the United States of all gas, oil, coal, and other mineral deposits as may be found in such lands and the right to the use of the lands for extracting and removing same.

SEC. 205. No conveyance shall be made pursuant to this title until payment has been made for the fair market value of the interest being conveyed. Where initial conveyance of these lands was conditioned upon payment of a reasonable consideration on the basis of use, the Secretary is directed to determine the basis for the payment made at the time of the original conveyance. If such payment reflected fair market value without any reduction in that price because of the reverter, no additional payments shall be required.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wonder if the gentleman could withhold this until minority representatives get here?

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Let me say that this bill as passed by the House was totally noncontroversial and, in fact, is still, even with the Senate amendments.

But the Senate tacked on an entirely extraneous bill on which the House Subcommittee on Public Lands has since had hearings and is prepared to move. We are simply trying to disintangle two completely unrelated issues, send back the Shumway bill, the one that was originally passed by the House in its original form, plus a technical amendment the Senate added and we agree with.

Let me elaborate. H.R. 2475 was passed by the House on December 15, 1981, after earlier being reported favorably by the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs. The bill, which was introduced by the gentleman from California (Mr. SHUMWAY), would authorize the Department of the Interior to transfer certain Federal lands in California to a private party in exchange for lands which would become part of the Owens Valley Native Fish Sanctuary, an ecological reserve which protects the sole remaining habitat of the endangered Owens pupfish. The bill is strongly supported by the administration, by the State of California, the University of California, the city of Los Angeles, and a number of scientific and environmental groups. Its passage in the House was by unanimous consent.

When the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the other body considered this House-passed bill, they adopted an amendment dealing with a totally unrelated matter; namely, the transfer of certain Federal lands to a city in Montana. As so amended, the bill has now come back to us from the other body.

Since the Senate action, the Subcommittee on Public Lands and National Parks has held a hearing on the Montana proposals, and I anticipate that our committee will be in a position to act on them separately fairly soon. Meanwhile, however, I believe that it is essential that the House act to disentangle the California and Montana proposals, which are completely unrelated, and which could not have been joined in this way if the rules of the House were applicable in the other body.

Therefore, I am seeking the removal of the Montana land provisions from the California bill, and the return of the bill to the Senate for what I hope will be prompt action on a meritorious proposal.

I have already talked to the gentleman from Montana (Mr. MARLENEE), the author of a bill dealing with the subject matter of the bill attached by the Senate to the original bill. We intend, in the Interior Committee, to deal with that as a separate piece of legislation. He has no objection to that.

Mr. FRENZEL. Further reserving the right to object, does the gentleman assure me that the gentleman from Montana (Mr. MARLENEE) has no objection to this procedure?

Mr. SEIBERLING. I have talked to him this morning.

Mr. FRENZEL. And to the manner in which you are going to handle this?

Mr SEIBERLING. I talked with him this morning and told him what I was going to do and he has no objection.

Mr. FRENZEL. And the gentleman's committee is going to move forward with the other bill?

Mr. SEIBERLING. We are.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

APPOINTMENT OF CITIZEN REGENT OF THE SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on House Administration be discharged from further consideration of the Senate joint resolution (S.J. Res. 194) to provide for the appointment of Nancy Hanks as a citizen regent of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, and ask for its immediate consideration in the House.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KILDEE). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to yield to the gentleman from California (Mr. HAWKINS) to explain the purpose of this resolution.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, Senate Joint Resolution 194 provides for the appointment of Miss Nancy Hanks of the District of Columbia to fill a vacancy on the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

Senate Joint Resolution 194 passed the Senate June 9, 1982, and was referred to the Committee on House Administration. On August 4, 1982, the committee favorably reported the joint resolution by unanimous voice vote. House Report 97-753 has been filed to accompany Senate Joint Resolution 194.

The purpose of the joint resolution is to fill the vacancy created on the Smithsonian's Board of Regents by the expiration of the term of James E. Webb of the District of Columbia on June 21, 1982.

The Smithsonian Board of Regents is made up of 17 members, 9 of whom are so-called citizen regents. The citizen regents are noncongressional persons who have been nominated by the regents and are elected to the Board of Regents by passage of a joint resolution of Congress. Of the nine, two regents are designated to be residents of the District of Columbia. The citizen regents serve statutory 6-year terms and their service is gratuitous, except for necessary traveling and other expenses in attending meetings of the Board.

The Smithsonian Board of Regents has unanimously nominated Miss Nancy Hanks as citizen regent from the District of Columbia. Miss Hanks is a well-known champion of the arts whose outstanding record of public service spans 30 years. Most of us know Miss Hanks as the distinguished chairman of the National Endowment for the Arts from 1969–77. Miss Hanks serves on numerous educational, foundation, and corporate boards where she is active in social responsibility and public interest work.

Miss Hanks' combined experience in Government, in the arts, and in the private and corporate sectors should complement and provide added dimension to the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

I urge favorable consideration of this nomination.

Mr. FRENZEL. Further reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I thank the distinguished chairman for his presentation, with which the minority concurs wholeheartedly. We know of nobody better qualified for that trusteeship than Nancy Hanks.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

S.J. RES. 194

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, of the class other than Members of Congress, which will occur by the expiration of the term of James E. Webb of the District of Columbia on June 21, 1982, is filled by the appointment of Nancy Hanks of the District of Columbia for the statutory term of six years.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the Senate joint resolution just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES DEVISE FUND INTEREST

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on House Administration be discharged from further consideration of the Senate bill (S. 2582) to amend the act to establish a permanent committee for the Oliver Wendell Holmes devise, and for other purposes, and ask for its immediate consideration in the House.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would yield to the gentleman from California to describe the bill.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, S. 2582 is a bill providing for the adjustment of the statutory rate of interest paid on the funds of the Permanent Committee for the Oliver Wendell Holmes devise on deposit with the U.S. Treasury. The bill also clarifies the intent of the original act which established the Holmes devise by authorizing the Holmes devise fund to receive royalties from publications authorized in the original statute.

Mr. Justice Holmes died in 1935 and left a large portion of his estate to the U.S. Government. The Permanent Committee for the Oliver Wendell Holmes devise was established by law in 1955 to devote the income and as necessary the principal of the fund to prepare a comprehensive history of the U.S. Supreme Court, to finance an annual lecture or series of lectures, and to prepare a memorial volume of Justice Holmes' writings. The 1955 law provided for the payment of interest to the Holmes devise fund at a rate of 3.5 percent per annum, which was a preferential rate of interest on long-term securities at that time.

Three and a half percent no longer reflects current market conditions. S. 2582 would amend the law to allow the Holmes devise to earn a rate of interest determined by the prevailing market interest rates on marketable Government securities. The change assures that the Holmes devise receives a rate of return that is approximately equal to the rate paid by the Treasury on its marketable borrowings of comparable maturities. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to invest the Oliver Wendell Holmes devise funds in public debt securities with maturities and amounts to be selected by the permanent committee.

There is presently $88,000 in the Holmes devise, which is administered by the Library of Congress. S. 2582 would provide appropriate investment flexibility and an equitable increase in the rate of return earned on the Holmes devise. The Congressional Budget Office estimates that under this bill, the adjusted interest rate would increase payments to the Holmes devise from the Treasury by about $7,000 to $9,000 annually. The Treasury Department has no objection to this adjustment.

The original act provides for the acceptance of gifts to the Holmes devise, but it does not address the receipt of royalties or other income. The bill would allow the Holmes devise to receive such income. At present, royalties have begun to accrue on the publication of the history of the Supreme Court.

The Senate passed S. 2582 on June 9, 1982. The Committee on House Administration reported S. 2582 by unanimous voice vote on August 4, 1982, and filed House Report No. 97-752 to accompany the bill.

I urge passage of this legislation.

Mr. FRENZEL. Further reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I thank the distinguished chairman for his description, with which I concur.

There is no objection to this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

S. 2582

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a)(1) the first section of the Act entitled "An Act to establish a Permanent Committee for the Oliver Wendell Holmes Devise, and for other purposes", approved August 5, 1955 (69 Stat. 533), is amended in the second sentence thereof by striking out "(3)" and all that follow up to (but not including) the period, and inserting in lieu of the matter stricken the following: "(3) amounts equal to the interest earned on moneys in the fund which are invested in public debt securities pursuant to the succeeding sentence".

(2) The first section of such Act is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "Moneys in the fund shall be invested by the Secretary of the Treasury in public debt securities in accordance with specifications, as to maturity of security and amount to be invested, prescribed by the Permanent Committee for the Oliver Wendell Homes Devise.".

(b) Section 5 of such Act is amended by inserting immediately after the first sentence thereof the following new sentence: "The Committee is further authorized to receive royalties or other income that is generated by the sale of its publications or which otherwise becomes payable to the fund.".

SEC. 2. The amendments made by subsection (a) of the first section of this Act shall be effective in the case of fiscal years beginning after September 30, 1982.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the Senate bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

RESERVE REQUIREMENTS REFORM ACT OF 1982

Mr. FAUNTROY. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 6222) to amend the Federal Reserve Act to exempt from reserve requirements a certain amount of the deposits and accounts of depository institutions.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 6222

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Reserve Requirements Reform Act of 1982".

SEC. 2. (a) Section 19(b) of the Federal Reserve Act (12 U.S.C. 461(b)) is amended by adding at the thereof the following:

"(11) ADDITIONAL EXEMPTIONS.—(A)(i) Not withstanding the reserve requirement ratios established under paragraphs (2) and (5) of this subsection, a reserve ratio of zero per centum shall apply to any combination of reservable liabilities, which do not exceed $2,000,000 (as adjusted under subparagraph (B)), of each depository institution.

"(ii) Each depository institution may designate in accordance with such rules and regulations as the Board shall prescribe, the types and amounts of reservable liabilities to which the reserve ratio of zero per centum shall apply, except that transaction accounts which are designated to be subject to a reserve ratio of zero per centum shall be accounts which would otherwise be subject to a reserve ratio of 3 per centum under paragraph (2).

"(iii) The Board shall minimize the reporting necessary to determine whether depository institutions have total reservable liabilities of less than $2,000,000 (as adjusted under subparagraph (B)). Consistent with the Board's responsibility to monitor and control monetary and credit aggregates, depository institutions which have reserve requirements under this subsection equal to zero per centum shall be subject to less overall reporting requirements than depository institutions which have a reserve requirement under this subsection that exceeds zero per centum.

"(B)(i) Beginning in 1982, not later than December 31 of each year, the Board shall issue a regulation increasing for the next succeeding calendar year the dollar amount specified in subparagraph (A), as previously adjusted under this subparagraph, by an amount obtained by multiplying such dollar amount by 80 per centum of the percentage increase in the total reservable liabilities of all depository institutions.

"(ii) The increase in total reservable liabilities shall be determined by subtracting the amount of total reservable liabilities on June 30 of the preceding calendar year from the amount of total reservable liabilities on June 30 of the calendar year involved. In the case of any such twelve-month period in which there has been a decrease in the total reservable liabilities of all depository institutions, no adjustment shall be made. A decrease in total reservable liabilities shall be determined by subtracting the amount of total reservable liabilities on June 30 of the calendar year involved from the amount of total reservable liabilities on June 30 of the previous calendar year.".

(b) Section 19(b)(4)(A)(iv) of the Federal Reserve Act (12 U.S.C. 461(b)(4)(A)(iv)) is amended by inserting "except as provided in paragraph (11)," after "requirement is imposed,".

(c) Section 19(b)(1) of the Federal Reserve Act (12 U.S.C. 461(b)(1)) is amended by redesignating subparagraph (E) as subparagraph (F) and by inserting after subparagraph (D) the following:

"(E) The term 'reservable liabilities' means transaction accounts, nonpersonal time deposits, and all net balances, loans, assets, and obligations which are, or may be, subject to reserve requirements under paragraph (5).".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from the District of Columbia (Mr. FAUNTROY) will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. STANTON) will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from the District of Columbia (Mr. FAUNTROY).

Mr. FAUNTROY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as a I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in support of H.R. 6222, the Reserve Requirements Reform Act of 1982. This is a bill to amend the Federal Reserve Act to exempt from reserve requirements a certain amount of the deposits and accounts of depository institutions, which was unanimously adopted by the committee.

This is legislation which will provide realistic and meaningful relief to 23,831 or 59 percent of all depository institutions in our Nation. As you know, the Monetary Control Act of 1980 requires all depository institutions to maintain non-interest-bearing reserves with the Federal Reserve. Since the implementation of the act, the Federal Reserve has, by temporary administrative action, exempted some 17,755 depository institutions with less than $2 million in assets—that is 44 percent of all depository institutions—from reserve requirements. This exemption, however, expires on December 31, 1982, and the Federal Reserve has said that it cannot extend it without specific authorizing legislation. This exemption was established during the early stages of the implementation of the act because of the concern by the Fed that subjecting a large number of institutions, many of them small, to these new reporting and reserve requirements could cause significant operational difficulties. As a part of its continued oversight, the committee has concluded, however, that no adverse effects would occur if this temporary exemption were made permanent.

If this legislation is not adopted, institutions now exempted would then have to maintain non-interest-bearing sterile reserves pursuant to the schedule established in the Monetary Control Act, submit reports, and otherwise incur expenses; 17,755 depository institutions, or approximately 44 percent of all such institutions, would be immediately affected by this scheduled expansion of reserve requirements.

H.R. 6222 would replace the administrative exemption provided by the Federal Reserve with legislative authority for a somewhat broader and fairer exemption that exempts from reserve requirements the first $2 million of reservable deposits of all depository institutions. In practice, this would exempt almost all depository institutions with total deposits of approximately $5 million or less from requirements to maintain reserves. The number of institutions which would benefit from this bill by not having to either maintain reserves or submit as many reports is estimated to be 23,831 or 59 percent of all depository institutions.

This approach was selected because it was determined that an exemption formula based on levels of reservable liabilities and applicable to all institutions was the most equitable of the several alternatives. Those alternatives which would have been based on asset size were rejected because of concern that institutions just passing over the threshold of the exempt level would confront a very high marginal reserve requirement while institutions just below the cutoff would be completely exempt from any reserve requirement.

Provisions affecting certain reporting requirements are specifically stated in the bill, thereby making explicit the intention of the Committee that the burden of submitting reports is also removed or substantially diminished along with the removal of the burden of maintaining reserves. Consistent with the Federal Reserve System's responsibility to monitor and control money and credit aggregates institutions which have a zero reserve requirement shall be subject to less overall reporting requirements than other institutions. This provision does not eliminate the ability of the Federal Reserve to require periodic or special reports designed to assure compliance with the Monetary Control Act and to obtain information to monitor and control the monetary and credit aggregates. It should be noted that while most institutions with $2 million or less of reservable liabilities will have total deposits of approximately $5 million, it is possible for a much larger institution to have only $2 million or less in reservable liabilities. The reporting requirements for such an institution would have to be more stringent.

These provisions take effect upon enactment of the legislation. The importance of accurate measurement of required reserves for monetary control dictates, however, that the Federal Reserve System and its Board of Governors be given a reasonable period of transition to effect and implement this exemption. It is assumed that such a period need not exceed 60 days. If more time is required, it is expected that the Board will so advise the committee and give its reasons. In any event, the committee does not believe that a delay in implementation by the Federal Reserve would be the basis of any claims for payment to a depository institution by the Federal Reserve for any lost opportunities, direct, or consequential costs.

The bill is not expected to have any impact on the ability of the Federal Reserve to control monetary policy. The Federal Reserve has, however, indicated in testimony before the Subcommittee on Domestic Monetary Policy that any increase in the exemption level above that provided in the bill would have a detrimental impact on their ability to control the money supply.

Additionally, while there is no direct budgetary impact, the income earned by the Federal Reserve and turned over to the Treasury from bank reserves will be slightly diminished by this legislation. The lost income is expected to be $24 million in 1982 and $66 million in 1988 when the reserve schedule is fully phased in. Some of this, of course, will be offset by taxes collected on the income earned from the reinvestment of these funds.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. STANTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the Reserve Requirements Reform Act of 1982—H.R. 6222. Both Chairman ST GERMAIN of the full Banking Committee and Chairman FAUNTROY of the Domestic Monetary Policy Subcommittee are to be commended for bringing this worthwhile legislation to the floor today. This amendment to the Federal Reserve Act provides at least some partial relief from the burdens which reserve requirements impose on all depository institutions for the sake of implementing monetary policy.

This bill has the salutary effect of reducing both the reserve and the paperwork burden for particularly smaller institutions such as credit unions without having a measurable impact on total reserve levels. More than 50 percent of all depository institutions would be completely relieved of the burden of posting reserves, and yet the Federal Reserve would retain control over 99 percent of total deposits.

Mr. Speaker, Federal Reserve Chairman Paul Volcker wrote to me on April 28, 1982, to state that the Federal Reserve would not extend its exemption for nonmember institutions with deposits of less than $2 million beyond December 31, 1982. The legislation before us today incorporates the Federal Reserve's solution by exempting the first $2 million in reservable liabilities at all depository institutions, large or small.

This bill is supported by the Independent Bankers Association of America, the U.S. League of Savings Associations, the National Association of Mutual Savings Banks, the National Association of Federal Credit Unions, and the Credit Union National Association. It will have the effect of exempting nearly 24,000 institutions from reserve requirements, including 99 percent of the Nation's credit unions.

H.R. 6222 was reported from the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs by a vote of 43 yeas to 0 nays. A companion proposal is contained in S. 2879, the Depository Institutions Amendments of 1982, now pending before the Senate. Mr. Speaker, I encourage all of my colleagues to support this bipartisan effort to grant much needed regulatory relief to our country's depository institutions. I hope we can see it enacted before the 97th Congress adjourns.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from the District of Columbia (Mr. FAUNTROY) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 6222, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. FAUNTROY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks, and to include extraneous material, on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from the District of Columbia?

There was no objection.

SHIPPING ACT OF 1982

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 4374) to improve the international ocean commerce transportation system of the United States, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Shipping Act of 1982".

SEC. 2. DEFINITIONS.

As used in this Act—

(1) "agreement" means an understanding, arrangement, or association (written or oral) and any modification or cancellation thereof, but does not include a maritime labor agreement;

(2) "antitrust laws" means the Act of July 2, 1890 (ch. 647, 26 Stat. 209), as amended; the Act of October 15, 1914 (ch. 323, 38 Stat. 730), as amended; the Federal Trade Commission Act (38 Stat. 717), as amended; sections 73 and 74 of the Act of August 27, 1894 (28 Stat. 570), as amended; the Act of June 19, 1936 (ch. 592, 49 Stat. 1526), as amended; the Antitrust Civil Process Act (76 Stat. 548), as amended; and amendments and Acts supplementary thereto;

(3) "assessment agreement" means an agreement or any provision of an agreement, whether part of a collective-bargaining agreement or negotiated separately, that provides for the funding of collectively bargained fringe benefit obligations on other than a uniform man-hour basis, regardless of the cargo handled or type of vessel or equipment utilized;

(4) "bulk cargo" means cargo that is loaded and carried in bulk without mark or count;

(5) "Commission", except in section 18, means the Federal Maritime Commission;

(6) "common carrier" includes both ocean common carriers and nonvessel-operating common carriers;

(7) "conference" means an association of ocean common carriers permitted, pursuant to an approved or effective agreement, to engage in concerted activity and to utilize a common tariff, but does not include a joint service, consortium, pooling, or transshipment arrangement;

(8) "controlled carrier" means an ocean common carrier that is, or whose operating assets are, directly or indirectly, owned or controlled by the government under whose registry the vessels of the carrier operate; ownership or control by a government shall be deemed to exist with respect to any carrier if—

(A) a majority portion of the interest in the carrier is owned or controlled in any manner by that government, by any agency thereof, or by any public or private person controlled by that government; or

(B) that government has the right to appoint or disapprove the appointment of a majority of the directors, the chief operating officer, or the chief executive officer of the carrier;

(9) "deferred rebate" means a return by a common carrier of any portion of the freight money to a shipper as a consideration for that shipper giving all, or any portion, of his shipments to that or any other common carrier, or for any other purpose, the payment of which is deferred beyond the completion of the service for which it is paid, and is made only if, during both the period for which computed and the period of deferment, the shipper has complied with the terms of the rebate agreement or arrangement;

(10) "fighting ship" means a vessel used in a particular trade by an ocean common carrier or group of such carriers for the purpose of excluding, preventing, or reducing competition by driving another ocean common carrier out of that trade;

(11) "forest products" means forest products in an unfinished or semifinished state that are of a size too large for the largest commercially available container or that are offered for carriage by the shipper as noncontainerized cargo in lot sizes having a volume greater than two thousand five hundred and sixty cubic feet or that are transported in shipload lot sizes;

(12) "inland division" means the amount paid by an ocean common carrier to any inland carriers with respect to performance of the inland portion of through transportation offered to the public by the ocean common carrier;

(13) "inland portion" means the charge to the public by an ocean common carrier with respect to the non-ocean portion of through transportation;

(14) "joint venture" means a consortium, joint service agreement or other agreement that will result in the establishment of a new and separate line or service to be operated for the benefit of the agreeing ocean common carriers and eliminates all, or virtually all, competition among the parties to the agreement in the affected trade.

(15) "loyalty contract" means a contract with an ocean common carrier or conference by which a contract shipper or consignee obtains lower rates by committing all or a fixed portion of its cargo to that carrier or conference;

(16) "marine terminal operator" means a person engaged in the United States in the business of furnishing wharfage, dock, warehouse, or other terminal facilities in connection with a common carrier;

(17) "maritime labor agreement" means a collective-bargaining agreement between an employer subject to this Act, or group of such employers, and a labor organization representing employees in the maritime or stevedoring industry, or an agreement preparatory to such a collective-bargaining agreement among members of a multiemployer bargaining group, or an agreement specifically implementing provisions of such a collective-bargaining agreement or providing for the formation, financing, or administration of a multiemployer bargaining group; but the term does not include an assessment agreement;

(18) "net profit or loss pool" means a pooling or apportionment of net profits or net losses, or any similar arrangement that results in the participants sharing all or virtually all of their costs of operation, but shall not be deemed to include a pooling or apportionment of revenues, even if such a pooling provides for certain adjustments to revenue or expense or results in the sharing of certain costs, provided that each participant continues to bear a substantial portion of his own costs.

(19) "nonvessel-operating common carrier" means a common carrier engaged in the transportation by water of cargo between the United States and a foreign country, whether in the import or export trade, that does not operate the vessels by which the ocean transportation service is provided, and is a shipper in his relationship with an ocean common carrier;

(20) "ocean common carrier" means a vessel operating common carrier engaged in the transportation by water of passengers or cargo between the United States and a foreign country, whether in the import or export trade; but does not include one engaged in ocean transportation by ferry boat or ocean tramp;

(21) "person" includes individuals, corporations, partnerships, and associations existing under or authorized by the laws of the United States or of a foreign country;

(22) "rates" means rates, services, classification rules, or regulations;

(23) "service contract" means a contract between a shipper and an ocean common carrier or conference in which the shipper makes a commitment to provide a certain minimum quantity of cargo over a fixed time period, and the ocean common carrier or conference commits to a certain rate or rate schedule as well as a defined service level—such as, assured space, transit time, port rotation, or similar service features. The contract may also specify provisions in the event of nonperformance on the part of either party;

(24) "shipment" means all of the cargo carried under the terms of a single bill of lading;

(25) "shipper" means an owner or person for whose account the ocean transportation of cargo is provided or the person to whom delivery is to be made;

(26) "shippers' council" means an association of shippers or their agents, other than ocean freight forwarders and non-vessel-operating common carriers;

(27) "through rate" means the single amount charged by a common carrier in connection with through transportation;

(28) "through transportation" means continuous transportation between origin and destination for which a through rate is assessed and which is offered or performed by one or more carriers, at least one of which is a common carrier, between a United States point or port and a foreign point or port; and

(29) "United States" includes the several States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Commonwealth of the Northern Marianas, and all other United States territories and possessions.

SEC. 3. AGREEMENTS WITHIN SCOPE OF ACT.

(a) This Act applies to agreements by or among ocean common carriers to—

(1) discuss, fix, and regulate rates, including through rates, cargo space accommodations, and other conditions of services;

(2) pool or apportion traffic, revenues, net losses, or net profits;

(3) allot ports or restrict or otherwise regulate the number and character of sailings between ports;

(4) limit or regulate the volume or character of cargo or passenger traffic to be carried;

(5) engage in exclusive, preferential, or cooperative working arrangements among themselves or with one or more marine terminal operators or non-vessel-operating common carrier; and

(6) enter into other agreements to control, regulate, or prevent competition among themselves.

(b) This Act does not apply to an acquisition by any person, directly or indirectly, of any voting security or assets of any other person.

SEC. 4. AGREEMENTS.

(a) FILING REQUIREMENTS.—A true copy of every agreement entered into with respect to an activity described in section 3 shall be filed with the Commission, except agreements related to transportation to be performed within or between foreign countries. In the case of an oral agreement, complete memorandum specifying in detail the substance of the agreement shall be filed. The Commission may by regulation prescribe the form and manner in which agreements shall be filed.

(b) COMMISSION ACTION.—The Commission shall within thirty days after filing reject any agreement that on its face fails to comply with this section. Unless an agreement has been rejected, the Commission shall, within thirty days of the filing of the agreement, transmit a notice of its filing to the Federal Register for publication.

(c) CONFERENCE AGREEMENTS.—Each conference agreement must—

(1) provide for the admission to conference membership of any carrier operating vessels willing to serve the particular trade or route;

(2) permit any member to withdraw from conference membership upon reasonable notice without penalty; and

(3) provide for retaining the services of an independent neutral body to police fully the obligations of the conference and its members.

(d) CONFERENCES UTILIZING LOYALTY CONTRACTS.—

(1) Each conference agreement must provide that, if the conference has in effect a loyalty contract with one or more shippers, each member of the conference may take independent action on any rate or service item contained within a tariff required to be filed under section 8 whenever—

(A) a member requests the conference to amend a rate or service item and announces its intention to take independent action if the conference does not agree to the amendment;

(B) the conference fails to make the proposed amendment within thirty days after the first consideration of the amendment in a conference meeting; and

(C) the member seeking the amendment requests the conference to include in the conference tariff a separate entry for its account as proposed in the amendment.

(2) The agreement must further provide that, if the requirements of paragraph (1) are met, the conference shall include the proposed amendment in its tariff for use by any member of the conference and that the amendment shall become effective on publication and filing, but no later than forty-five days after the initial request.

(3) This subsection does not change the effectiveness of section 8(d).

(e) INTERCONFERENCE AGREEMENTS.—Each agreement between carriers not members of the same conference must provide the right of independent action for each carrier. Each agreement between conferences serving different trades that would otherwise be naturally competitive must provide the right of independent action for each conference.

(f) ASSESSMENT AGREEMENTS.—

(1) Assessment agreements shall be filed with the Commission and shall be deemed approved upon filing. The Commission shall thereafter, upon complaint filed within two years of the date of filing of the agreement, disapprove, cancel, or modify any such agreement, or charge or assessment pursuant thereto, that it finds, after notice and hearing, to be unjustly discriminatory or unfair as between carriers, shippers, or ports. The Commission shall issue its final decision in any such proceeding within one year of the date of filing of the complaint. To the extent that an assessment or charge is found in the proceeding to be unjustly discriminatory or unfair as between carriers, shippers, or ports, the Commission shall remedy the unjust discrimination or unfairness for the period of time between the filing of the complaint and the final decision by means of assessment adjustments. These adjustments shall be implemented by prospective credits or debits to future assessments or charges, except in the case of a complainant who has ceased activities subject to the assessment or charge, in which case reparation may be awarded. To the extent that any provision of this paragraph conflicts with the language of any other section of this Act, the Shipping Act, 1916, or the Intercoastal Shipping Act, 1933, the provisions of this paragraph shall control.

(2) This Act, the Shipping Act, 1916, and the Intercoastal Shipping Act, 1933, do not apply to maritime labor agreements. This section does not exempt from the provisions of this Act, the Shipping Act, 1916, or the Intercoastal Shipping Act, 1933, any rates, charges, regulations, or practices of a common carrier that are required to be set forth in a tariff, whether or not such rates, charges, regulations, or practices arise out of, or are otherwise related to, a maritime labor agreement.

SEC. 5. ACTION ON AGREEMENTS.

(a) EFFECTIVE DATE.—Except with respect to assessment agreements, each agreement entered into with respect to an activity described in section 3 shall become effective forty-five days after filing unless the Commission rejects the agreement under section 4(b), or suspends the effective date of the agreement under subsection (i).

(b) STANDARD.—The Commission shall by order disapprove or modify any agreement that it finds will operate in violation of this Act; but in the case of any agreement filed under section 4(a) that is a renewal of an agreement previously in effect under this section or section 20(d), there shall be a presumption that the conduct contemplated under the agreement so filed will not be in violation of section 10(a).

(c) INVESTIGATION.—The Commission may, at any time after an agreement has been filed, institute an investigation and conduct a hearing under section 11 to determine if the agreement complies with this Act and, if not, whether the agreement should be disapproved, canceled, or modified. Each agreement that is in effect at the time it is the subject of an investigation and hearing shall remain in effect during the investigation and hearing.

(d) FINAL DECISION TIME.—The Commission shall issue a final decision in each hearing under subsection (c) within one hundred and eighty days of ordering the hearing.

(e) DELAY.—If, within the time period specified in subsection (d), the Commission determines that it is unable to issue a final order because of undue delays, the Commission may make a decision in the proceeding adverse to the delaying party on the basis of the delay, or in the case of undue delay caused by a proponent of an agreement, alternatively, toll the period specified in subsection (d) for the period of delay.

(f) BURDEN OF PROOF.—The burden of proof in any proceeding under this section or under section 4(f)(1) is on the party opposing the agreement, including the Commission.

(g) DURATION OF EFFECTIVENESS.—Each agreement, once in effect, shall remain in effect until withdrawn or until disapproved, canceled, or modified by the Commission. The Commission may not limit the effectiveness of an agreement to a fixed term.

(h) COMPLIANCE WITH SUBPENA OR DISCOVERY.—In any proceeding under this section, the Commission may disapprove an agreement for failure of a proponent of the agreement to comply with a subpena or discovery order lawfully issued by the Commission.

(i) SUSPENSION.—At any time before the expiration of the forty-five-day period referred to in subsection (a), the Commission, upon complaint of a common carrier, shipper, or marine terminal operator, or upon its own motion, may upon notice suspend the effective date of an agreement pending the outcome of a proceeding under section 11, if the Commission, after preliminary investigation, believes that there are unresolved issues of fact, which, if determined adversely to the party or parties filing the agreement, will result in a finding that the agreement is in violation of this Act, and either

(1) there is a reasonable probability that upon further investigation the Commission would find that the agreement will operate in violation of this Act; or

(2) a shipper, common carrier, or marine terminal operator is likely to be substantially injured if the agreement is allowed to go into effect before a final decision on the merits.

The effective date of an agreement may not be suspended under this subsection for a period exceeding ninety days unless the Commission, before the expiration of that period, believes that an extension of such period by not more than ninety additional days is required to resolve the outstanding issues.

SEC. 6. LOYALTY CONTRACTS.

(a) CONTRACT REQUIREMENTS.—Ocean common carriers and conferences engaged in foreign commerce may utilize loyalty contracts, if—

(1) the contract is available to all shippers on equal terms and conditions;

(2) the contract shipper is permitted prompt release from the contract with respect to any shipment or shipments for which the contracting carrier or conference cannot provide space as requested on reasonable notice by the shipper;

(3) the contract covers only those goods of the contract shipper as to the shipment of which it has the legal right at the time of shipment to select the carrier;

(4) the contract shipper, carrier, and conference are permitted on ninety days' notice to terminate, without penalty, the contract rate system in whole or with respect to any commodity;

(5) the contract excludes bulk cargo (except liquid bulk cargoes, other than chemicals, in less than full shipload lots) and forest products;

(6) the contract provides that whenever a rate for the carriage of goods under the contract becomes effective insofar as it is under the control of the carrier or conference, the rate—

(A) may not be increased on less than ninety days' notice, except upon the agreement of the applicable shipper; and

(B) may be increased on not less than thirty days' notice if the increase is to a level no higher than that from which the particular rate was reduced within one hundred eighty days immediately preceding the filing of the increase; and

(7) the contract shipper is not denied the right to utilize competing services that involve loading to or from a vessel at a port or ports located beyond a carrier's or conference's geographic scope as defined in the contract; and

(8) the contract provides for a spread or series of spreads between tariff rates and rates charged contract shippers that shall not exceed an aggregate of 15 percent.

(b) INTERMODAL LOYALTY CONTRACT.—Each conference that offers an intermodal loyalty contract must offer an alternative all-ocean carrier loyalty contract. A shipper may not be penalized nor shall an action for breach of contract lie if a shipper elects one of the alternative loyalty agreements for the other for any shipment moving through the exit or entry ports that are the subject of the contract.

(c) TREATMENT OF CONTRACT NOT IN CONFORMITY.—The utilization of a loyalty contract that does not conform with each of the requirements of this section is a violation of this Act.

SEC. 7. EXEMPTION FROM ANTITRUST LAWS.

(a) The antitrust laws do not apply to—

(1) any agreement that has been filed under section 4 and has become effective under section 4(f) or section 5, or is exempt under section 16 from any requirement of this Act;

(2) any activity or agreement within the scope of this Act, whether permitted under or prohibited by this Act undertaken or entered into in the reasonable belief that (A) it is pursuant to an agreement on file with the Commission and in effect when the activity took place, or (B) it is exempt under section 16 from any filing requirement of this Act;

(3) any loyalty contract or any activity pursuant to a loyalty contract;

(4) any agreement or activity that relates to transportation services within or between foreign countries, whether or not via the United States;

(5) any agreement or activity with a shipper's council organized under the laws of a foreign country and operating exclusively outside the United States, including an agreement or activity that affects cargo transported in a United States import or export trade;

(6) any agreement or activity to provide or furnish wharfage, dock, warehouse, or other terminal facilities outside the United States; and

(7) subject to section 19(e)(2), any agreement, modification, or cancellation approved by the Commission before the effective date of this Act under section 15 of the Shipping Act, 1916, or permitted under section 14(b) thereof, and any duly filed and published tariff rate, fare, or charge, or classification, rule, or regulation explanatory thereof implementing that agreement, modification, or cancellation.

(b) This Act does not extend antitrust immunity to any agreement with or among air carriers, rail carriers, motor carriers, or common carriers by water not subject to this Act with respect to transportation within the United States; or to any discussion or agreement among common carriers that are subject to this Act fixing the inland divisions as opposed to the inland portions, of through rates within the United States.

(c)(1) Any determination by any agency or court that results in the denial or removal of the immunity to the antitrust laws set forth in subsection (a) shall not remove or alter the antitrust immunity for the period before the determination.

(2) No person may recover damages under section 4 of the Clayton Act, or obtain injunctive relief under section 16 of the Clayton Act, for conduct which is prohibited by this Act.

(d) Any shippers' council organized under the laws of the United States may apply to the Attorney General for certification that the conduct of the council in bargaining with ocean common carriers on the terms and conditions of service is not likely to result in a violation of the antitrust laws. The Attorney General shall grant the application for certification under the same conditions and limitations applicable to an application for antitrust certification of solely export conduct; except that the activities of the shippers' council in bargaining with ocean common carriers on the terms and conditions of service regarding cargo in import trade shall be eligible for the protection of such certification on the same terms and conditions that are made available for similar activities for service on cargo in export trade.

SEC. 8. TARIFFS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—

(1) Except with regard to bulk cargo and forest products, each common carrier and conference shall file with the Commission, and keep open to public inspection, tariffs showing all its rates, charges, classifications, rules, and practices between all points or ports or its own route and on any through transportation route that has been established. However, common carriers shall not be required to state separately or otherwise reveal in tariff filings the inland divisions of a through rate. Tariffs shall plainly indicate the places between which cargo will be carried; list each classification of cargo in use; set forth the level of freight forwarder compensation, if any, by a carrier or conference; state separately each terminal or other charge, privilege, or facility under the control of the carrier or conference and any rules or regulations that in any way change, affect, or determine any part or the aggregate of the rates or charges; and include sample copies of any loyalty contract, bill of lading, contract of affreightment, or other document evidencing the transportation agreement.

(2) Copies of tariffs shall be made available to any person, and a reasonable charge may be assessed for copies provided by the Commission.

(b) TIME-VOLUME RATES.—Rates quoted in tariffs may vary with the volume of cargo offered over a specified period of time.

(c) SERVICE CONTRACTS.—An ocean common carrier or conference may enter into a service contract with a shipper to provide specified services under specified rates and conditions, subject to the requirements of this Act. Each contract entered into under this subsection shall be filed confidentially with the Commission, and a concise statement of its essential terms shall be filed with the Commission and made available to the general public in tariff format, and such essential terms shall be available to all shippers similarly situated. The essential terms shall include—

(1) the origin and destination port ranges in the case of port-to-port movements, and the origin and destination geographic areas in the case of through intermodal movements;

(2) the commodity or commodities involved;

(3) the minimum volume;

(4) the line-haul rate;

(5) the duration;

(6) service commitments; and

(7) the liquidated damages for non-performance, if any.

The exclusive remedy for a breach of contract entered into under this subsection shall be an action in an appropriate court, unless the parties otherwise agree.

(d) RATES.—No new or initial rates or change in existing rates, which result in an increased cost to the shipper may become effective earlier than thirty days after filing with the Commission. The Commission, for good cause, may allow such new or initial rates and such changes to become effective in less than thirty days. Any change in the rates that results in a decreased cost to the shipper may become effective upon publication and filing with the Commission.

(e) REFUNDS.—The Commission may, upon application of a carrier or shipper, permit a common carrier or conference to refund a portion of freight charges collected from a shipper or to waive the collection of a portion of the charges from a shipper if—

(1) there is an error in a tariff of a clerical or administrative nature or an error due to inadvertence in failing to file a new tariff and the refund will not result in discrimination among shippers, ports, or carriers;

(2) the common carrier or conference has, prior to the filing of an application for authority to make a refund, filed a new tariff with the Commission that sets forth the rate on which the refund or waiver would be based;

(3) the common carrier or conference agrees that if permission is granted by the Commission, an appropriate notice will be published in the tariff, or such other steps taken as the Commission may require, which gives notice of the rate on which the refund or waiver would be based, and additional refunds or waivers as appropriate shall be made with respect to other shipments in the manner prescribed by the Commission in its order approving the application; and

(4) the application for refund or waiver is filed with the Commission within one hundred and eighty days from the date of shipment.

(f) FORM.—The Commission may by regulation prescribe the form and manner in which the tariffs required by this section shall be published and filed. The Commission may reject any tariff filed that is not in conformity with this section and its regulations. Upon rejection by the Commission, the tariff is void, and its use is unlawful.

SEC. 9. CONTROLLED CARRIERS.

(a) CONTROLLED CARRIER RATES.—No controlled carrier subject to this section shall maintain rates or charges in its tariffs filed with the Commission that are below a level that is just and reasonable, nor shall any such carrier establish or maintain unjust or unreasonable classifications, rules, or regulations in such tariffs. An unjust or unreasonable classification, rule, or regulation means one which results or is likely to result in the carriage or handling of cargo at rates or charges which are below a level which is just and reasonable. The Commission may, at any time after notice and hearing, disapprove any rates, charges, classifications, rules, or regulations which the controlled carrier has failed to demonstrate to be just and reasonable. In any proceeding under this subsection, the burden of proof shall be on the controlled carrier to demonstrate that its rates, charges, classifications, rules, or regulations are just and reasonable. Rates, charges, classifications, rules, or regulations filed by a controlled carrier that have been rejected, suspended, or disapproved by the Commission are void, and their use is unlawful.

(b) RATE STANDARDS.—For the purpose of this section, in determining whether rates, charges, classifications, rules, or regulations by a controlled carrier are just and reasonable, the Commission may take into account appropriate factors including, but not limited to, whether—

(1) the rates or charges which have been filed or which would result from the pertinent classifications, rules, or regulations are below a level which is fully compensatory to the controlled carrier based upon that carrier's actual costs or upon its constructive costs, which are hereby defined as the costs of another carrier, other than a controlled carrier, operating similar vessels and equipment in the same or a similar trade;

(2) the rates, charges, classifications, rules, or regulations are the same as or similar to those filed or assessed by other carriers in the same trade;

(3) the rates, charges, classifications, rules, or regulations are required to assure movement of particular cargo in the trade; or

(4) the rates, charges, classifications, rules, or regulations are required to maintain acceptable continuity, level, or quality of common carrier service to or from affected ports.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE OF RATES.—Notwithstanding the provisions of section 9(b), the rates, charges, classifications, rules, or regulations of controlled carriers shall not, without special permission of the Commission, become effective sooner than the thirtieth day after the date of filing with the Commission. Each controlled carrier shall, upon the request of the Commission, file, within twenty days of request (with respect to its existing or proposed rates, charges, classifications, rules, or regulations), a statement of justification that sufficiently details the controlled carrier's need and purpose for such rates, charges, classifications, rules, or regulations upon which the Commission may reasonably base its determination of the lawfulness thereof.

(d) DISAPPROVAL OF RATES.—Whenever the Commission is of the opinion that the rates, charges, classifications, rules, or regulations filed by a controlled carrier may be unjust and unreasonable, the Commission may issue an order to the controlled carrier to show cause why such rates, charges, classifications, rules, or regulations should not be disapproved. Pending a determination as to their lawfulness in such a proceeding, the Commission may suspend such rates, charges, classifications, rules, or regulations at any time before their effective date. In the case of rates, charges, classifications, rules, or regulations that have already become effective, the Commission may, upon the issuance of an order to show cause, suspend such rates, charges, classifications, rules, or regulations on not less than sixty days' notice to the controlled carrier. No period of suspension under this subsection may be greater than one hundred and eighty days. Whenever the Commission has suspended any rates, charges, classifications, rules, or regulations under this subsection, the affected carrier may file new rates, charges, classifications, rules, or regulations to take effect immediately during the suspension period in lieu of the suspended rates, charges, classifications, rules, or regulations—except that the Commission may reject such new rates, charges, classifications, rules, or regulations if it is of the opinion that they are unjust and unreasonable.

(e) PRESIDENTIAL REVIEW.—Concurrently with the publication thereof, the Commission shall transmit to the President any order of suspension or final order of disapproval of rates, charges, classifications, rules, or regulations of a controlled carrier subject to this section. Within ten days after the receipt or the effective date of such Commission order, the President may request the Commission in writing to stay the effect of the Commission's order if he finds that such stay is required for reasons of national defense or foreign policy which reasons shall be specified in the report. Notwithstanding any other provisions of law, the Commission shall immediately grant such request by the issuance of an order in which the President's request shall be described. During any such stay, the President shall, whenever practicable, attempt to resolve the matter in controversy by negotiation with representatives of the applicable foreign governments.

(f) EXCEPTIONS.—The provisions of this section shall not apply to—

(1) any controlled carrier of a state whose vessels are entitled by a treaty of the United States to receive national or most-favored-nation treatment;

(2) any controlled carrier of a state which, on the effective date of this section, has subscribed to the statement of shipping policy contained in note 1 to annex A of the Code of Liberalization of Current Invisible Operations, adopted by the Council of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development;

(3) rates, charges, classifications, rules, or regulations of any controlled carrier in any particular trade which are covered by an agreement effective under section 4, other than an agreement in which all of the members are controlled carriers not otherwise excluded from the provisions of this subsection;

(4) rates, charges, classifications, rules, or regulations governing the transportation of cargo by a controlled carrier between the country by whose government it is owned or controlled, as defined herein and the United States;

(5) a trade served exclusively by controlled carriers; or

(6) any controlled carrier registered in a state which, on the effective date of this Act, is among those designated a beneficiary developing country for purposes of the generalized system of preferences, provided for in title V of the Trade Act of 1974 (88 Stat. 2066; 19 U.S.C 2461 et seq.), and set forth in general headnote 3(c) of the Tariff Schedules of the United States, and which has vessels registered within its jurisdiction that are privately owned and not operated by a controlled carrier.

SEC. 10. PROHIBITED ACTS.

(a)(1) Subject to paragraphs (2) and (3), no common carrier, directly or indirectly, may form a joint venture with other common carriers operating in the same trade if such conduct substantially reduces competition in such trade considered as a whole.

(2) Paragraph (1) shall not apply if such conduct—

(A) results in gains in efficiency or services that outweigh any diminution in competition;

(B) is required by an express provision of a government-to-government agreement; or

(C) is in furtherance of foreign policy interests of the United States which outweigh the interests of the United States in preventing the substantial reduction in competition.

(D) permits U.S.-flag carriers to carry cargo of the importing or exporting foreign state which would otherwise be unavailable to such carrier, or available only on unequal terms by reason of the cargo reservation laws or trading practices (governmental or otherwise) of such state, provided that such agreement is not unjustly discriminatory among U.S.-flag carriers.

(3) With respect to conduct by a common carrier that was undertaken in the reasonable belief that the conduct was consistent with an agreement that was in effect under section 5 or 20(d) at the time the conduct occurred—

(A) there shall be a presumption that such conduct is not in violation of this subsection; and

(B) the common carrier, if the Commission determines that such conduct is in violation of this subsection, shall not be liable for reparations under section 11(f), or for penalties under section 13(a) to the extent that such conduct was so undertaken.

(b) No common carrier, including a joint service or consortium operating as a single entity, either alone or in conjunction with any other person, directly or indirectly, may—

(1) charge, demand, collect, or receive greater, less, or different compensation for the transportation of property or for any service in connection therewith than the rates and charges which are specified in its tariffs;

(2) rebate, refund, or remit in any manner, or by any device, any portion of its rates except in accordance with its tariffs;

(3) extend or deny to any person any privilege, concession, equipment, or facility except in accordance with its tariffs;

(4) allow any person to obtain transportation for property at less than the rates or charges established by the carrier in its tariff by means of false billing, false classification, false weighing, false measurement, or by any other unjust or unfair device or means;

(5) retaliate against any shipper by refusing, or threatening to refuse, cargo space accommodations, or resort to other unfair or unjustly discriminatory methods because the shipper has patronized another carrier, or has filed a complaint, or for any other reason;

(6) engage in any unfair or unjustly discriminatory practice in the matter of—

(A) rates;

(B) cargo classifications;

(C) cargo space accommodations or other facilities, due regard being had for the proper loading of the vessel and the available tonnage;

(D) the loading and landing of freight in proper condition; or

(E) the adjustment and settlement of claims;

(7) employ any fighting ship;

(8) offer or pay any deferred rebates;

(9) demand, charge, or collect any rate or charge which is unjustly discriminatory between shippers or ports;

(10) make or give any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to any particular person, locality, or description of traffic in any respect whatsoever, or subject any particular person, locality, or description of traffic to an unreasonable refusal to deal or any undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage in any respect whatsoever; or

(11) knowingly disclose, offer, solicit, or receive any information concerning the nature, kind, quantity, destination, consignee, or routing of any property tendered or delivered to a common carrier without the consent of the shipper or consignee if that information—

(A) may be used to the detriment or prejudice of the shipper or consignee;

(B) may improperly disclose its business transactions to a competitor; or

(C) may be used to the detriment or prejudice of any common carrier.

Nothing in paragraph (11) shall be construed to prevent providing such information, in response to any legal process, to the United States, or to any independent neutral body operating within the scope of its authority to fulfill the policing obligations of the parties to an agreement effective under this Act. Nor shall it be prohibited for any ocean common carrier which is a party to a conference agreement approved pursuant to this Act, or any receiver, trustee, lessee, agent, or employee of such carrier or person, or any other person authorized by such carrier to receive information, to give information to the conference or any person, firm, corporation, or agency designated by the conference, or to prevent the conference or its designee from soliciting or receiving information for the purpose of determining whether a shipper or consignee has breached an agreement with the conference or its member lines or for the purpose of determining whether a member of the conference has breached the conference agreement, or for the purpose of compiling statistics of cargo movement, but the use of such information for any other purpose prohibited by this Act or any other Act shall be prohibited.

(c) No person may—

(1) knowingly and willfully, directly or indirectly, by means of false billing, false classification, false weighing, false report of weight, false measurement, or by any other unjust or unfair device or means obtain or attempt to obtain ocean transportation for property at less than the rates or charges which would otherwise be applicable;

(2) operate under an agreement described in section 3 that has not become effective under section 5, or that has been rejected, disapproved, or canceled; or

(3) operate under an agreement described in section 3 except in accordance with any modifications made by the Commission to the agreement.

(d) No conference or group of two or more common carriers, other than a joint venture operating as a single entity, may—

(1) boycott or take any other concerted action resulting in a refusal to deal;

(2) utilize a device or means that sets conditions or otherwise restricts the ability of a shipper to select an ocean common carrier in a competing trade, an ocean tramp, or a bulk carrier;

(3) restrict the employment of intermodalism or other technological innovations by member carriers;

(4) permit any predatory practice designed to eliminate the participation, or deny the entry, in a particular trade of an ocean common carrier not a member of the conference, a group of common carriers, an ocean tramp, or a bulk carrier;

(5) negotiate with any nonocean carrier or group of nonocean carriers (for example, truck, rail, or air operators) on any matter relating to rates or services provided to ocean common carriers within the United States by such nonocean carriers: Provided, That this prohibition shall not prohibit the setting and publishing of a joint through rate by a conference, joint service, or an association of ocean common carriers authorized to file tariffs;

(6) concertedly deny in the export foreign commerce of the United States compensation to an ocean freight forwarder or limit the amount thereof to less than one and one-fourth per centum of the freight charges;

(7) except as otherwise required by the law of the United States or the importing or exporting country, or as agreed to by a shipper in a service contract, allocate shippers among specific carriers that are parties to that agreement or prohibit any carrier that is a party to the agreement from soliciting cargo from any particular shipper; or

(8) pool or apportion net losses or net profits with other common carriers operating in the same trade.

SEC. 11. COMPLAINTS, INVESTIGATIONS, REPORTS, AND REPARATIONS.

(a) FILING OF COMPLAINTS.—Any person may file with the Commission a sworn complaint alleging a violation of this Act and may seek reparation for any injury caused to the complainant by that violation.

(b) SATISFACTION OR INVESTIGATION OF COMPLAINTS.—The Commission shall furnish a copy of a complaint filed pursuant to section (a) of this section to the person named therein who shall, within a reasonable time specified by the Commission, satisfy the complaint or answer it in writing. If the complaint is not satisfied, the Commission shall investigate it in such manner and by such means and make such order as it deems proper.

(c) COMMISSION INVESTIGATIONS.—The Commission upon its own motion may, in like manner and with the same powers, investigate any conduct which it believes may be in violation of this Act.

(d) SPECIAL INVESTIGATIONS OF CONDUCT PURSUANT TO POOLING AGREEMENTS.—(1) The Commission, upon its own motion or at the request of the Attorney General or the Federal Trade Commission, may initiate an investigation under this section of conduct pursuant to an agreement to pool or apportion traffic or revenues, or charter space with other common carriers operating in the same trade if it believes that conduct pursuant to the agreement substantially reduces competition in such trade.

(2) The Commission shall reject, modify, or terminate any agreement subject to investigation pursuant to paragraph (1) if it determines that conduct pursuant to the agreement substantially reduces competition in the trade concerned unless the agreement—

(A) results in gains in efficiency or services that outweigh any diminution in competition;

(B) is required by an express provision of a government-to-government agreement; or

(C) is in furtherance of foreign policy interests of the United States which outweigh the interests of the United States in preventing the substantial reduction in competition.

(D) permits U.S.-flag carriers to carry cargo of the importing or exporting foreign state which would otherwise be unavailable to such carrier, or available only on unequal terms by reason of the cargo reservation laws or trading practices (governmental or otherwise) of such state, provided that such agreement is not unjustly discriminatory among U.S.-flag carriers.

(3) The sole remedy under the Act for conduct found to violate paragraph (2) shall be rejection, termination, or modification of the agreement.

(e) REPORTS.—The Commission shall make a written report of every investigation made under this Act in which a hearing was held, which states its conclusions, decisions, findings of fact, and order. A copy of this report shall be furnished to all parties. The Commission shall publish each report for public information, and such authorized publication shall be competent evidence of those reports in all courts of the United States.

(f) REPARATIONS.—For any complaint filed within four years after the cause of action accrued, the Commission shall, upon petition of the complainant and after notice and hearing, direct payment of reparations to the complainant for actual injury (which, for purposes of this subsection, also includes the loss of interest from the date of injury) caused by a violation of this Act. Upon a showing that the injury was caused by activity that is prohibited by section 10(b) (5) or (7) or section 10(d) (1) or (4), or that violates section 10(c) (2) or (3), the Commission may direct the payment of additional amounts; but the total recovery of a complainant may not exceed twice the amount of the actual injury. In the case of injury caused by an activity that is prohibited by section 10(b)(6) (A) or (B), the amount of the injury shall be the difference between the rate paid by the injured shipper and the most favorable rate paid by another shipper.

(g) INJUNCTION.—

(1) In connection with any investigation conducted under this section, the Commission may bring suit in a district court of the United States to enjoin conduct in violation of this Act. Upon a showing that the Commission has reasonable cause to believe that a violation of this Act has or is about to take place, and that the enjoining of that conduct is in the interest of the public, and after notice to the defendant, the court may grant a temporary restraining order or preliminary injunction for a period not to exceed ten days after the Commission has issued an order disposing of the issues under investigation. Any such suit shall be brought in the district in which the defendant person, partnership, or corporation resides or transacts business.

(2) After filing a complaint with the Commission under subsection (a), the complainant may file suit in a district court of the United States to enjoin conduct in violation of this Act. Upon a showing that standards for granting injunctive relief by courts of equity are met and after notice to the defendant, the court may grant a temporary restraining order or preliminary injunction for a period not to exceed ten days after the Commission has issued an order disposing of the complaint. Any such suit shall be brought in the district in which the defendant person, partnership, or corporation has been sued by the Commission under paragraph (1); or, if no suit has been filed, in any district in which the defendant person, partnership, or corporation resides or transacts business.

SEC. 12. SUBPENAS AND DISCOVERY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—In investigations and adjudicatory proceedings under this Act—

(1) depositions, written interrogatories, and discovery procedures may be utilized by any party under rules and regulations issued by the Commission which rules and regulations, to the extent practicable, shall be in conformity with the rules applicable in civil proceedings in the district courts of the United States; and

(2) the Commission may by subpena compel the attendance of witnesses and the production of books, papers, documents, and other evidence.

(b) WITNESS FEES.—Witnesses shall, unless otherwise prohibited by law, be entitled to the same fees and mileage as in the courts of the United States.

SEC. 13. PENALTIES.

(a) ASSESSMENT OF PENALTY.—Whoever violates any provision of this Act, or any regulation issued thereunder, or Commission order is liable to the United States for a civil penalty. The amount of the civil penalty, unless otherwise provided in this Act, may not exceed $5,000 for each violation unless the violation was willfully and knowingly committed, in which case the amount of the civil penalty may not exceed $25,000 for each violation. Each day of a continuing violation shall constitute a separate offense.

(b) TARIFF SUSPENSION.—

(1) For any violation of section 10(b)(1), (2), (3), (4), or (8), the Commission may suspend any or all tariffs of any common carrier, or that common carrier's right to use any or all tariffs of conferences of which it is a member, for a period not to exceed twelve months.

(2) For failure to supply information ordered to be produced or compelled by subpena under section 12, the Commission may, after notice and opportunity for hearing, suspend any or all tariffs of any common carrier, or that common carrier's right to use any or all tariffs of conferences of which it is a member.

(3) Any common carrier who accepts or handles cargo for carriage under a tariff that has been suspended or after its right to utilize that tariff has been suspended shall be subject to a civil penalty of not more than $50,000 for each shipment.

(4) If, in defense of its failure to comply with a subpena or discovery order, a common carrier alleges that documents or information located in a foreign country cannot be produced because of the laws of that country, the Commission shall immediately notify the Secretary of State of the failure to comply and of the allegation relating to foreign laws. Upon receiving the notification, the Secretary of State shall promptly consult with the government of the nation within which the documents or information are alleged to be located for the purpose of assisting the Commission in obtaining the documents or information sought.

(5) Before any tariff suspension ordered under this subsection becomes effective, it shall be immediately submitted to the President who may, within ten days after receiving it, disapprove the order if he finds that disapproval is required for reasons of the national defense or the foreign policy of the United States.

(c) ASSESSMENT PROCEDURE.—Every civil penalty provided for in this Act may be assessed by the Commission after notice and an opportunity for hearing. In determining the amount of the penalty, the Commission shall take into account the nature, circumstances, extent, and gravity of the violation committed and, with respect to the violator, the degree or culpability, history of prior offenses, ability to pay, and such other matters as justice may require. The Commission may compromise, modify, or remit, with or without conditions, any civil penalty which is subject to assessment under this section.

(d) REVIEW OF CIVIL PENALTY.—Any person against whom a civil penalty is assessed under this Act may obtain review thereof under chapter 158 of title 28, United States Code.

(e) FAILURE TO PAY ASSESSMENT.—If any person fails to pay an assessment of a civil penalty after it has become final or after the appropriate court has entered final judgment in favor of the Commission, the Commission shall seek to recover the amount assessed in any appropriate district court of the United States. In such action, the court shall enforce the Commission's order unless it finds that the order was not regularly made or duly issued.

(f) LIMITATIONS.—

(1) No fine or other punishment may be imposed for criminal conspiracy to violate any provision of this Act, or to defraud the Commission by concealment of any such violation.

(2) Any proceeding to assess a civil penalty under this section shall be commenced within five years from the date the violation occurred.

SEC. 14. COMMISSION ORDERS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Orders of the Commission relating to any violation of this Act or any regulation issued thereunder shall be made only after opportunity for hearing and upon sworn complaint or on its own motion. Each order of the Commission shall continue in force for the period of time specified in the order or until suspended, modified, or set aside by the Commission or a court of competent jurisdiction.

(b) REVERSAL OR SUSPENSION OF ORDERS.—The Commission may reverse, suspend, or modify any order made by it, and upon application of any party to a proceeding may grant a rehearing of the same or any matter determined therein. No rehearing shall, except by special order of the Commission, operate as a stay of such order.

(c) ENFORCEMENT OF NONREPARATION ORDERS.—In case of violation of any order of the Commission, or for failure to comply with a Commission subpena, the Commission, or any party injured by such violation, or the Attorney General may seek enforcement by any United States district court having jurisdiction over the parties. If after hearing, the court determines that the order was properly made and duly issued, it shall enforce the order by an appropriate injunction or other process, mandatory or otherwise.

(d) ENFORCEMENT OF REPARATION ORDER.—(1) In case of violation of any order of the Commission for the payment of reparation, the person to whom such award was made may seek enforcement of such order in any United States district court having jurisdiction of the parties.

(2) In any United States district court the findings and order of the Commission shall be prima facie evidence of the facts therein stated, and the petitioner shall not be liable for costs, nor for the costs of any subsequent stage of the proceedings, unless they accrue upon his appeal. A petitioner in a United States district court who prevails shall be allowed a reasonable attorney's fee to be assessed and collected as part of the costs of the suit.

(3) All parties in whose favor the Commission has made an award of reparation by a single order may be joined as plaintiffs, and all other parties in such order may be joined as defendants, in a single suit in any district in which any one such plaintiff could maintain a suit against any one such defendant. Service of process against such defendant not found in that district may be made in any district in which is located any office of, or point of call on a regular route operated by, such defendant. Judgment may be entered in favor of any plaintiff against the defendant liable to that plaintiff.

(e) STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.—Any action seeking enforcement of a Commission order shall be filed within four years after the date of the violation of the order.

(f) REPRESENTATION IN COURT.—Attorneys employed by the Commission shall, if the Commission so directs, appear for and represent the Commission in any case before a court of the United States or a State of the United States.

SEC. 15. REPORTS AND CERTIFICATES.

(a) REPORTS.—The Commission may require any common carrier, or any officer, receiver, trustee, lessee, agent, or employee thereof, to file with it any periodical or special report or any account, record, rate, or charge, or memorandum of any facts and transactions appertaining to the business of that common carrier. The report, account, record, rate, charge, or memorandum shall be made under oath whenever the Commission so requires, and shall be furnished in the form and within the time prescribed by the Commission. Conference minutes required to be filed with the Commission under this section shall not be released to third parties or published by the Commission.

(b) CERTIFICATION.—The Commission shall require the chief executive officer of every common carrier and, to the extent it deems feasible, may require any shipper, consignor, consignee, or broker to file a periodic written certification made under oath with the Commission attesting to—

(1) a policy prohibiting the payment, solicitation, or receipt of any rebate that is unlawful under the provisions of this Act;

(2) the fact that this policy has been promulgated recently to each owner, officer, employee, and agent thereof;

(3) the details of the efforts made within the company or otherwise to prevent or correct illegal rebating; and

(4) a policy of full cooperation with the Commission in its efforts to end those illegal practices.

Failure to file a certification shall result in a civil penalty of not more than $5,000 for each day the violation continues.

SEC. 16. EXEMPTIONS.

The Commission, upon application or on its own motion, may by order or rule exempt for the future any specified activity or class of agreements subject to this Act from any requirement of this Act, if it finds that the exemption will not substantially impair effective regulation by the Commission and is not likely to result in any significant lessening of competition in any trade serving the United States in which ocean common carriers operate. The Commission may attach conditions to any exemption and may, by order, revoke any exemption. No order or rule of exemption or revocation of exemption may be issued unless opportunity for hearing has been afforded interested persons who, for purposes of this section, include the departments and agencies of the United States.

SEC. 17. REGULATIONS.

The Commission may promulgate rules and regulations as necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act.

SEC. 18. COMMISSION ON THE DEREGULATION OF INTERNATIONAL OCEAN SHIPPING.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT AND COMPOSITION.—(1) There is established the Commission on the Deregulation of International Ocean Shipping (hereinafter referred to in this section as the "Commission").

(2) The Commission shall be composed of twenty-two members as follows:

(A) The President or a person designated by him.

(B) The Secretary of State, the Attorney General, the Secretary of Transportation, the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, and the Chairman of the Federal Maritime Commission, or a person designated by each official.

(C) Four members from the United States Senate appointed by the President, two from the membership of the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation and two from the membership of the Committee on the Judiciary.

(D) Four members from the United States House of Representatives appointed by the President, two from the membership of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries and two from the membership of the Committee on the Judiciary.

(E) Eight members from the private sector appointed by the President, including representatives of ocean common carriers, shippers, maritime labor organizations, and ports.

(3) The President or his designee shall be the chairman of the Commission.

(4) The majority leader of the Senate and the Speaker of the House shall make recommendations for the appointments of their respective members to be made pursuant to paragraph (2) (C) and (D) within thirty days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(5) The President shall make all of the appointments in accordance with paragraph (2) after receiving the recommendations set forth in paragraph (a)(4), but such appointments shall be made no later than sixty days after such date of enactment. The membership of the Commission shall be selected in such a manner as to be broadly representative of the various interests, needs, and concerns which may be affected by deregulation of international shipping.

(6) The first meeting of the Commission shall be called by the President no later than thirty days after the beginning of the first fiscal year occurring after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(7) The term of office for members shall be for the term of the Commission.

(8) A vacancy in the Commission shall not affect its powers, and shall be filled in the same manner in which the original appointment was made.

(9) Twelve members of the Commission shall constitute a quorum (but a lesser number may hold hearings).

(10) The Commission shall select a vice chairman from among its members.

(b) COMPENSATION OF MEMBERS OF THE COMMISSION.—(1) Officials of the United States Government and Members of Congress who are members of the Commission shall serve without compensation in addition to that received for their services as officials and Members, but they shall be reimbursed for travel, subsistence, and other necessary expenses incurred by them in the performance of the duties vested in the Commission.

(2) Members of the Commission appointed from the private sector shall each receive compensation not exceeding the maximum per diem rate of pay for grade 18 of the General Schedule under section 5332 of title 5 of the United States Code when engaged in the performance of duties vested in the Commission, plus reimbursement for actual travel, subsistence, and other necessary expenses incurred by them notwithstanding the limitations contained in sections 5701 through 5733 of title 5 of the United States Code in the performance of such duties.

(3) Members of the Commission appointed from the private sector shall not be subject to Title II of the Ethics in Government Act of 1978, Public Law 95-521, as amended, or to the provisions of section 208 of title 18 of the United States Code. Prior to commencing service, such members shall file with the Commission a statement disclosing their financial interests and business and other relationships involving or relating to ocean transportation. Such statements shall be available for public inspection at the Commission's offices.

(c) COMMISSION FUNCTIONS.—The Commission shall conduct a comprehensive study of, and make recommendations concerning, the deregulation of international ocean shipping by common carriers. Such comprehensive study shall specifically address—

(1) various options for deregulation of the international ocean shipping industry, with reference to their ability to promote an efficient, stable, and competitive United States common carrier fleet;

(2) the opportunities for harmonizing United States policy toward international ocean shipping with the policies of our major trading partners;

(3) the system for determining tariffs based on the classification of goods and its role in a future deregulated industry; including the most effective method for eliminating unnecessary cargo classifications as a basis for establishing tariffs and the feasibility of establishing a single tariff by each conference or common carrier for all cargoes shipped in units of comparable size, weight, and handling characteristics.

(4) the role of the antitrust laws in the international shipping industry and their impact upon our relations with foreign nations;

(5) the impact of the "rules of competition" being considered by our trading partners and their relationship to the trend in the developing world towards structured cartelization;

(6) the impact deregulation may have on the growth of State-owned or State-controlled merchant fleets;

(7) the size of the United States liner fleet, by number and cargo capacity, which each of the deregulation options may produce; and

(8) the future structure and role of the Federal Maritime Commission in a deregulated industry.

(d) POWERS OF THE COMMISSION.—The Commission or, on the authorization of the Commission, any subcommittee thereof, may, for the purpose of carrying out its functions, hold such hearings and sit and act at such times and places, administer such oaths, and require, by subpena or otherwise, the attendance and testimony of such witnesses, and the production of such books, records, correspondence, memorandums, papers, and documents as the Commission or such subcommittee may deem advisable. Subpenas may be issued to any person within the jurisdiction of the United States courts, under the signature of the chairman or vice chairman, or any duly designated member, and may be served by any person designated by the chairman, the vice chairman, or such member. In the case of the failure of any witness to comply with any subpena or to testify when summoned under authority of this section, the provisions of sections 102 through 104, inclusive, of the Revised Statutes of the United States (2 U.S.C. 192-194) shall apply to the Commission to the same extent as such provisions apply to Congress.

(2) For purposes of sections 552, 552a and 552b of title 5, United States Code, the Commission shall not be considered to be an "agency", as such term is defined in sections 551(1) and 552(e) of such title 5. The Commission shall not be subject to the provisions of the Federal Advisory Committee Act, Public Law 92-463, as amended.

(3) Each department, agency, and instrumentality of the executive branch of the Government, incuding independent agencies, is authorized and directed to furnish to the Commission, upon request made by the chairman or vice chairman, such information as the Commission deems necessary to carry out its functions under this section.

(4) Subject to such rules and regulations as may be adopted by the Commission, the chairman shall have the power to—

(A) appoint and fix the compensation of an executive director, and such additional staff personnel as he deems necessary, without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service, and without regard to the provisions of chapter 51 and subchapter III of chapter 53 of such title relating to classification and General Schedule pay rates, but at rates not in excess of the maximum rate for GS-18 of the General Schedule under section 5332 of such title, and

(B) procure temporary and intermittent services in accordance with the provisions of section 3109 of title 5, United States Code.

(5) Persons in the employ of the Commission pursuant to subsection (4) shall be considered to be Federal employees for all purposes, including—

(1) the Civil Service Retirement Act, as amended (5 U.S.C. 2251-2267),

(2) the Federal Employees' Group Life Insurance Act of 1954, as amended (5 U.S.C. 2091-2103),

(3) annual and sick leave, and

(4) the Travel Expense Act of 1949, as amended (5 U.S.C. 835-842).

(6) The Chairman may rent office space for the Commission, may utilize the services and facilities of other Federal agencies with or without reimbursement, may accept voluntary services notwithstanding the provisions of section 3679(b) of the Revised Statutes (31 U.S.C. 665(b)), may accept, hold and administer gifts from non-governmental sources and transfers of funds from other Federal agencies, and may enter into contracts with any public or private person or entity for reports, research or surveys in furtherance of the work of the Commission.

(e) FINAL REPORT.—The Commission shall submit to the President and to the Congress not later than one year after the first meeting of the Commission, a final report containing a detailed statement of the findings and conclusions of the Commission resulting from the study undertaken pursuant to subsection (c), including its recommendations for such administrative, judicial, and legislative action which it deems advisable. Any formal recommendation made by the Commission to the President and to the Congress must have the majority vote of the Commission present and voting.

(f) EXPIRATION OF THE COMMISSION.—The Commission shall cease to exist 60 days after the submission to Congress of the final report under subsection (e).

(g) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATION.—There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the activities of the Commission.

SEC. 19. REPEALS AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.

(a) REPEALS.—The laws specified in the following table are repealed.

Shipping Act, 1916:
Sec. 13	36 Stat. 117
Sec. 14a	46 U.S.C. 813
Sec. 14b	46 U.S.C. 813a
Sec. 18(b)	46 U.S.C. 817(b)
Sec. 18(c)	46 U.S.C. 817(c)
Sec. 26	46 U.S.C. 825
Merchant Marine Act, 1920:
Sec. 20	41 Stat. 996
Merchant Marine Act, 1936:
Sec. 212(e)	46 U.S.C. 1122(e)
Sec. 214	46 U.S.C. 1124
Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1981:
Sec. 1608(c)	95 Stat. 752

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—The Shipping Act, 1916 (39 Stat. 728), as amended (46 U.S.C. 801 et seq.), is amended as follows:

(1) in section 1 by striking the definition "controlled carrier";

(2) in sections 14, 15, 16, 20, 21(a), 22, and 45 by striking "common carrier by water" wherever it appears in those sections and substituting "common carrier by water in interstate commerce";

(3) in section 14, first paragraph, by striking "or a port of a foreign country";

(4) in section 14, last paragraph, by striking all after the words "for each offense" and substituting a period;

(5) in section 15, fourth paragraph, by striking "(including changes in special rates and charges covered by section 14b of this Act which do not involve a change in the spread between such rates and charges and the rates and charges applicable to noncontract shippers)" and also "with the publication and filing requirements of section 18(b) hereof and";

(6) in section 15, sixth paragraph, by striking ", or permitted under section 14b," and in the seventh paragraph, by striking "or of section 14b";

(7) in section 16, in the paragraph designated "First", by striking all after "disadvantage in any respect" and substituting "whatsoever.";

(8) in section 17 by striking the first paragraph, and in the second paragraph, by striking "such carrier and every";

(9) in section 21(b) by striking "The Commission shall require the chief executive officer of every vessel operating common carrier by water in foreign commerce and to the extent it deems feasible, may require any shipper, consignor, consignee, forwarder, broker, other carrier or other person subject to this Act," and substituting "The Commission may, to the extent it deems feasible, require any shipper, consignor, consignee, forwarder, broker, or other person subject to this Act,";

(10) in section 22 by striking subsection (c);

(11) in section 25, at the end of the first sentence, by adding "under this Act";

(12) in sections 29, 30, and 31, after the words "any order of the board", by adding "under this Act,";

(13) in section 32(c), after the words "or functions,", by adding "under this Act,";

(14) in section 44, by striking all and substituting:

"(a) LICENSE.—No person may engage in carrying on the business of forwarding unless that person holds a license issued by the Commission. The Commission shall issue a forwarder's license to any person who—

"(1) the Commission determines to be qualified by experience and character to render forwarding services; and

"(2) furnishes a bond in a form and amount determined by the Commission to insure financial responsibility that is issued by a surety company found acceptable by the United States Department of the Treasury.

"(b) SUSPENSION OR REVOCATION.—The Commission shall, after notice and hearing, suspend or revoke any license if it finds that the independent ocean freight forwarder is not qualified to render forwarding services, or for willful failure to comply with any provision of this Act, or with any lawful order, rule, or regulation of the Commission.

"(c) EXCEPTION.—A person whose business is the sale of merchandise may forward shipments of that merchandise for his own account without a license.

"(d) COMPENSATION OF FORWARDERS BY CARRIERS.—

(1) A common carrier may compensate an independent ocean freight forwarder in connection with any cargo shipment dispatched on behalf of others only when the independent ocean freight forwarder has certified in writing that it holds a valid license and has performed the following services:

"(A) engaged, booked, secured, reserved, or contracted directly with the carrier or its agent for space aboard a vessel or confirmed the availability of that space; and

"(B) prepared and processed the ocean bill of lading, dock receipt, or other similar document with respect to the cargo.

"(2) A common carrier may not pay compensation for services described in paragraph (1) more than once on the same cargo shipment.

"(3) No compensation may be paid to an independent ocean freight forwarder except in accordance with the tariff requirements of this Act.

"(4) No independent ocean freight forwarder may receive compensation from a common carrier with respect to any shipment in which the forwarder has a direct or indirect beneficial interest nor shall a common carrier knowingly pay compensation on such shipment.".

(c) TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS.— Section 212 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936 (46 U.S.C. 1122) is amended by—

(1) striking after subsection (d) the following undesignated paragraph:

"The Federal Maritime Commission is authorized and directed—";

and

(2) striking after subsection (e) the following undesignated paragraph:

"The Secretary of Transportation is authorized and directed—".

(d) EFFECTS ON CERTAIN AGREEMENTS AND CONTRACTS.—All agreements, contracts, modifications, and exemptions previously approved or licenses previously issued by the Commission shall continue in force and effect as if approved or issued under the provisions of this Act; and all new agreements, contracts, and modifications to existing, pending, or new contracts or agreements shall be considered under the provisions of this Act.

(e) SAVINGS PROVISIONS.—

(1) Notwithstanding subsection 8(c), each service contract entered into by a shipper and an ocean common carrier or conference before the date of enactment may remain in full force and effect and need not comply with the requirements of that subsection until January 1, 1984.

(2) This Act and the amendments made by it shall not affect any suit at law filed before April 1, 1982.

SEC. 20. EFFECTIVE DATE.

This Act shall become effective one hundred and eighty days after the date of its enactment, except that sections 17, 18, and 19 shall become effective upon enactment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. McCLOSKEY. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. JONES) will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from California (Mr. McCLOSKEY) will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. JONES).

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 4384, a bill designed to improve international ocean commerce as it affects the United States. As this bill proceeded through both the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries and the Committee on the Judiciary, it was subjected to intensive scrutiny and far-ranging debate.

The legislation is a refinement of many years of hard work by Members of this body. We have benefited from the advice and contributions by members of the ocean transportation industry, organized labor, and particularly the consumers of regulated ocean shipping services—these American importers and exporters whose very existence is dependent upon a competitive, rational, and reliable ocean transportation system.

H.R. 4374 was reported by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries on June 16, following which the Committee on the Judiciary held hearings and marked up a bill which was ordered reported on the 30th of July. The bill before us today is, with minor exceptions, the bill reported out of the Committee on the Judiciary. I congratulate that committee and its chairman on the way they approached this most vital measure. They helped to devise the necessary balance to assure that competition remains a hallmark of ocean shipping and that the maximum safeguards be provided to those who must depend on liner shipping.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. RODINO), the able chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. RODINO. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join my distinguished colleague from North Carolina, the chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, in urging the adoption of H.R. 4374, the Shipping Act of 1982.

The legislation before us today is the outcome of the deliberations of both the Merchant Marine and the Judiciary Committees. It represents a careful balancing of the interests of the ocean carriers, the shippers who pay for their services, and the ultimate consumers.

The bill will achieve a number of meritorious objectives. By clarifying the substantive law and expediting the procedures before the Federal Maritime commission, we can acheive greater certainty and substantially lessen the cost of regulation. Less regulation can benefit not only the industry, but also the consumers who ultimately pay the cost of shipping services.

The bill removes the vague and sometimes unworkable "public interest" standard for approval of agreements among carriers, and substitutes a complete list of prohibited practices, intended to insure the protection of user interests. And while the bill allows the ocean carrier cartels to continue operations, it provides for the formation of a Presidential Study commission to make recommendations within 1 year for a more complete deregulation and restoration of competitive principles in the industry.

Critics of the ocean carriers have suggested for years that the cartel arrangements among carriers should no longer be tolerated. Deregulation of this industry, however, is complex—it involves not only the ships and ports of our Nation, but the ships and port facilities of every other maritime nation as well. And deregulation must be undertaken with a sensitivity for the interests and values of these other nations. The Study Commission will afford us an opportunity to move with a moderate, sensitive, but firm gait toward the ultimate deregulation we seek.

The bill that is offered today is largely in the form reported by the Judiciary Committee on July 30 of this year. Since that date, Chairman JONES and I have agreed on a few additional changes to resolve areas of difference between the two committees. None of these additional changes significantly affects the antitrust protections built into the Judiciary amendment. Indeed, in a number of cases, the additional language we have added should clarify and strengthen competitive principles. For example, a newly added definition of joint ventures will spell out more clearly the types of corporate combinations that fall within the restrictions of section 10(a) of the bill. Additional language has also been added to make sure that unreasonable refusals to deal by common carriers are prohibited.

I am also satisfied that this legislation will have no significant negative impact on port authorities or marine terminal operators. For the most part, this bill is concerned with the conduct of ocean carriers. Nothing in the legislation will alter the current law permitting marine terminal operators to enter into agreements among themselves and with ocean carriers. If those agreements are approved by the Federal Maritime Commission, they are granted limited antitrust immunity.

Under this legislation, agreements between marine terminal operators and carriers will be subject to the procedures set forth in section 5 of the bill. Other agreements will remain subject to the Shipping Act of 1916. Thus, ports would not be treated any differently under the antitrut laws than they are now if this legislation is enacted. Whether agreements are filed pursuant to the Shipping Act of 1982, or under the Shipping Act of 1916, we would expect that the Commission would process them with the same dispatch.

During consideration of this legislation by the Committee on the Judiciary, concern was expressed that the Maritime Commission would have no authority to restrict pooling arrangements that have severely anticompetitive effects and no countervailing benefits. To resolve this problem, the committee added section 11(d) to the bill, which allows the Commission to investigate such pooling arrangements and modify or terminate the underlying agreements. Because many such pooling arrangements may promote efficiency or have other public policy benefits, section 11(d) does not authorize advance or preclearance disapproval by the Commission—the Commission may act only when the agreement is in effect and it believes that conduct pursuant to the agreement substantially reduces competition.

After the committee filed its report, concern was expressed that the language of section 11(d) could unfairly call into question existing revenue pooling involving the northbound and southbound east and gulf coast Brazil and Argentina trades. U.S.-flag carriers have a legitimate interest in preserving their business in trades which, as the result of restrictive and protective laws passed by other nations, could jeopardize their continued participation. Accordingly, I have agreed with Chairman JONES to add a new subparagraph 11(d)(2)(D) providing that such pooling agreements will be allowed when they permit U.S.-flag carriers to continue operating in trades subject to cargo reservation laws or trading practices that operate unequally or unfairly with respect to the U.S.-flag carrier. Such agreements may, of course, be allowed under sections 11(d)(2)(a)-(c), as well.

A number of distinguished members of both committees have played a vital role in bringing this legislation to the floor. I want to acknowledge in particular the work of the gentleman from New York (Mr. BIAGGI) and the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HUGHES). Finally, I want to thank the distinguished chairman of the Merchant Marine Committee for the consideration he has shown to our committee in bringing an acceptable bill to the floor.

I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

□ 1230

Mr. Speaker, I would like to emphasize the provisions of H.R. 4374 which were added to protect the consumers of shipping services, to provide them with the competitive environment so necessary if the foreign trade of the United States is to prosper. These protections, which serve to weaken conference powers, include:

First, independent action; second, defined standards for loyalty contracts; third, service contracts; fourth, open conferences; and fifth, shippers' councils.

Shipping conference strength is traditionally bolstered by loyalty agreements, in which a shipper can be required to ship all his goods with the conference, in order to get a favorable rate. To offset this element of conference power, H.R. 4374 mandates that such conferences allow their members to offer prices independent of (and presumably lower than) the conference tariff. This is called "independent action." It allows a shipper the chance to convince a single member of the conference to offer better rates and insures that such a rate cannot be stifled by the majority of conference members. Of course, conferences can always choose to offer even more flexible types of independent action.

Loyalty contracts also let a shipper get a lower rate by committing to ship a specified part of his cargoes with the conference. The bill allows the parties to broadly define the scope of loyalty contracts. The commodities and services which may be included in the contract may be determined on the basis of each party's commodity and geographic needs and capabilities; but the shipper is free to drop all or any portion of the loyalty arrangements.

Also, we have added a shipper-requested provision limiting the spread between tariff rate and contract rate to no more than 15 percent.

The bill also allows shippers and carriers to enter into service contracts. Service contracts are a device where an individual shipper can negotiate his own deal with the carrier, independent of the conference. It is another part of the bill which weakens conference powers. The inclusion of legislative standards for service contracts is designed to make this competitive device a tool for innovation available to conferences. Some independents have successfully employed service contracts to tailor service to the mutual needs and benefits of the parties. H.R. 4374 makes clear that such commercial innovation may legally be employed by conferences while making certain that their common carrier responsibility is not abandoned. These changes add a competitive spur within a shipping environment designed to provide efficient and reliable transportation services to our importers and exporters.

I would like to point out briefly the few changes which have been agreed to by the Merchant Marine and Fisheries and the Judiciary Committees, changes which, I repeat, are from the version of the bill reported by the Judiciary Committee.

Several definitional changes were made to clarify the coverage of this legislation and to eliminate any confusion which may have existed. Significant among these are definitions dealing with inland division, a definition made necessary by inclusion in the bill of a requirement that conferences of ocean common carriers may not, as a group, negotiate with inland carriers the inland portion of a through rate. This inclusion is consistent with the deregulatory action the Congress has pursued for domestic carriers, and there is no provision in this bill which frustates the competitive impact of the domestic transportation deregulatory actions we have taken over the past several years. Having introduced and restricted joint venture activity, it became necessary to define what a joint venture is and the technical changes incorporate such a definition; likewise, the prohibition against the formation of net profit or loss pools which was added by the Judiciary Committee required a definition not so broadly drawn so as to eliminate beneficial activity necessary to guarantee efficiency in the ocean transportation field.

The suspension of any agreement and activity which can be ordered by the Federal Maritime Commission under this bill is further clarified in this amendment by applying a fairly standard test that the Commission is likely to find that the agreement will violate the legislation or that some other party may be substantially injured if the agreement is not suspended.

To protect importers and exporters, as well as nonconference carriers, from undue pressure by operators of common carriers working together, we have added restrictions on the kinds of tieing or loyalty agreements which conferences may offer; the amendment restricts loyalty agreement discounts to a maximum of 15 percent.

As reported by the Judiciary Committee, this bill would have prohibited any common carrier to attempt to monopolize a trade. It was agreed that the retention of this provision was inconsistent with the purposes of this legislation, which are to encourage efficiency, competitiveness, and fairness within the context of a system which recognizes concerted activity by groups of ocean common carriers. Since everything in this bill is geared toward protecting the public, while recognizing the validity of these liner conferences, a provision to make illegal the very activity we are regulating was viewed as inappropriate. Therefore, that provision is deleted.

I would like to digress from further explanation of the amendments before us to remind my colleagues that these groups of ocean carriers who are being regulated by this legislation operate as unregulated conferences everywhere in the world. A significant majority of the carriers who would be regulated by this legislation will continue to be foreign carriers operating under the laws of countries which either recognize the existence of this narrow transportation cartel or operate under the laws of a nation which, while restricting anticompetitive devices, provides broad exemptions based upon demonstrable evidence that these cartels work a beneficial effect upon world trade by increasing efficiency and reducing operating costs.

Throughout the world, we have learned that conference pricing truly reflects the cost of doing business. It reflects the competition which is inserted into trade by conference outsiders, and it does not produce the type of monopoly price fixing which many uninformed critics of this system allege is the logical outcome. Consumers of these services throughout the world point to the conference liner system as the most appropriate way of providing regular service at reasonable rates with the maximum of innovation. To this, H.R. 4374 has added the checks against discrimination and other safeguards in the form of enumerated prohibitions which will improve the regulatory scheme in the United States immeasurably.

It is important that my colleagues know, and that the record clearly demonstrate that the regulatory procedures contained within H.R. 4374 apply only to those carriers who operate as liners, that is, carriers of general cargo over regular routes, whose service is freely available to all shippers without discrimination. At no time was this legislation ever intended to permit the formation of conferences or to extend this regulatory scheme to tanker or bulk cargo operators, even if those tanker operators carry chemical parcels in less than full shipload lots.

Among the sanctions and prohibitions in H.R. 4374 which replace the vague and almost impossible-to-apply restrictions in the 66-year-old Shipping Act, are a few which I think should be highlighted. The formation of joint ventures—not conferences—which reduce competition—and cannot be justified by the limited factors specified in the bill—is prohibited. While agreements which conform to statutory requirements go into effect within a time certain, any threatened harm to a competitor, customer, or other person, will subject the agreement to suspension by the Federal Maritime Commission. By the same token, suspension by the Federal Maritime Commission is available if the implementation of the agreement is likely to result in a violation of the law.

Every conceivable technique which may be employed to prevent a competitor from entering a trade, is expressly forbidden. Also, any device which may be employed to discriminate against any shipper, port, another carrier, or any other person, has, for the first time, been expressly identified and prohibited. When combined with new injunctive remedies and civil penalties which can add up to $25,000 a day, H.R. 4374 is not only an improvement over the 1916 Shipping Act; H.R. 4374 protects the public better than the old Shipping Act, even when combined with the sometimes used antitrust sanctions.

To return to the amendments before us, the restrictions against the formation of joint ventures are mitigated to some extent by an amendment which requires that actions by other countries may have the effect of eliminating competition and making it difficult for U.S. interests to exercise their rights to engage freely in world trade; where such situations exist, it may indeed by appropriate to permit the formation of certain limited joint ventures to overcome restrictions which are imposed by others.

A group of amendments were recommended by the Administrative Conference of the United States which affect only the Commission on the Deregulation of International Ocean Shipping which is created by this legislation.

As you can see, the good bill which was reported by the Judiciary Committee remains a good bill and the changes made by amendments between July 30 and today, under agreement between our two committees, has only improved this most necessary legislation.

There is not a single segment of governmental, business, labor, or consumer activity which has not voiced its opinion about H.R. 4374. What appears before us today is a synthesis of multiple efforts and opinions, and reflects in the finest sense that type of compromise of which good legislation is born. To repeat, ocean carriers (foreign and domestic), labor unions, the consumers of the service itself (both importers and exporters) have overwhelmingly attested to the necessity for this legislation and have overwhelmingly asked for our support in approving this legislation

The 1916 Shipping Act, under which we have been operating, granted antitrust immunity to activities engaged in by these ocean conferences. H.R. 4374 creates no new grant of antitrust immunity—H.R. 4374 does not permit cartel price fixing to any extent not currently permitted. H.R. 4374 makes more certain the procedures which must be followed to retain immunity and provides sure and certain sanctions for those who would violate the law. H.R. 4374 minimizes Government intervention, but does not eliminate it. Instead, H.R. 4374 recognizes that competition and efficiency are functions of commercial reality, and that the Government's role is to guarantee that efficiency not be used as the basis for predatory conduct which would eliminate competitors or discriminatory activity which would harm consumers and others. And finally, H.R. 4374 squarely faces the reality that ocean shipping is an international activity and that it is absolutely essential that our practices be in harmony with those of our trading partners.

I ask for, and I am certain you will provide, your support for this important piece of legislation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. JONES) has 8 minutes remaining.

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from New York (Mr. BIAGGI).

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join the distinguished chairman of the committee and Mr. RODINO, the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, in urging enactment of H.R. 4374. Since I introduced this bill in August of last year, we have been working together in a coordinated effort to produce a bill that would address the serious problems facing our merchant marine. We have been joined in that effort by the Members on the other side of the aisle.

H.R. 4374 was developed by the Subcommittee on Merchant Marine, which I chair. We held 4 days of hearings and heard over 30 witnesses. At the conclusion of the hearings, my subcommittee produced a comprehensive redraft of the original bill. Our work product was eventually ratified by the full committee under the fine leadership of the gentleman from North Carolina.

Thus, the bill we are presenting today is the result of our joint efforts and those of the Judiciary Committee—the administration—the Federal Maritime Commission—the maritime industry—shippers—ports—and maritime labor. It is a consensus bill reflecting the interests of each of those groups. Each of them assisted in resolving the many complex issues inherent in this legislation and contributed significantly to the development of the bill.

The bill arises out of several fundamental propositions that are, in my opinion, not subject to challenge. They are:

First, the United States—as the world's greatest trading nation—needs a healthy merchant marine for its economic security and national defense.

Second, we do not have such a merchant marine, and its health is declining rather than improving.

Third, the present poor condition of our merchant marine is, to a great extent, self-inflicted.

Fourth, one of the ways by which we have hampered the health of our merchant marine is through the laws that govern it and their interpretation.

Fifth, it is now time to change those laws.

H.R. 4374 would make some of the changes in law that are necessary. It would remove those constraints in the law that prevent or impede our ocean carriers from engaging in those cooperative activities that would improve their efficiency and enable them to compete on a more equal basis with foreign carriers.

If our ocean carriers are enabled by this legislation to better compete with foreign carriers, the eventual result should be more American ships carrying our trade. That means more American crews and more jobs for Americans. In these days of unacceptably high unemployment, any bill that offers the opportunity for more American jobs is worthy of strong support.

H.R. 4374 would also change the law by simplifying and speeding Government procedures that have made it difficult for our carriers to quickly respond to changing conditions and shipper requirements. These changes should enable them to operate more efficiently and reduce their administrative costs. They should also enable our operators to compete for cargoes with foreign carriers on a more equal basis.

This bill has been attacked by some as being "special interest" legislation. It is—it is in the special interest of the American people. It is aimed at producing a larger, more healthy, and more efficient American merchant marine. And, clearly, that objective is in the best interests of the American people.

The long and diverse list of organizations, corporations, unions, and other interests that have expressed support for this bill confirm that conclusion.

Anyone who looks at the experience of Great Britain in the recent Falkland Islands war cannot fail to be impressed with the important—if not vital—contribution her merchant marine made to Britain's ultimate success. During that conflict, Great Britain used over 50 merchant ships to support its naval task force.

In a similar situation, we in the United States would find it almost impossible to muster comparable resources from our U.S.-flag merchant marine. This bill will, of course, not provide those resources. But it is an important—if not vital—part of the process of revitalizing the American merchant marine so that if we ever have a similar need for merchant ships, we will have them.

In the past 10 years, this greatest trading Nation in the world has seen 10 U.S.-flag steamship companies go bankrupt—an average of one a year. At the present time, there are two more U.S.-flag carriers that are in a poor financial situation.

We are increasingly dependent on foreign-flag vessels for the export of our products to the marketplaces of the world and the importation of our consumer goods. A look around the harbors of New York, Baltimore, and any other U.S. port will confirm our dependence on foreign-flag shipping.

These are the facts. The reasons for the decay and what can be done to reverse this decline are the difficult questions that we have been trying to resolve. H.R. 4374 is but one of our responses to this problem.

H.R. 4374 is an important bill. Its importance is well-stated in a recent letter from the Labor-Management Committee. That letter said:

> For the American merchant marine, H.R. 4374 is an absolute necessity as a building block in fighting its way back to a position of competitive equality with its foreign counterparts. The legislation redresses problems that have led to the diminution of the liner sector of this industry.
> A vote for this bill is a vote for American shipping, American consumers, American labor, and American security.

I concur with that statement and urge the support of all Members for H.R. 4374.

The basic purpose of H.R. 4374 is to improve the international ocean commerce transportation system of the United States. It does this by rewriting that portion of the 1916 Shipping Act, that regulates common carriers by water in foreign commerce. That act was aimed at eliminating cutthroat competition in ocean shipping and to bring a measure of stability to that business so that American exporters would not be a disadvantage as compared to their foreign competitors.

The 1916 act accomplished its purpose by granting ocean common carriers and conferences of those carriers immunity from the antitrust laws of the United States. That enabled American carriers to engage in the type of cooperative activities that were engaged in by their counterparts overseas and that led to increased efficiency in usage of their vessels.

Unfortunately, since 1916, the original purpose of the act has become distorted. In the intervening years, both the enforcement and judicial interpretation of the act have undergone substantial change. As a result, ocean carriers operating in our foreign trades today are unable to predict with any certainty the extent of the antitrust exemption granted in 1916. One aim of H.R. 4374 is to eliminate those uncertainties and reaffirm the act's principles.

A second problem the bill addresses is the procedural delays that are common in enforcement of the 1916 act. It often takes many many months or years for a carrier to receive approval for a proposed cooperative arrangement. This greatly reduces their ability to quickly respond to changed economic and trade conditions. H.R. 4374 addresses this problem by modernizing and simplifying the procedures before the Federal Maritime Commission—the agency that administers our maritime regulatory law.

In the 1916 Shipping Act, Congress concluded that the ocean carriers serving our foreign commerce must be immune from the antitrust laws. After extensive hearings, study, and input from numerous sources, I—and the subcommittee I chair—reached the same conclusion. We recognized, as did the 1916 Congress, that we are dealing with an international, not a domestic, industry. The antitrust laws that apply domestically cannot work when applied to an industry to which the rest of the world does not apply such concepts.

Only the United States has followed a philosophy that limits the activities of conferences and carriers through a combination of regulatory and antitrust oversight of rates and practices. The result has been insecurity, delays in regulatory approvals for, or rejection of, practices standard elsewhere, excessive and unpredictable Government intervention, and the anomalies and irritations that inevitably arise from the attempt to impose our laws on foreign parties whom our laws can only imperfectly control. Our foreign counterparts feel imposed upon in the name of a policy they do not embrace, and our own operators are the victims of an ever-changing regime that is only partially effective when applied to their foreign competitors.

While H.R. 4374 retains and strengthens the basic antitrust immunity for the ocean liner industry, it also provides numerous protections to insure that they do not abuse their monopoly powers. The bill contains a long list of prohibited acts with meaningful penalties that are, in some cases, heavier than those in the 1916 act.

A feature of the bill that is worthy of note is its recognition of the intermodal movement of cargo as a common form of ocean transportation service. H.R. 4374 recognizes this fact and allows conferences to set a single through rate for an intermodal movement. They do not need to show the division of that rate between the water and the inland portion of the transport. The long-standing position of the Justice Department—which is to prohibit conferences from reaching agreement with inland transportation cartels—remains intact. In furtherance of the competitive intent of this position, the negotiation of rates with inland carriers must be undertaken by individual ocean carriers.

Despite the administration's recommendation to the contrary, the bill retains the present requirement that tariffs be filed with the Federal Maritime Commission. This was a subject of considerable controversy, but I remain convinced that tariff filing is essential for enforcement of the common carrier concepts inherent in the bill and for the prevention of discriminatory practices. Neither carriers nor shippers supported the administration's proposal to end the tariff filing requirement. Even though tariff filing is retained in the bill, I understand that the administration fully supports H.R. 4374 in its present form.

I would like to briefly address the impact this legislation will have on a vital component of our national maritime industry—port authorities or marine terminal operators. For the most part, this bill is concerned with the conduct of ocean carriers and does not deal directly with the activities of port authorities. However, the Judiciary and Merchant Marine Committees were aware that, under current law, marine terminal operators can and do enter into agreements among themselves and with ocean carriers; and, if those agreements are approved by the Federal Maritime Commission, they are granted limited antitrust immunity.

Nothing in the Shipping Act of 1982 alters that. Agreements between marine terminal operators and carriers will be subject to the procedures set forth in section 5 of the bill. Other agreements will remain subject to the Shipping Act of 1916. Thus, ports would not be treated any differently under the antitrust laws than they are now if this legislation is enacted.

A key component of this legislation is that it provides for the Federal Maritime Commission to expedite its review of agreements which must be filed with it for approval, and to process those agreements under clear and precise standards. This, of course, would be applicable to those terminal agreements which must be filed pursuant to the Shipping Act of 1982—and, while no procedural changes have been made in the Shipping Act of 1916, we would expect that the Commission would process terminal agreements which must be filed pursuant to the 1916 act with the same dispatch.

In summary, H.R. 4374 recognizes the need to amend the present law and provide a modern and realistic regulatory scheme that will allow U.S. carriers and shippers to conduct international ocean commerce in a stable, efficient, and competitive manner within a fair trade environment.

It attempts to provide clearcut rules and procedures applicable to both foreign-flag and U.S.-flag operators within an equitable and competitive commercial environment. While advancing the commercial interests of the carrier as well as the shipper, it also attempts to prevent U.S.-flag vessels from being driven from the liner trades by a regulatory scheme that previously has weighed disproportionately heavily on U.S. operators.

I believe that this legislation is the first step in the process of revitalizing our merchant marine. Its enactment is essential if our country is to have the strong merchant marine it needs for its economic and military security.

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. EDWARDS).

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. Speaker, it is with some dismay that I rise to oppose the motion to suspend the rules and pass H.R. 4374, the proposed Shipping Act of 1982. I feel strongly that this bill should not be considered in any manner that precludes proper debate and the offering of appropriate amendments. The leadership decision to allow the bill to be brought to the floor today has been objected to by me and other members of the Judiciary Committee including the ranking minority member, Representative ROBERT MCCLORY. At least three members of the Judiciary Committee have amendments they would like to offer. As a result, the procedure being followed today has the effect of attempting to gag us. In addition, the Members should be aware that the version of the bill being presented today differs from the reported versions, has not been reviewed by any committee, and was not even made available to us until Friday—much too late for us to analyze it or receive public comment.

Mr. Speaker, my objections to the motion to suspend the rules are also based on the extremely adverse effect of H.R. 4374 on the national economy. If enacted, this bill would give international shipping cartels the unbridled power to control the ocean liner trades of the United States. Under the bill such cartels—comprised mostly of foreign corporations—are specifically authorized to fix shipping prices as well as to allot ports and allocate cargoes. The effects of the bill would be to reduce services and, according to estimates that I consider reliable, to increase the costs of ocean liner transportation by some 20 percent.

The purpose of the act, according to the very first sentence of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee report is "to exempt from the antitrust laws those agreements and activities subject to regulation by the Federal Maritime Commission;" further, "FMC is provided exclusive jurisdiction in administering all the (relevant) provisions of the Shipping Act * * *" Yet the House Judiciary has had inadequate time to review this regulation.

The bill is complex, and, in many instances, what appear to be protections against abuse of conference monopoly power in one portion of the bill are modified into insignificance in other portions. In brief outline, the bill works by granting antitrust exemption to ocean liner companies and their cartels—the "conferences"—for a long list of important actions. It makes legal a large and indeterminate number of acts that, under existing legislation, are illegal. These explicit increases in the cartels' legal actions are reinforced by making it more difficult to prove illegality and by minimizing the scope and severity of penalties and recoverable damages.

Six authorized activities are, in brief: To fix rates—the essence of anticompetitive cartel action; to pool traffic and revenues; allot ports or restrict or regulate the number of sailings; limit the volume of cargo to be carried; engage in exclusive, preferential, or cooperative working arrangements, and enter into other agreements to control, regulate or prevent competition among themselves. Section 7(a) provides that the antitrust laws do not, with minor exceptions, apply to any of these activities. In addition loyalty contracts, the ocean liner conferences' classic tool of economic discrimination are preserved, but with effective regulation eliminated.

Further, in a frightening example of newspeak, provision is made for what is euphemistically called independent action. There is, in fact, no genuine right of independent action mandated in the bill. Instead, conferences are required to permit independent action only if they already have loyalty contracts in effect and if the proponent of the independent rate submits its proposal to all the other members of the cartel. Since conferences normally operate under a unanimity rule, the gains from any unpopular, independent action would have to be weighed against the costs of alienating other members of the conference—any one of which could veto some future proposal. Consequently, truly independent action is most unlikely. What is much more likely is action to cut rates even below the cartels' loyalty contract rates in order to exclude potential independent competition or some small shipper at the behest of a powerful customer. Thus, although fighting ships would be illegal under the act, fighting rates are authorized. The fact that dual rates, independent action and service contracts can be instituted only through the conferences eliminates the theoretical possibility that discounts could reduce the monopolistic power of conferences.

The bill also weakens the present protections against anticompetitive actions:

First, although the authorized agreements and actions are strongly anticompetitive, the burden of proof is shifted from the parties to the agreement, where it lies under present law, to anyone challenging an agreement.

Second, the Commission can no longer reject any conference agreement on the grounds that it is contrary to the public interest or that it would adversely affect American commerce, or because rates are too high or too low. Further, there is no prohibition against a conference's monopolizing a trade.

Third, by exempting all actions within the scope of the act, it precludes injured parties from being awarded treble damages. Section 11 does provide that FMC may award double damages in specified instances of anticompetitive actions but not any actions by consortia or single carriers (section 10(d)), or conference actions such as monopolizing (section 10(a)), discrimination and rebating (10(b)(6)), and offering deferred rebates 10(b)(8).

Fourth, section 13(f)(1) provides "No fine or punishment may be imposed for criminal conspiracy to violate any provisions of this Act, * * *."

Finally, through requiring the Federal Maritime Commission (FMC) to enforce cartel tariffs in effect, the bill not only delegates congressional legislative power to the international cartels, but also provides them with Federal enforcement power. This raises a constitutional issue. It is the type of unbridled delegation of governmental power to private bodies that the Supreme Court long ago rejected in the days of the New Deal.

The bill's proponents frequently assert that the bill really does not do much, that it is essentially just a rewrite of the 1916 act. In my view this is misrepresentation since, in fact, under the bill at least five major protections against abuse of power would be removed by the proposed act. At present, the FMC can prohibit carriers in foreign commerce from operating under a tariff containing unreasonably high or low rates (Section 18(b)(5)). The Commission must, under present law, also prevent carriers from raising unreasonably low rates if the reason for doing so is that a competitor has been successfully eliminated. The requirement that dual-rate—loyalty—contracts be approved in advance by the FMC is removed. Finally, as I have already mentioned, two flexible standards for disapproval of anticompetitive agreements are removed: First, detriment to the commerce of the United States; or second, conflict with the public interest.

Few industries are less deserving of antitrust exemption. The history of this industry is replete with every form of anticompetitive action. Unlike the tankers and bulk carriers, the liner companies have for more than a hundred years practiced cartelization with monopolistic rates, predatory practices, discrimination and retaliation against both shippers and independent liner companies who have failed to acquiesce in the cartels' control of various trades.

The consequences of the bill are predictable. Rates will rise and service will decline. Both the facts and the logic are conclusive. Not only in the distant past, but currently, conferences raise rates when they succeed in suppressing competition from independent liner companies. For example, last week the conferences serving the Canada-Europe trades raised rates 24 percent, after the major independent liner company joined the conference; after Sea-land joined two Pacific conferences, they raised rates $5 to $7 per ton and planned additional increases, despite declining traffic. The president of Trans Freight Lines, Inc., the largest independent in the United States-Europe trades, is quoted as saying that if the Biaggi bill is passed TFL will join the conferences and disappear as an independent carrier (American Shipper, September 1982, p. 14).

No adequate analysis of the impacts of the bill on ocean freight rates or on prices paid by consumers or prices received by farmers and other exporters has been undertaken. However, Dr. Allen R. Ferguson, chairman of the National Institute of Economics and Law and author of one of the standard works on maritime policy, has stated that a rate increase of some 20 percent is reasonable to expect. The reasonableness of this figure is indicated by the 24 percent increase in Canadian rates and by a Journal of Commerce report that, despite past severe competition in the Pacific trades, "as in other trades, independent (that is, competitive) rates range from 10 to 20 percent below conference prices." (July 19, 1982, 1A).

If the conferences are, in fact, enabled by this legislation to increase rates by as little as 20 percent, on the average, the shipping costs of American liner imports and exports would rise by some $3 billion per year—year after year.

Such an increase would raise prices to American consumers of television sets, automobiles, automobile repair parts, coffee, tea alcoholic beverages, and clothing, for example. Also, the delivered prices abroad of important American liner exports, such as cereals and other farm products, industrial machinery, chemicals and textiles, will all rise. The result: a worse competitive position for American farmers and workers in world trade. At the time of the worst recession since the 1930's, the last thing we need is a policy to reduce American jobs and farm incomes and to add to inflationary pressures.

Among shippers, the greatest disadvantage could be expected to fall on small- and medium-sized shippers. The conferences and their members would have far greater motive for providing loyalty contracts and the volume and other discounts allowed under the bill to large-volume shippers. When such discounts are part of a monopolistic price-setting institution, they impose the maximum burdens on those shippers with the least leverage, typically the smaller ones.

Port cities will also be hurt. The reason is simple and logical, although there have been recent efforts to obscure the issue. The basic economic claim of the proponents is that the bill will facilitate rationalizing ocean liner operations. Rationalization merely means reducing excess capacity and, thereby, increasing load factors. At present, liner companies in the American trades do not curtail schedules and raise their vessel utilization for one simple reason: If they did, they would lose traffic to their rivals. Thus, the power to rationalize requires the power to keep independents out of the trade.

Rationalization to reduce excess capacity is, essentially, reducing frequency of service, calls per port and ports served—all specifically allowed in the Biaggi bill. Whatever the reductions in cost, the reduction in schedules and in ports served would exert downward pressure on the employment of and wages of longshoremen, pilots and tug crews, as well as on port revenues and economic activity in port cities. There is, incidentally, no reason to expect that the associated savings would be passed on to consumers.

The question of how large these reductions would be is uncertain and complex. However, the central fact is that the bill would either do nothing or it would lead to these negative pressures.

Montreal has recently gained traffic at the expense of New York and other American ports. According to American Shipper (September 1982, pp. 8 and 9) this is a consequence of difference in costs of operating through the ports. Under the Biaggi bill, if it were to the conferences' advantage to do so, they could set rates more favorable to moving through Montreal than through Boston, New York, or New Jersey ports. The requisite terms and conditions could, presumably, be defined to avoid blatant legal discrimination, and the burden of proof would be placed on the injured port to show that the particular rates—or other conditions of service were unjustly discriminatory under the act.

According to testimony of Mr. Lidinsky, director of traffic of the Port of Baltimore, before the Senate Judiciary Committee, the only remedy would be to provide unrestricted right of independent action to liner companies. That is not provided in the Biaggi bill. Port lobbyists in the past 2 weeks have sought a counterfoil to the increased power of the ocean liner cartels, in further extension of their own antitrust exemption. No provision has been made for that.

A particularly bizarre characteristic of this special-interest legislation is that it imposes costs on the American economy primarily for the benefit of foreign corporations. According to the Maritime Administration, 72 percent of American liner traffic was carried in foreign ships in 1982. Consequently, for every additional dollar in liner profits, 75 cents goes to foreign corporations. In some conferences, for example that controlling trade between the west coast and Australia, there are no American members.

The bill has been justified by its proponents in large measure on the grounds that the American-flag liner industry is in dire straits. In fact, at the request of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, the General Accounting Office prepared a major study which showed that the American-flag share of liner tonnages and value of cargo carried was higher in both absolute and relative terms in the period 1976-78 than in either 1966-70 or 1971-75. After requesting the report, the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee proceeded to report the bill without seeing the final GAO report or hearing testimony from the Comptroller General or his staff.

In addition, American liner companies who are seeking this concealed government bail out include:

Lykes Brothers Steamship Co. of New Orleans, a subsidiary of LTV, Inc. LTV is a $7-billion company that made after-tax profits of $96-million dollars in 1982, and in 1981 made after-tax profits of $365 million.

Sea-land, a subsidiary of R. J. Reynolds. Reynolds earned a net profit of $736 million in 1981 and is expected to earn some $900 million in 1982, total revenues amounted to $13.8 billion in 1981.

United States Lines, which has ordered 14 gigantic container ships from a Korean shipyard, estimated to cost $760 million. Obviously, U.S. Lines does not expect the American liner industry to collapse.

American President lines which is owned by Natomas, the energy conglomerate.

Delta Steamship Lines which is owned by Holiday Inns.

Another stock argument in support of the antitrust immunity is that antitrust laws have been differentially enforced to the disadvantage of American-flag carriers. The GAO staff examined this issue also, and reported:

GAO's analysis of 58 malpractice cases initiated by the FMC failed to show any evidence of an enforcement pattern biased against U.S. flag carriers.

A third common argument in support of this legislation is that it is needed to provide military logistics support. The United States does, in fact, need cargo ships as a military reserve. However, if this bill were in fact to increase the pool of vessels available in time of emergency, it would do so in the most inefficient way imaginable. Three quarters of the hidden subsidy would go not to American-flag companies, but to foreign operators, providing their governments—including Russia and Poland—with three quarters of whatever defense capability this strange legislation would produce. Further, if the bill really did work, as its advocates claim, to reduce excess capacity of the American ocean liner companies, it would, tautologically, reduce the capacity that would be available in time of emergency. The military argument is both convoluted and erroneous.

One of the worst consequences of enacting this legislation is the precedents it would set. The act would both permit monopolization and remove effective regulation. How could Congress deny any distressed American industry the privilege of cartelzation, once it has granted a foreign-dominated industry with a history of anticompetitive practices that privilege?

Under the circumstances it is not surprising that H.R. 4374 has been strongly opposed by recent editorials in the Wall Street Journal, the New York Times, and the Washington Post, as well as by such consumer and farm groups as the American Association of Retired Persons, the Association of Older Americans, Congress Watch, the Consumer Federation of America, the Consumers for World Trade, the Consumers Union, the League of Older Voters, the National Farmers Organization, the National Farmers Union, the National Institute of Economics and Law, and the Transportation Consumer Action Project.

It is a source of still further concern and dismay that the bill is being considered under suspension of the rules even though the need for the legislation has been challenged by the General Accounting Office, as well as the House Republican Research Committee, and has been opposed by the Federal Trade Commission and a number of outstanding economists.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, the arguments in favor of the bill are false. Further, the bill provides a bailout for an inefficient American industry—a bailout through a kind of offbudget financing by imposing the burden of monopolistic prices on American consumers and exporters. The bill will help the big—big companies and especially big shippers—at the expense of the small—small shippers, independent liner companies, and the smaller ports. The bill deprives the public of the protections of antitrust laws and weakens the penalties for violating the lax protections it does retain.

Mr. Speaker, in my judgment, such a bill should be defeated on the merits. I am also convinced that it will reflect poorly on the integrity of this body for such a controversial and complex measure to be adopted without full debate and the opportunity for amendment.

Therefore, I once again, urge the Members to vote no on the motion to suspend the rules.

I include the following documents in the RECORD:

NATIONAL INSTITUTE OF ECONOMICS AND LAW,
Washington, D.C., September 9, 1982.

DEAR MEMBER: On behalf of the National Institute of Economics and Law, we urge you to oppose the Biaggi Bill, H.R. 4374, known as the "Shipping Act of 1982." A new version of the bill, worked out by staff and never reviewed by any committee, may be brought to the floor under suspension of the rules on September 13.

Under the bill, international shipping cartels, dominated by foreign carriers, would be granted control of the American ocean liner trades. With insignificant exceptions, the bill gives the shipping cartels total immunity from the antitrust laws. Further, it reduces both the penalties for violations of the greatly weakened law and the civil damages recoverable from the liner companies.

The consequences are predictable. Prices charged in ocean liner services will rise—conservatively estimated—by 20 percent. One of the announced purposes of the bill is to permit the carriers to "rationalize" operations to increase vessel utilization. In plain English, this means reducing voyage frequencies and the ports served. The increase in the cost of transport will hurt consumers, farmers, other exporters and workers in export industries. "Rationalization," whatever its efficiency effects, will reduce port utilization and, hence, dockside jobs and port revenues.

We attach a statement signed by several prominent economists expressing their opposition to the bill. The bill is also opposed by farmer and consumer groups, such as Consumer Federation of America, Consumers for World Trade, Consumers Union, National Farmers Union and National Farmers Organization.

Sincerely,

ALLEN R. FERGUSON.
JEROME M. ZEIFMAN.

STATEMENT IN OPPOSITION TO H.R. 4374 AND S. 1593 THE PROPOSED SHIPPING ACT OF 1982

We, the undersigned economists strongly oppose H.R. 4374 and S. 1593. In our view, this special interest legislation would promote a wasteful use of our resources and worsen our terms of trade. Their purpose is to strengthen the ocean liner cartels (the "conferences") and to annul the current limited regulation of American liner trades by the Federal Maritime Commission (FMC).

The bills would impose on American consumers, importers, workers, farmers and other exporters a burden of subsidizing foreign liner companies. Three-quarters of the liner traffic is carried in foreign-flag ships; consequently, three out of every four dollars paid in excess rates would go to foreign companies and only one-quarter to American operators.

The bills provide a bail-out for an inefficient American industry—a bail-out that is provided through a kind of off-budget financing by imposing the burden of monopolistic prices on American consumers and exporters, rather than on the same individuals as taxpayers. They would tend to retard innovation and the growth of productivity, particularly in ocean shipping and indirectly in the American economy as a whole. Further, according to a recent General Accounting Office report, the U.S. flag liner fleet is not in a serious decline as alleged by the proponents of this act.

We object to the general thrust of this legislation. The bills grant to ocean liner companies and their cartels, in the words of the Senate version, "complete immunity from the antitrust laws," as well as immunity from any effective regulation by the Federal Maritime Commission. They would, thus, create legal, unregulated monopolies in an essential service that handles import and export shipments that amounted to $148 billion in 1981.

We oppose specific measures in the bills designed to implement these broad, anticompetitive purposes. The bills grant automatic antitrust exemptions for setting rates, pooling earnings and traffic, engaging in "exclusive, preferential, or cooperative working arrangements . . . to control, regulate, or prevent competition among themselves, and repeal a statutory preapproval requirement which has governed these arrangements for over 66 years." Three mechanisms are provided for granting discount rates to large shippers; at least one of these has no economic justification whatever, namely, loyalty contracts. The bills permit conferences to engage in predatory practices against operators of unscheduled ships. The option of triple damages under the antitrust laws is precluded and "No . . . punishment may be imposed for criminal conspiracy to violate . . . this Act. Further, even violators of the proposed law itself are to be free of antitrust prosecution. The bills would also permit cartelization of terminal operators in cooperation with conferences. Finally, they shift the burden of proof away from those proposing restrictive market practices to those seeking competitive markets.

We are also deeply concerned about the precedents set by H.R. 4374 and S. 1593. These Acts would both permit monopolization and remove effective regulation. This is unique at the federal level and leaves the economy in the worst of both worlds. These Acts are inconsistent with greater reliance on competitive markets; therefore, they are also imcompatible with the logic underlying the current wave of deregulation. How could Congress deny any distressed American industry the privilege of cartelzation, once it has granted a foreign-dominated industry with a history of anti-competitive practices that privilege? According to a recent GAO report the U.S. flag liner fleet is not in a serious state of decline.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF BEVERAGE IMPORTERS, INC.,
September 3, 1982.

Re H.R. 4374—omnibus shipping bill.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: On Monday, September 13 the captioned bill will come before the House of Representatives on a Motion to Suspend the Rules. I am addressing you on behalf of importers as well as American consumers to ask you to vote against the suspension of the rules on this bill. If the suspension motion carries, you should vote against the bill itself. A balanced view of this situation has already been outlined to you in a "Dear Colleague" letter of August 10 from Don Edwards. NABI supports his view.

Your further attention is directed to the "Dear Colleague" letter of August 12 by Mr. Biaggi in response to Don Edwards' position. Mr. Biaggi's letter is incomplete in apprising you of the true nature of this bill. The conclusion contains the observation that "H.R. 4374 would remove many of the restraints in our laws and its enactment would be in the best interests of all Americans."

Actually, passage of this bill would be in the best interests of shipping companies. This bill ignores the interests the average American who would have to pay the costs of higher freight rates which the bill would encourage.

The third paragraph of Mr. Biaggi's letter deals with the expanded antitrust exemption. It glosses this point in stating "the bill redraws the demarcation between the antitrust laws and regulation by the Federal Maritime Commission. The result is to clarify the law and make its application more certain and consistent."

In reality the bill extends the exemption for the carriers under the antitrust laws. It removes the Justice Department from surveillance over the carriers, and sets up the Federal Maritime Commission as the enforcement agency. The paltry record of the FMC speaks for itself, but even the new FMC enforcement authority would be sterilized. The net effect of Sections 7(a) and 10(a)(3) of the bill is to provide blanket immunity for the carriers from prosecution by the FMC and blanket immunity from private treble damage suits. Sec. 7(a)(2) provides that the antitrust laws do not apply to any activity that is undertaken by the carriers in the "reasonable belief" that it is pursuant to an agreement. To the same extent, Sec. 10(a)(3) states that any conduct that was undertaken by a common carrier in the "reasonable belief" that it was consistent with an agreement shall preclude assessment of damages under Section 4 of the Clayton Act.

Perhaps the most shocking part of this bill is that it would remove any public interest standard from the shipping laws. Public Law 87-346 wisely added a public interest standard which has been judicially construed and approved by the Supreme Court of the United States in FMC v. Svenska Amerika Linen (390 U.S. 238—1968).

Passage of H.R. 4374 would remove consideration of the public interest as a factor in judging the conduct of the shipping lines.

This bill deserves full floor debate, as it is highly controversial. We urge that you do not approve the suspension of the rules procedure. Should the motion carry, we ask that you vote against this bill.

REX D. DAVIS,
President.

WINE AND SPIRITS
WHOLESALERS OF AMERICA, INC.,
Washington, D.C., August 18, 1982.

Hon. DON EDWARDS,
Rayburn House Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN EDWARDS: WSWA, representing over 800 importing and wholesaling establishments throughout the United States, strongly opposes, in principle, H.R. 4374, the Shipping Act of 1982.

We import over 80 percent of the wines and spirits sold in this country. Our products are a significant factor in international commerce. For example, wines and spirits account for the largest volume category and most highly tariffed product on the westbound North Atlantic trade route.

The primary beneficiary of H.R. 4374 would be foreign, not domestic, ocean carriers. It would expand, not reduce, the scope of antitrust immunity now enjoyed at the expense of importers, exporters and the American consumer. The bill would remove, not expand, Department of Justice surveillance of these cartels. Criminal and civil antitrust suits recently have been successfully concluded aginst many of these carriers. The bill, moreover, runs contrary to the objectives of the Carter and Reagan Administrations to deregulate the transportation industries.

We appreciate your steadfast opposition to this legislation and efforts to protect American importers, exporters and consumers against rate-gouging by the shipping cartels.

Sincerely,

DOUG METZ.

NATIONAL FARMERS UNION,
Washington, D.C., August 12, 1982.

Re The Shipping Act of 1982, H.R. 4374.

Memorandum to: All Members of the House of Representatives.

From: Paul R. Sacia, Legislative Assistant.

DEAR MEMBER: On behalf of the National Farmers Union, we urge you to oppose H.R. 4374, the Shipping Act of 1982. This measure would increase the cost to American farmers of exporting cereals, fruits, vegetables, feed, fertilizer and other agricultural products by 20 percent, under conservative estimates.

As pointed out in the Journal of Commerce on July 13, 1982, only this year some maritime conferences have been so successful in reducing competition that they have raised their rates from $5 to $7 per ton. H.R. 4374 would serve to exacerbate the monopoly control over international shipping cartels and impose even greater shipping costs on American farmers.

It is also particularly distressing to us that $3 out of every $4 in increased shipping profits would go to the benefit of foreign carriers under H.R. 4374.

In our view, the proponents of this legislation have grossly misstated both the need for, and the affects of, this legislation. The recently released report by the General Accounting Office makes it clear that H.R. 4374 is special interest legislation which adversely affects both the American farmer and the American consumer.

Once again, we urge you to oppose this legislation and to oppose it being brought up on the floor of the House of Representatives. Thank you for your consideration.

CONSUMER FEDERATION OF AMERICA,
Washington, D.C., August 11, 1982.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE: On behalf of its over 200 organizations and their 35 million members, Consumer Federation of America urges you to oppose H.R. 4374. The title of this legislation, "A Bill to Improve the International Ocean Commerce Transportation System of the U.S.," could not be more misleading. In fact, H.R. 4374 is an industry and Administration attack on the antitrust laws that flies in the face of current efforts to end wasteful economic regulation. If successful, this antitrust exemption for the ocean liner industry would force American consumers, workers and farmers to subsidize not only the U.S. Merchant Marine but foreign shipping companies as well.

Aside from its deleterious impact on consumer prices and the demand for American farm products and industrial exports, H.R. 4374 would set a dangerous precedent by exempting an entire industry from the antitrust laws. Such an action would surely lead other industries to seek their own special waiver to act as cartelized monopolies. That would be a disaster for consumers and for the entire American economy. Accordingly, we request your strong opposition to H.R. 4374.

Sincerely,

STEPHEN BROBECK,
Executive Director.

CONSUMERS FOR WORLD TRADE,
Washington, D.C., September 7, 1982.

Re H.R. 4374, Omnibus Shipping Bill.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Consumers for World Trade (CWT), a national, nonprofit organization representing the consumer interest in international trade, urges you to vote against suspension of the rules on H.R. 4374. Passage of this bill would have a serious impact on American consumers and should not be rushed through without the benefit of full House debate.

H.R. 4374 would impose on American consumers the burden of subsidizing the U.S. merchant marine and foreign liner companies. The conference report of the Judiciary Committee indicates the net effect of the legislation would be to make consumers pay about 20% more in terms of freight or imported cargo. Furthermore, H.R. 4374 would jeopardize consumer protection from cartel pricing.

Should the motion to suspend the rules be approved, CWT urges you to vote against H.R. 4374.

BIG SHIPPING TRIES AN END RUN

The $15 billion cargo liner industry is hardpressed to explain why it needs exemption from the antitrust laws. So rather than risk an embarrassing debate, the industry is trying to slip through legislation when no one is looking. It will be up to House members who believe in competition to stop this end run.

Ocean-going cargo liners operate in a twilight zone between regulated cartel and open competition. Carriers using American ports are permitted to join "conferences" that fix rates, subject to oversight by the Federal Maritime Commission. But unlike those operating outside United States jurisdiction, these conferences must be open to all comers, making it difficult to fix rates above competitive levels.

The system doesn't work very well, partly because the Maritime Commission is notoriously inefficient. The industry complains of excessive paperwork and bureaucratic delays. Customers complain about inconsistent enforcement, which on occasion results in higher-then-competitive rates. Thanks, though, to the threat of antitrust prosecution, the system has not proved a total disaster.

The Carter Administration's economists talked hopefully of making it better; by eliminating the conference system, abolishing the commission and letting competition determine rates.

Not surprisingly, that is precisely the opposite of what the industry wants. It would like freedom from Justice Department scrutiny and more help from the Maritime Commission is enforcing its cartel agreements. With the aid of its chief promoter, Representative Mario Biaggi of New York, it has pushed an antitrust exemption bill through the House Merchant Marine and Judiciary Committees.

A number of Judiciary members, however—Republicans and Democrats—are crying foul. And in an ordinary floor debate, there would be a good chance to weaken the bill or destroy it altogether by amendment.

But key opponents of the suspension are out of the country or preoccupied with primary elections. If the bill's sponsors can suspend the House rules, prohibit amendments and limit debate to force a vote this week, they may succeed. But that requires a two-thirds majority. Good sense can prevail if a substantial minority of House members present object to this perverted free enterprise.

[From the Wall Street Journal, July 15, 1982]

TORPEDO THE MARITIME BILLS!

Legislation steaming through Congress would grant antitrust immunity to ocean freight lines participating in "conferences" that divide up cargo and trade routes, and pool revenues. There are three simple reasons why the bills, sponsored by Sen. Slade Gorton and Rep. Mario Biaggi, should be torpedoed.

The first is that cartels are bad. Our laws don't allow microchip makers or lumber distributors or pizza parlor operators to fix prices or divvy up markets. We don't give antitrust immunity to oil tankers, tramp steamers and grain boats, which account for most of the shipping tonnage in and out of U.S. ports. There is absolutely no reason to make an exception of cargo liners. Liner conferences, if they work, only raise freight prices.

The second is that the legislation is a diversion from the real problems afflicting most U.S.-flag operators; uncompetitive capital and operating costs, which result from the perverse incentives of a long history of government subsidies and regulations. U.S.-flag ships must hire American crews, and be subject to the featherbedding rules of U.S. maritime unions, leading to labor costs that are twice international levels.

What is more, the government has historically given operating subsidies to U.S.-flag operators who purchased ships from American yards, where construction costs are typically two to three times higher than abroad. It is no accident that the U.S. coastal trade, which has been reserved by law to U.S.-flag ships, has lost traffic to trucks and railroads.

The third is that antitrust immunity probably won't make much of a difference in today's shipping market. The world shipping industry has been clobbered by overcapacity during the last seven or eight years, thanks to the spendthrift subsidizing of shipbuilding and export-finance by governments from Sweden to South Korea.

As a result, conferences in the Pacific, North Atlantic and Europe-Far East routes have been powerless to keep their prices above market level for long—lest they be undercut by scrappy independent fleets out of Hong Kong and Singapore; by companies such as the U.S.-based Sea-Land Service, which has alternately participated in and broken away from the Pacific conference; and by bulk carriers, which have topped off their cargo with a little business that normally goes to freighters. Ironically, one of the biggest trust-busters has been the Soviet merchant marine, whose history of price-shading has provided Moscow with one of its few sources of foreign exchange.

If Congress really wants to help the shipping industry, it will phase out the subsidies and regulations that have discouraged many U.S.-flag fleets from reducing their costs to international levels.

[From the New York Times, July 14, 1982]

BEWARE THE CARGO SHIP CARTEL

It is the bizarre proposition of ocean shipping companies that they can increase their efficiency by further reducing their competition. With the support of President Reagan, they ask Congress to exempt them from the antitrust laws. Only by freeing ocean shippers to form cartels, they insist, can America build an effective merchant marine.

This would be reform in the wrong direction. The American merchant fleet is actually quite healthy. It would be healthier still if it relied less on Government aid and protection, and more on competitive markets.

Since the Great Depression, the Federal Government has spent about $10 billion in direct subsidies to keep the American merchant marine above water. Indirect aid has been worth billions more: a legal monopoly on coastal service, Federal rules requiring Government contractors to ship in American vessels, plus assorted loan guarantees and tax breaks.

Yet the industry keeps crying for more help. It says the number of cargo liners flying the American flag has been cut in half since 1970. Without extreme measures, the carriers insist, there will soon be no American oceangoing fleet.

Price-fixing of sorts already is permitted. Under current regulations, international "conferences" of shipping companies are allowed to set rates jointly, subject to the approval of the Federal Maritime Commission. Bills now offered by Mario Biaggi in the House and Slade Gorton in the Senate would remove this procedure from Government oversight and let the companies enforce the agreements by limiting their shipping capacity.

The Reagan Administration agrees to this cartelization because it hopes that higher prices to the private economy will relieve its budget of the annual subsidy of about $400 million.

It is not at all clear the American maritime industry needs this extraordinary protection. "Rather than indicating distress," reports the General Accounting Office, "the decline in the number of U.S. flag vessels . . . reflects significant changes in the type of ships used." New technology, notably containerization, has allowed a smaller fleet to carry as much cargo as before.

However unhealthy the industry may be, cartelization is a strange cure. If it allowed shipping companies to raise their rates by only 20 percent—a reasonable guess, according to the maritime economist Allen Ferguson—America's cargo shipping bill would increase by $3 billion a year. And since foreign flag carriers would share in the spoils, perhaps $2 billion of this total would end up in foreign hands.

Congress should certainly reexamine its maritime policy. The existing regulations stifle competition and stop carriers from quickly adjusting their rates and services to market conditions. The operating subsidies clearly destroy incentives to hold down wages; an American ship's master earns more than $200,000 a year, twice as much as Swedish or West German masters.

The Biaggi-Gorton approach would only make matters worse. America's shipping industry needs freedom to compete, not protection to charge whatever the traffic will bear.

[From the Washington Post, July 12, 1982]

THE HEALTHY FLEET

One of the premises of those who support continuation and extension of our system of maritime subsidies is that the U.S. maritime fleet is in great distress. We hear over and over again that ship owners register their vessels under flags of convenience, like those of Liberia and Panama, and that the number of U.S. flag veessels is declining. Now comes a report from the General Accounting Office, a preliminary draft of which has been obtained by The Post, which suggests that the maritime industry is in much better shape than it would like us to think.

The GAO analysts do not dispute the figures which show, for example, that the number of U.S. flag vessels has declined from 523 in 1970 to 256 in 1980. But they also direct our attention to the critical question of what kind of vessels these are. The 1970s saw a vast increase of "containerization," the process that permits cargo to be loaded in one vast package rather than item by item. As a result, a given amount of cargo can be loaded and shipped more rapidly by containerized ships than by the kind of methods used in 1970. So it takes fewer vessels to transport the same amount of cargo. The GAO concludes that the shipping capacity of the U.S. merchant fleet has not therefore declined as the figures on the number of ships would suggest.

The GAO report undercuts the arguments made by shipping interests that their industry needs special federal help, notably the exemption from the antitrust laws that recently passed the Senate and seems about to pass the House. On the contrary, the report indicates that the U.S. flag merchant fleet is profitable, well-equipped and able to compete with carriers operating under other flags. The best argument the industry can extract from the report, in our view, is of the if-it-ain't-broke-don't-fix-it variety; with the current complex system of subsidies, the U.S. merchant fleet is doing fairly well, so the system, however offensive to free-market purists, should be left alone.

We take another view. American consumers should not have to pay the cost of subsidies that provide vast benefits to a few and then pass along heavy costs to the rest of us. Some plans the Reagan administration is considering to reduce subsidies are good; others, such as the antitrust exemption, that would increase costs to consumers, are not. It is still not clear whether the main purpose of the administration's plans is to reduce subsidies or just to shift the burden of subsidization from the federal budget to consumers' budgets. In the meantime, the GAO report serves the useful purpose of discrediting the lugubrious reports of the maritime industry's demise and directing the debate toward the twin questions of what, if anything, should be subsidized and by whom.

[From the Washington Post, June 30, 1982]

GAO: No Need for Major Shipping Law Revisions

(By Thomas W. Lippman)

With Congress about to act on bills to give sweeping antitrust immunity and regulatory relief to the U.S. maritime industry, the General Accounting Office has concluded that the economic condition of much of the merchant fleet is far better than generally believed and "does not justify a major revision" of existing shipping law.

The GAO's finding that the U.S.-flag liner fleet is not in the state of decline ascribed to it runs counter to a long series of SOS signals about the fleet issued by the industry, congressional committees and independent researchers in recent years, and is likely to be disputed vigorously by industry lobbyists.

The GAO report is apparently an abbreviated version of a study initiated four years ago and circulated for comment to interested groups in January but never made public. Congressional sources said the new study is to be released soon.

It says that the U.S.-flag liner fleet—the vessels carrying manufactured goods and general cargo on scheduled international routes—is generally profitable, well-equipped and capable of competing with foreign shipping lines.

The sharp decline in the number of American-flag vessels in this service in the past decade is the result not of "general chronic distress" but of modernization and the acquisition of big container ships that carry more cargo in less time at lower cost, the report says. Although "valid reasons exist" for changing shipping law to favor the carriers, "The GAO does not believe the current condition of the general-cargo-loner segment of the U.S. merchant marine is among them," the report says.

It also says that the decline in the number of ship operating companies from 19 to nine was caused not by overall erosion of the industry or by flaws in maritime law but by competitive forces and the demands of capital investment in containerized equipment, which are invigorating to the industry.

These conclusions appear to support the claims of consumer groups who argue that the proposed grant of blanket antitrust immunity and authorizaton for the carriers to enter cartels would require consumers and exporters to subsidize the liner fleet unnecessarily. But it is not clear whether they will have any impact on legislation that has been making its way through Congress since last summer, with the backing of the administration.

One congressional source said yesterday that the main conclusions of the GAO's analysis have been known on Capitol Hill for some time and are unlikely now to undercut legislation that has bipartisan support. But another said it would "cast doubt on some of the arguments for the legislation . . ."

A Senate version of the bill awaiting floor action would confer antitrust immunity on the carriers, authorize them to join international groups of shipping companies to control rates and schedules and lift some regulation of rates and schedules. A similar bill cleared the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee and is undergoing review in the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWARDS of California. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SEIBERLING. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I concur in what the gentleman from California said. Let me just add that this bill would legitimize actions which otherwise would be criminal violations of the antitrust laws, that would subject companies to large fines up to a million dollars and prison sentences for the executives who engaged in them. Yet this bill would legitimize these.

The Judiciary Committee did the best job they could under the circumstances to remove some of the worst features that were in the original bill.

Nevertheless, it is highly controversial. It should not be brought up under suspension. In my opinion it is an abuse of the right to bring up bills under suspension.

For these reasons, I intend to vote against it.

● Mrs. SCHNEIDER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in opposition to consideration of H.R. 4374, a bill to exempt the merchant marine industry from antitrust laws, under suspension.

I supported this bill in committee because I believe it deserves debate on the floor. However, I think passing it under suspension, without discussion and possibility of amendment, is inappropriate.

My concerns are that H.R. 4374 would expressly allow the merchant marine industry to "discuss, fix, and regulate or prevent competition among themselves" and where antitrust exemptions are deemed necessary, we must follow regular order. In addition, the benefits of this bill may go largely to the foreign carriers, since more than 70 percent of American import and export liner traffic is carried by foreign carriers.

I urge my colleagues, therefore, to vote against this legislation under suspension.●

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that each side be granted an additional 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. McCLOSKEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks, and to include extraneous matter, on the bill under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCLOSKEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California (Mr. CLAUSEN).

Mr. CLAUSEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this legislation. I want to commend the committee. This legislation is, in fact, designed to correct many of the shortcomings in existing law and to reaffirm some of the antitrust immunity provisions regarding ocean common carriers which many feel have been eroded since the enactment of the 1916 Shipping Act.

I thank the gentleman very much for yielding to me and commend the committee for their action.

□ 1245

Mr. McCLOSKEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, before yielding to other Republicans who wish to speak, I would like to address a challenge to my friends on the Judiciary Committee who have opposed this legislation because it expands somewhat the antitrust exemption granted the shipping industry.

I would remind those advocates of antitrust enforcement that back in 1914, the Alexander Committee of Congress made a recommendation when we were faced with choosing between antitrust immunity for shipping conferences and so-called free competition or the obliteration of conferences. That recommendation in 1914, and the decision of Congress in 1916 was to grant immunity from the antitrust law to shipping conferences provided that they were appropriately regulated by what has now become the Federal Maritime Commission.

Now, that decision, right or wrong, has been made by every trading country in the world. The United States, when we created our conferences in the 1916 act, created open conferences so that people who wanted to join the conferences had the right to do so. In the rest of the world, the shipping conferences, between the Far East and Europe, between Europe and Africa, are so-called closed conferences, giving much stronger antitrust immunity to the foreign shipping companies than is given to the companies of the United States under U.S. law.

Now, what led to this bill today, which is the product not just of this Congress, but of two prior Congresses, and studies made in those Congresses about the penalties that were befalling U.S. shippers and U.S. consumers because of our open conference system? The key facts that I want to challenge those who advocate strong antitrust enforcement to meet are these. I want to quote two simple statements from a study of ocean rate disparities made by Booz, Allen & Hamilton, in June of 1978. That study and the two conclusions I will quote furnished the primary basis for this legislation.

Conclusion No. 1. Ocean liner freight rates are 32-percent higher for outbound commodities than for similar inbound commodities on the same trade route.

This means that American exporters who are shipping goods overseas are paying 32 percent more under our current law to ship those goods than are the people that are shipping the same imports into this country.

Now, conclusion No. 2 under existing law:

Ocean freight rates paid by U.S. exporters are over 100 percent greater than those paid by exporters from an alternative source country to a third market.

Now, note what that means. That means that if American manufacturers shipping refrigerators to the West Coast of Africa are competing with German manufacturers of refrigerators to the west coast of Africa, the American shippers, with our open conference system, will be paying twice as much, a hundred percent greater freight rates.

Now, those two conclusions, that we pay higher rates going out of this country than for goods shipped in, and the fact that we are paying twice as much as our German and Japanese competitors, who have closed conferences, led the Merchant Marine Committee after literally 6 years of study to come up with this bill which would try to change some of the imbalance that is now enjoyed by our European competitors.

Now, those facts, if those of you who feel that it is wrong to slightly increase the antitrust exemption for the shipping industry from what it is today, I would ask you to defend why you want to keep the status quo if, indeed, we are having to pay twice as much as our competitors in the European community and in Japan at a time when increasing U.S. exports is a primary goal of U.S. trade policy.

Mr. Speaker, I am glad to yield 10 minutes to the gentleman who I understand is my chief protagonist, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER).

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I oppose H.R. 4374 on substantive grounds because it greatly expands the limited antitrust exemption accorded the maritime industry, because it significantly reduces the remedies available for wrongdoing, because it would allow the complete elimination of competition by the creation of monopolies, because it would hurt consumers who buy imported goods, because it would hurt farmers, manufacturers, and workers who wish to export, because it would reduce calls made on American ports resulting in revenue and employment losses, because it would create an inefficient subsidy for our carriers that would be realized in the main by foreign carriers, including those of Communist countries, and because it would repeal the requirement that conferences act in the public interest. Indeed, this bill is not in the public interest. it not only tramples on the charter of economic liberties, as the Supreme Court has called our antitrust laws, it tramples on the Constitution itself, as the chairman of the Subcommittee on Civil and Constitutional Rights noted in his dissenting views. It is no mere coincidence that the chairman of that subcommittee and its ranking Republican member both oppose this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I also oppose H.R. 4374 on procedural grounds. As Mr. MCCLORY, the ranking Republican member of the Judiciary Committee, explained in a letter to you, Mr. Speaker, this bill should not be brought up under suspension for five reasons.

First, you do not put bills on suspension in order to close off important amendments. But that is what is being done here. The Republicans on the Judiciary Committee were committed to an amendment offered by Mr. MCCLORY which the Justice Department considered critical to the legislation—an amendment to get the Federal Maritime Commission out of the business of enforcing the price-fixing agreements of the cartels. It is bad enough that we authorize price fixing in this industry, but we do not have to spend our tax dollars on hiring Federal employees to make certain that the price-fixing agreement is not violated. But the cartels want the free help; they are afraid that the amendment might pass; that is why we are gagged.

Second, a majority of the Democratic members on the Judiciary Committee voted against this legislation in committee. Normally, the leadership does not treat the majority party's position so lightly.

Third, this bill is extremely complicated. It is highly controversial, drawing fire from our Nation's most respected newspapers and from Nobel Prize winning economists. It is condemned by an excellent analysis of the House Republican Research Committee. And it hardly measures up to the thorough analysis of the General Accounting Office, which was somewhat ironically requested by the bill's proponents. Moreover, the bill is poorly drafted. It is full of contradictions. For example, provisions authorizing price discrimination abound yet are weighed against a provision prohibiting discrimination. Provisions authorizing pooling of revenues and costs are posed against a lone provision affirming antitrust merger policy. This legislation, therefore, deserves more than a cursory discussion for a maximum of 40 minutes on a day before the Speaker's primary. In fact, 11 States and the District of Columbia have primaries tomorrow.

Fourth, the bill is burdened by an unconstitutional provision which under the suspension procedure cannot be corrected. Under the bill, the ocean carriers are permitted to fix the rates. While they may do so under current law, the important difference is that today the FMC may under section 18(b)(5) veto any rate which is so high or so low as to be injurious to U.S. commerce. The bill before us repeals the FMC's authority to protect U.S. commerce from injurious rates but nevertheless continues the FMC's responsibility to see that no one deviates from these rates, even if they be injurious to our commerce. In other words, the carriers alone set the policy but the Government enforces it. This is exactly the kind of delegation of congressional authority which the Supreme Court condemned as unconstitutional in the famous cases of Schechter Poultry Corp. v. United States, 295 U.S. 495 (1935), and Carter v. Carter Coal Co., 298 U.S. 238 (1936).

This unconstitutionality can be remedied by reinstating section 81(b)(5) or by eliminating FMC enforcement of private rates. But since that is not possible under the suspension procedure, Mr. Speaker, the only recourse for those who take seriously their oath to uphold the Constitution will be to vote against the pending motion.

Fifth, until the last minute, the House has been kept in the dark on this bill. The bill before us is not the bill reported by the Merchant Marine Committee. The bill before us is not the bill reported by the Judiciary Committee. No; the bill before us does not come from any committee but rather was drawn up by a couple of staffers who, I might add, were not elected by anyone. While a privileged few know its contents, the House has not had a reasonable opportunity to study and analyze. Thus the only safe vote is a "no" vote.

Proponents suggest that this bill is another in a long line of popular regulatory reform bills. But that slogan ill suits this bill. Whereas prior regulatory reform bills were procompetitive, this bill is anticompetitive. While prior bills achieved deregulation, this bill merely effectuates weaker regulation. This bill is no reform. It is special interest legislation.

Why is that? First, it basically removes the Justice Department from the maritime scene. The Antitrust Division, you see, has become a real nuisance, defending competitive principles and consumer interests. Instead, the bill leaves the FMC in charge, with reduced authority and little will to exercise it.

Second, the bill basically eliminates criminal penalties; they exist only for those foolish enough not to file their agreements and wait the requisite time for the agreement to go into effect. But once an agreement has gone into effect, criminal penalties are eliminated.

Third, the bill eliminates the treble damage remedy now available to private injured parties. Whereas today an injured party may go to court to collect treble damages under the antitrust laws, under this legislation that party may not be entitled to anything unless he can convince the FMC that one of the internally inconsistent prohibitions has been violated, in which case he may collect single damages or in certain rare instances, up to double damages. But in summary not only is the amount of damages reduced, the forum is made less favorable to plaintiffs, and the situations in which any recovery is authorized are substantially curtailed.

Fourth, the bill eliminates the requirement of present law that carriers act in the public interest. This hardly inadvertant; it may, in fact, be the main reason for the bill. The justification of this incredible provision is that it takes too much time to decide if proposed conduct is in the public interest. I think we should nip this kind of rationalization in the bud, lest we hear pleas to legalize murder because of cases where trial, appeal, habeas corpus, and retrial have taken too long. Courts have said that the public interest standard embodies our national commitment to principles of competition. Thus, today, common carriers may carry on activities authorized under the Shipping Act but must do so in the least anticompetitive way. Under this legislation, carriers will be free to operate contrary to the public interest and in the most anticompetitive way. And as if this were not enough, the burden of proof is placed on the public interest. Today, the proponent of an anticompetitive agreement has the burden of proving that it fulfills an important transportation need or Shipping Act policy. In contrast, this bill shifts the burden to the opponent who must overcome the presumption of validity accorded to all agreements to demonstrate that the agreement in question violates one or more of the specific prohibitions. In such a proceeding it will be irrelevant that the agreement is repugnant to the public interest, grossly anticompetitive, contrary to our transportation needs, or injurious to U.S. commerce. For such values often engender discussion, and discussion takes time, and the purpose of this bill is to eliminate such delay. Thus we are asked to lay aside such considerations.

Perhaps the following example will make my point clear. Imagine the classic situation of six common carriers in a conference being given fierce competition by an independent. Under the bill the conference carriers could direct an ongoing joint venture or consortium formed out of some of them to engage in predatory practices to drive the independent out of the trade. While the bill may in limited instances prohibit the formation of joint ventures for such a purpose, it is totally permissive with respect to the operation of an ongoing concern. The House clearly has distinguished between the formation and the operation of joint ventures as recently as last month, when it passed H.R. 5235, the Foreign Trade Improvements Act of 1982. What is more, this bill would permit even the formation of joint ventures to engage in predatory practices if it resulted in gains in efficiency or services which offset the loss of the competitor. And, remember, the burden of proof would always be on the good guy, the party attempting to vindicate our national policy of free and open competition.

What my example illustrates is the point made by the Federal Trade Commission in testifying before the Judiciary Committee: that it is not possible to list every possible antitrust violation in the form of specific, concrete prohibitions. Such a list merely invites creative lawyers to alter a factor for their clients to create licenses to violate the antitrust laws.

Fifth, to show that one need not labor too hard to find how outrageous this bill is, the bill now before us would permit the creation of monopolies. Ironically, the bill reported by the Judiciary Committee would have expressly prohibited monopolization. But the nameless, unelected authors of this bill decided to take it out. So, it would appear that the legislative history is clear. There is nothing to stop all the carriers in a given trade from combining into one giant conference and then charging any rate they wish. Why else would this bill have stricken the express prohibition against monopolization and the express authority of the FMC to veto excessive rates? The best that proponents can say is that this is unlikely to happen. But monopolization is attempted even when it is prohibited. Why should we risk the possibility of monopolization by so clearly inviting it?

When all factors are considered, the reason for this legislation is not regulatory reform of the FMC but rather a greatly expanded antitrust exemption for ocean common carriers. The desire to enact this legislation, as bad as it is, is prompted by the declining popularity and feasibility of subsidies for the maritime industry. With reduced subsidies in their future, the carriers grew restless. And what was once an on-budget subsidy was transformed by this legislation into an off-budget subsidy of congressionally approved monopoly overcharges. The problem is that there is no controlling this off-budget subsidy. We will never get to vote yes or no, or to set the level of monopoly profits. Nonetheless, American manufacturers and American consumers will be paying the subsidy. And what makes this transformation such a bad bargain is that U.S. carriers serve only 30 percent of our trade. Thus 70 percent of all the monopoly overcharges generated by this legislation would flow into foreign hands.

But who cares about this off-budget subsidy? Not the carriers who will enjoy larger profits. Not the Seafarers Union who hope to gain even better wages for American crewmen, who already enjoy pay schedules twice as high as those of any other country. Not the big shippers who you may see on Capitol Hill lobbying for this legislation because they are basically exempt from the evils of this legislation. They will be able to protect themselves with service contracts, time-volume rates, tailormade tarriffs, and other devices to gain discounts at the expense of other shippers—those who are not big enough to lobby here. So who cares?

The American people care. These are the people for whom the antitrust laws were written. These are the people who benefit from competition in prices and services. These are the people for whom the public interest standard was written into the Shipping Act. These are the people who will pay the off-budget subsidy, which sloppily will benefit foreign carriers more than our own. These are the people I will be thinking of when I cast my vote on this bill.

So I urge the Members of this House to follow the advice of Nobel Prize winning economists, our leading newspapers, the GAO report, and the House Republican Research Committee to vote for the American people and against this special-interest legislation.

Mr. KINDNESS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. KINDNESS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding. I would like to associate myself with the gentleman's remarks in opposition to the measure.

I would ask this question in relation to the challenge that was presented to justify the opposition to the bill in relation to shipping costs.

Is it not correct that the personnel costs on U.S.-fleet ships are almost twice the personnel costs of the foreign shippers that are shipping minus these provisions?

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. McCLOSKEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SEIBERLING).

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman made two points. One was that Congress enacted the 1916 act which gave exemption from the antitrust laws to the conferences; but of course, Congress did so under the theory that the Federal Maritime Commission was going to regulate this industry and make sure that unreasonable and excessive rates were not granted.

Now, I agree that it eventually became a captive agency and, in effect, was not doing the job that it should have; but nevertheless, that was the theory of the 1916 act.

Now we are scrapping that regulatory authority. It is true the bill expressly prohibits some aspects of cartel practices; but, of course, it retains the open cartel for American carriers; so I do not see what the gentleman's point was about opening the cartel.

□ 1300

Mr. McCLOSKEY. Let me try to make the point: The gentleman objects to the FMC having jurisdiction and the gentleman would like to have the Antitrust Division have the jurisdiction. The problem with that is that we are not dealing with domestic intercourse or domestic competition; we are dealing with international conferences.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McCLOSKEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume, and I will yield to the gentleman from Ohio to reply to this point.

The U.S. Government is dealing with a shipping conference which may have seven foreign company members and one U.S. liner company as a member and is, thus, looking to the Antitrust Division to enforce against all eight companies the antitrust laws of the United States extraterritorially.

The other seven countries may be Great Britain, the Netherlands, France, our trading partners, our allies in NATO. Those countries, however, have almost universally enacted blocking statutes to prevent our antitrust enforcers and U.S. law enforcement agencies from getting the records of the foreign companies.

The result is that it is much easier to enforce the antitrust laws of the United States against the U.S. company than it is against the foreign companies in the same conference with whom we are competing.

This has led, in the committee's view, to the general degradation and diminution of the strength of the U.S. merchant marine.

We have in other laws the responsibility to provide for a strong U.S. merchant marine. Yet, the strong antitrust enforcement which is effective against U.S. companies is not as effective against their competitors and we are thus seeking a balance here between very valid principles which the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SEIBERLING) espouses, the antitrust law which I also espouse, and yet which recognizes the realities of world trade, which is that the closed conferences used by our competitors in other countries is beyond our reach entirely, and in the United States conferences which are partially within our reach this kind of enforcement penalizes U.S. shipping in competition with its foreign competitors.

Now, in this search for balance, I think it is clear we have to accept some antitrust immunity. The question is how much and to what extent?

It is one thing for a committee that has spent 15 years studying this issue and come up with legislation to try to reach that balance, and another for a group of idealists on another committee who understandably do not want to see the antitrust laws diminished in their scope, but who are making its arguments without reference to the real trading world in which U.S. shipping is faced with competition every day.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. McCLOSKEY. I would be glad to yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SEIBERLING. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I do not think we are as powerless as the gentleman suggests. There is a very simple device that the United States can use to obtain compliance with the antitrust laws with respect to any carrier, foreign or domestic; namely as a condition of doing trade with the United States, require that the carriers comply with the antitrust laws.

That would take care of the whole thing.

Mr. McCLOSKEY. I wish the gentleman had sat with me in a series of conferences that, through the auspices of our State Department, have been held with our allies, Great Britain, Norway, the Netherlands, West Germany, and others, urging that the United States should not exercise that right to urge extraterritorial enforcement of our antitrust laws on our trading partners and our allies.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further to me?

Mr. McCLOSKEY. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SEIBERLING. I thank the gentleman for yielding further to me.

Mr. Speaker, we do have the right to require businesses to respect our laws as a condition of doing business in or with the United States.

Mr. McCLOSKEY. We may have the right to enforce U.S. law on the high seas but we would be using it to penalize conduct which under foreign law is perfectly proper and legal.

Now, if the gentleman were to urge that foreign law is upping freight rates, that would be one thing. But under foreign law, the freight rates of exporters from Europe to Africa are half what they are in the United States. That fact is what led the committee to reach the conclusion that it is best that we broaden the antitrust exemption of U.S. shipping companies so we could attain a greater proportion of the export trade and contribute to our export trade imbalances.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. McCLOSKEY. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SEIBERLING. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I must say that the gentleman loses me. If we had the antitrust laws in full force and effect with respect to all ocean shipping entering and leaving U.S. ports, we would not have the situation that freight rates to and from the United States are higher. Competition would take care of that.

Mr. McCLOSKEY. I understand that completely. But does the United States have the right to be the new imperialist and say that all of our laws are going to apply to all of the foreign trade in the world?

We do not have that right. We do not have that privilege any longer.

Mr. SEIBERLING. We have that right to the extent that they enter our ports.

Mr. McCLOSKEY. We may have that right, but we lose our allies and our trading partners in the process.

That is the search for balance that the committee is seeking.

Mr. RODINO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. McCLOSKEY. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. RODINO. I thank the gentleman for yeilding.

Mr. Speaker, the mere fact that we are having this dialog shows how difficult it is, and it has been, for the committees to resolve this question. Now I, as one who has been a strong advocate of antitrust enforcement, recognize that there was some merit on the side of those who were arguing for exemption and expansion. However many difficult and complex issues remain and it is for this reason that we have written into the bill the provisions requiring that a Presidential study commission review this total subject. I think that is the answer to it.

Mr. McCLOSKEY. I have to concede that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that when we enacted the law in 1916 and have seen literally 66 years of experience under the law, that none of us can be quite sure about what kind of abuses may develop and the Presidential study commission is a very proper addition to this act.

It may be 2 or 4 years from now that we will find there are changes we want to make in this provision. But it is clear after 66 years of experience that the current status quo is destroying the U.S. merchant marine, making U.S. exporters pay higher rates and hurting U.S. manufacturers.

For all of those reasons, it seems to me this law ought to pass.

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. McCLOSKEY. I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, I want to associate myself with the remarks of my colleague, the gentleman from California, and I rise in support of the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to say the bill does not expand the kind of activities eligible for immunity; it just simply redefines those.

Mr. Speaker, one of the significant elements of this comprehensive legislation concerns the antitrust exemption. As there has been some misunderstanding about this, I would point out to the House that this element of this bill is intended to clarify the original antitrust immunity which has been in force since passage of the Shipping Act in 1916. The bill does not expand the kinds of activities eligible for such immunity. The legislation will correct the procedures presently followed in order to reinstate certainty and predictability in the regulation of liner shipping in our foreign commerce.

Additionally, H.R. 4374 is not intended to favor any particular flag operator. In this regard, it is flag blind.

The bill gives recognition to the need for international comity in liner shipping. As the House is aware, the extraterritorial enforcement of U.S. antitrust laws to ocean liner services has created unnecessary friction with our trading partners.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, permit me to observe that the proposed legislation will adequately protect shippers and carriers as well as provide a more efficient and certain procedure for reparations for violations of the Shipping Act.

I strongly urge my colleagues to support this landmark ocean regulatory legislation.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for 30 seconds?

Mr. McCLOSKEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SEIBERLING. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. McCLORY offered a very important amendment in the Committee on the Judiciary; I offered two important amendments. They received considerable support, though not enough to pass. We should have the opportunity to offer them on the House floor. This is an important bill. It should be fully and thoroughly explored on the floor.

We do not need a study commission. We have a lot of experts here. What we need is to have a full debate on this bill.

Mr. McCLOSKEY. Mr. Speaker, I wish that we could have the time. My understanding is that the legislative calendar is so backed up that the only chance to get this important legislation passed this year was on the suspension calendar, and that is the reason it is here.

I hope we can resolve in conference some of the difficulties. I particularly want to commend the Committee on the Judiciary for adding the provision relating to shippers' councils because as we give greater power to the shipping conferences, it seems to me we should balance that economic power with the power of the shippers' councils.

Mr. Speaker, I was delighted when the Committee on the Judiciary added that provision. I hope that the Department of Justice's known antipathy to shippers' councils can be avoided. I gather it has been, because shippers' councils seem to me to be a necessary counterbalance to the strength that we will be giving the shipping conferences under this bill.

Mr. RODINO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. McCLOSKEY. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. RODINO. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, This morning I received a letter from the Department of Justice objecting to provisions in the bill that would remove the Department's authority to litigate in court cases involving the Federal Maritime Commission. The Judiciary Committee has always sought to protect the Department's authority to litigate all cases involving the Government. I have been a strong advocate of this position since I believe it is the responsibility of the Attorney General to be the litigator for the Government.

Unfortunately, this matter was not called to my attention until a few minutes ago. While we are not in a position to correct this problem now, I will do what I can to correct this problem in any conference we may have with the Senate. I understand that Chairman JONES is prepared to work with us in making this correction.

The letter reads as follows:

ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL,
LEGISLATIVE AFFAIRS,
Washington, D.C., September 13, 1982.

Hon. PETER W. RODINO, Jr.
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary, House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: As you are aware, on September 13, 1982, the House of Representatives is scheduled to consider H.R. 4374, a bill "to improve the international ocean commerce transportation system of the United States." Sections 14(e), 14(f), and 13(c) of the bill, as reported by the Committees on the Judiciary and Merchant Marine and Fisheries would divest the Attorney General of some of his authority to conduct the litigation of the United States. Enclosed is a copy of the Department's report, as cleared by the Office of Management and Budget, which sets forth our position on similar provisions in S. 1593, the Senate counterpart to H.R. 4374.

Sincerely,

ROBERT A. MCCONNELL,
Assistant Attorney General.

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE
Washington, D.C., April 28, 1982.

Hon. BOB PACKWOOD,
Chairman, Committee on Commerce, Science and Transportation, U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: This presents the views of the Department of Justice on sections 15 and 16 of S. 1593, a bill, "To revise regulation of international liner shipping operating in the United States foreign commerce."

Section 15 would authorize the Federal Maritime Commission (the "FMC") to assess civil penalties for violations, and provides for review, enforcement action, and compromise by the FMC. Section 16 authorizes attorneys of the Federal Maritime Commission to institute legal action in the courts of the United States, independent of the Attorney General, for the enforcement of orders of the FMC. The granting of this authority to the Federal Maritime Commission is in conflict with present law governing the authority and responsibility of the Attorney General of the United States. The Department of Justice opposes the enactment of these sections.

Historically, the Attorney General has exercised plenary responsibility over the conduct of the legal affairs of the United States. Act of September 24, 1789, 1 Stat. 73. See also United States v. San Jacinto Tin Co., 125 U.S. 273, 279 (1888); Confiscation Cases, 7 Wall. (74 U.S.) 457-58 (1868). The responsibility to conduct the litigation of the United States was first given greater statutory recognition in the act which created the Department of Justice, Act of June 22, 1870, 16 Stat. 162, and is now primarily codified at sections 516 and 519 of Title 28, which reserve the conduct of litigation involving the United States to the Attorney General and the Department of Justice "[e]xcept as otherwise authorized by law.[1]

This statutory assignment of plenary litigating authority to the Attorney General centralizes the conduct of litigation on behalf of the United States and thereby furthers a number of important policy goals. It allows the presentation of uniform positions on important legal issues, ensures that government lawyers will be able to select test cases which present the government's position in the best possible light, and gives the Attorney General authority over lower court proceedings so that government litigation will be better handled on appeal and before the Supreme Court. It provides for greater objectivity in the filing and handling of cases by attorneys who are not themselves affected litigants.

Legislation, such as sections 15(c), 15(d) and 16(e) of S. 1503, seeks to bestow independent litigating authority on other federal agencies and departments, and therefore amend, in effect 28 U.S.C. §§ 516. This is inconsistent with the salutary function of the Attorney General and would permit each such agency to make its position the government's position of the day. As the Fifth Circuit has indicated in I.C.C. v. Southern Railway Co., 543 F.2d 534, 535 (5th Cir. 1976), such a result is not in the interest of the government, nor would it be well received in the courts.

The kinds of orders and civil penalty assessments which the Federal Maritime Commission will issue in enforcing S. 1593 if it should become enacted are not essentially different from the kinds of orders and assessments which other regulatory commissions and agencies issue in enforcing their statutes. When it becomes necessary to enforce agency orders and assessments in judicial proceedings, the Department of Justice has generally been responsible for the management of the litigation on behalf of the government. This is but part of the Attorney General's overall responsibility for the supervision and conduct of the government's litigation in the courts of the United States.[2]

In summary, the Department of Justice objects to sections 15 and 16 of S. 1593 in that they grant independent litigating authority to the Federal Maritime Commission and undermines the authority of the Attorney General to conduct litigation to recover civil penalty assessments of the FMC. We are aware of no reason that would call for a departure from the authority and control of the Attorney General set forth in present law. We recommend that section 16(f) be deleted and that the following sections be amended to read as follows:

"15(d) ACTION UPON FAILURE TO PAY ASSESSMENT—If any person fails to pay an assessment of a civil penalty after it has become final and an unappealable order, or after the appropriate court has entered final judgment in favor of the Commission, the Commission shall refer the matter to the Attorney General of the United States. In such action, the validity and appropriateness of the final order imposing the civil penalty shall not be subject to review.

"15(e) LITIGATION—All litigation arising under this Act shall be conducted by the Attorney General of the United States pursuant to section 516 of Title 28, United States Code.

"16(c) ENFORCEMENT OF NONREPARATION ORDERS—In case of violation of any order of the Commission, or for failure to comply with a Commission subpena, the Commission, through the Attorney General, pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 516, or any party injured by such violation, may seek enforcement by any United States district court having jurisdiction over the parties. If after hearing, the court determines that the order was properly made and duly ordered, it shall enforce the order by an appropriate information or other process, mandatory, or otherwise."

The Office of Management and Budget has advised this Department that there is no objection to the submission of this report from the standpoint of the Administration's program.

Sincerely,

ROBERT A. MCCONNELL,
Assistant Attorney General,
Office of Legislative Affairs.

I would like to ask the gentleman from California whether or not he agrees with me that if this matter is developed in conference, that we do whatever is possible to assure that this is the case.

I have always been an advocate of this position. I think it is important and I would like to say that the Committee on the Judiciary has not been derelict, unfortunately, because the letter was addressed to me only today, it has just come to my attention.

Mr. McCLOSKEY. I am in the same situation. I just saw the letter a few minutes ago.

If the point is valid, I think we should try to iron it out in conference.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman.

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HUGHES).

Mr. HUGHES. I thank the gentleman from North Carolina for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary and the chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries in support of this legislation.

As one of the two Members of the House who is fortunate to serve on both committees, I am most gratified that the two committees have been able to work together to produce what I think is a reasonably balanced piece of legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I share many of the concerns expressed by my colleague from Ohio and I wish we lived in the ideal world where we could apply antitrust legislation extraterritorially, but we have to take the facts as they are. There are two objectives to this bill which I think we can all agree on: The first is the need to speed up and simplify the regulatory process of the Federal Maritime Commission.

Unfortunately, this agency has not been known for its dispatch in dealing with regulatory matters. The bill we consider today contains a provision that requires the Federal Maritime Commission to make a decision on all agreements within 45 days of the date they are filed, with a right to suspend this decision no more than 180 additional days.

A second and equally important objective of this bill is the effort to create greater certainty as to the types of activities which the carriers can or cannot engage in. It substitutes for the much maligned "public interest" test a more specific list of prohibited acts which will guide the Maritime Commission in regulating concerted activities.

The bill before us today does not accord the total antitrust immunity many in the industry would like to have. It does, however, draw a clearer line of demarcation between antitrust and shipping regulation. It eliminates most private treble-damage suits but installs in their place a sure and effective reparations remedy under the Shipping Act. An injured person can recover the amount of actual injury, interest from the date of the injury, and a reasonable attorney's fee.

The changes in existing law represent immediate improvements that I believe will simpify the law and benefit both the industry and the customers it serves.

The legislation also contains an important provision creating a Presidential study commission to make recommendations for the long-term deregulation of the maritime industry. The study commission, with the participation of the executive branch, the Congress, the industry, the unions, the ports and other interested persons, will have an opportunity to make a valuable contribution toward reshaping this industry in a manner that will best serve this Nation for years to come.

In conclusion, I hope the House will act favorably on the amended bill reported by the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. BENNETT).

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, I urge your support for H.R. 4374, which will modernize the regulation of international shipping. This bill is crucial if we are to arrest the decline of the U.S.-flag merchant marine.

A strong economically healthy merchant marine is essential to our national security, to provide the sealift required by our defense plans. This bill will increase the opportunity for a more numerous merchant marine fleet. Joint Chiefs of Staff have repeatedly made the point that there are no plans for military operations overseas which do not clearly depend upon sealift. The Navy estimates that about 350 dry cargo ships alone would be required to support the deployment of the Rapid Deployment Force to the Persian Gulf area of the Indian Ocean, a contingency plan receiving "increased emphasis" according to the Secretary of Defense. Most of those ships would have to come from the U.S. merchant marine.

Today, our privately owned dry cargo fleet could just barely satisfy this requirement, and then only by virtually abandoning our overseas trade routes to foreign competition. It is in the interest of our national defense needs that this bill be enacted absent any better suggestion for meeting unmet requirements.

The downward trend in U.S.-flag shipping must be reversed and H.R. 4374 is expected to be an important part of that process. It will help our U.S.-flag carriers by expediting the procedures under which they are regulated and helping to equalize the unfair regulatory burden that now exists between U.S.-flag and foreign-flag carriers. These benefits come without cost to the Government or danger to American consumers.

Among the supporters of this bill are the administration, the Merchant Marine and Fisheries and Judiciary Committees, and the National Industrial Traffic League representing the overwhelming majority of users of ocean shipping. I know of no opposition to H.R. 4374 within the entire maritime industry.

With your help and support we can take a long step forward in correcting a serious deficiency in the essential maritime needs of our Nation.

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. AUCOIN).

Mr. AUCOIN. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I can find nothing in this legislation which would support that contention or give rise to that fear that this bill hurts the consumer. Everything in this bill—from the requirement that conference membership not be restricted * * * to the requirements for independent action and nondiscriminatory practices—effectively policed by a Federal regulatory body—demonstrates that the committee has taken an archaic, 66-year-old piece of legislation which produced nothing but high transportation costs and modernized it so that these shipping companies can fully utilize technical and commercial innovation, reduce the costs of transportation, and improve our ability to meet foreign competition.

The overwhelming endorsement of this bill by practically every importer and exporter who uses ocean transportation services is loud testimony that H.R. 4374 will generate reliable services at reasonable rates. The businessmen who make up the export/import industry—the first line consumers of shipping services—know that the differences between making a sale and not realizing the sale is the cost of the transportation component of the landing cost of a product. Only if legislation is perceived as insuring competitive rates for reasonable service will this group of businessmen endorse a bill such as this.

Is it in the consumer's interest to have a strong merchant marine? The answer is yes. Is it this country's national interest to wake up foreign competition? The answer is yes.

Is this bill necessary? The answer is yes.

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time, and I would like to conclude by reading from a letter dated September 8, 1982, signed by a fine gentleman downtown, "Drew," being Secretary Drew Lewis of the Department of Transportation:

THE SECRETARY OF TRANSPORTATION,
Washington D.C., September 8, 1982.

Hon. WALTER B. JONES,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR WALTER: I am writing to express the Administration's commitment to the regulatory reform of the maritime industry and to ask that you work with us to see that H.R. 4374, a bill "To improve the international ocean commerce transportation system of the United States," is considered and passed by the House in a timely manner.

I am sure you are aware that there have been extensive and lengthy hearings, discussions and negotiations among representatives of ocean carriers, shippers (who are the consumers of ocean transportation services), Congressional committees, and the Administration on the proposed legislation. A general consensus has emerged with regard to the nature of the regulatory reforms that are necessary to make U.S. maritime policy consistent with international shipping practices and to clarify the present procedures which have made U.S. regulation of the liner industry unwieldy and unpredictable. That consensus is reflected in the broad-based support for H.R. 4374.

This legislation will correct procedures presently followed in order to reinstate certainty and predictability in the regulation of liner shipping in our foreign commerce, while adequately protecting all parties—shippers, carriers and ultimately the American consumer. It is not intended to favor any particular flag operator, and gives recognition to the need for international comity in liner shipping. The legislation defines with greater precision the scope of antitrust immunity which has been in force since passage of the Shipping Act of 1916. A more precise definition will provide greater clarity and certainty for operators and users of shipping services. At the same time, the legislation will eliminate many of the problems that have arisen in connection with extraterritorial application of our laws to ocean liner services, which has produced friction with our trading partners.

As this session draws to a close, I recognize there are numerous bills vying for floor action. H.R. 4374, which is scheduled to be considered under suspension of the rules on September 13th, represents a bipartisan effort to address the problems of the maritime liner industry and to reform the procedures under which the federal government unnecessarily regulates the industry. On behalf of the Administration, which is committed to this regulatory reform effort, I join with the Congressional sponsors of this legislation to urge your support and passage of H.R. 4374.

Sincerely,

DREW.

● Mr. SYNDER. Mr. Speaker, I speak in strong support of H.R. 4374. As a member of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee for over 12 years, I have had the opportunity to observe the antiquated system under which the United States requires its ocean common carriers to operate. Indeed, the United States is almost unique in the world in its regulation of ocean-borne foreign commerce. Under existing law, the United States requires conferences operating in the U.S. trades to maintain open membership while the rest of the world permits closed conferences. Presently in the United States, shippers' councils are not permitted to act as a counterbalance to a conference's power, whereas shippers' councils are permitted throughout the rest of the world.

Agreements implementing the conference members' agreed-upon activity are now required to be approved by the Federal Maritime Commission (FMC) prior to coming into effect. This is more often than not, a lengthy process which results in many agreements becoming commercially obsolete by the time they are approved. In addition, the antitrust immunity which Congress clearly intended to apply to ocean shipping when it enacted the Shipping Act of 1916, has been substantially eroded. As a result, there is no longer a clear antitrust standard for the carriers to operate under, or for the FMC to administer with any certainty of staying within the parameters of permissible activities and without the prospect of prosecution by the Justice Department. Usually, U.S.-flag carriers will feel the brunt of a Justice Department decision to assert an antitrust violation has occurred, since U.S.-flag interests are more easily accessible to our domestic legal process and pose no foreign policy considerations.

H.R. 4374 is a bipartisan legislative effort designed to correct many of these shortcomings in existing law. I am not in complete agreement with the bill and would have preferred to have seen some changes in the bill; particularly I am not satisfied with the bill's provision which retains the requirement that tariffs must be filed and enforced by the FMC. Nonetheless, I think that the bill before us makes some significant improvements in other areas of concern and provides the basis for enacting legislation in the next Congress to further improve our ocean transportation system.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to compliment the Secretary of Transportation, Drew Lewis, for his outstanding efforts, as well as those of the other members of the Department of Transportation team, on behalf of this bill. The Secretary spent a great amount of his personal effort to get this bill where it is today. He successfully argued the industry's case before the Cabinet Council and overcame the significant opposition of other departments to this legislation, a feat which no one else had been able to accomplish, especially during the previous administration. He also kept close watch on congressional action, and worked quietly behind the scenes to keep the bill moving.

The industry owes Secretary Lewis a debt of gratitude, in my opinion. This administration is living up to its commitment to help the maritime community.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 4374 with a yes vote.●

● Mr. CORRADA. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 4374, the Ocean Shipping Act of 1982, which is designed to improve the efficiency of our ocean-liner carriers while maintaining the needed protections for consumers and for those engaged in the maritime trades of the United States.

This constructive regulatory reform legislation modernizes the regulation of ocean shipping in line with today's commerical needs. The Ocean Shipping Act of 1982 was envisioned to give an opportunity to U.S. importers and exporters of goods to compete effectively for their share of world markets. Time is long overdue for us to revise the present regulatory framework which falls short from providing the U.S. shipping industry with the tools it needs to respond to changes in market conditions. Many years of technological advances have gone by and we need a Federal law which reflects this progress.

It is painful to see that U.S. ships no longer carry the bulk of U.S. goods moving in foreign commerce at a time when our Nation suffers an economic crisis. There is a compelling need for us to lend a hand in trying to create a move effective and less costly ocean-carrier service which could successfully compete with foreign-flag carriers. We no longer can afford to allow that 75 percent of U.S. producers shipping costs be diverted from our own shipping industry.

I trust this regulatory reform will bring about a healthier and more productive U.S.-liner industry. I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of this legislation.●

● Mr. PRITCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 4374, a bill "to improve the international ocean commerce transportation system of the United States."

There have been extensive and lengthy hearings, discussions, and negotiations among representatives of ocean carriers, shippers who are consumers of ocean transportation services such as the forest products industry, congressional committees, and the administration on the proposed legislation. A general consensus has emerged with regard to the nature of the regulatory reforms that are necessary to make U.S. maritime policy consistent with international shipping practices and to clarify the present procedures which have made U.S. regulation of the liner industry unwieldy and unpredictable. That consensus is reflected in the broad-based support for H.R. 4374.

I particularly want to focus on section 2 of this bill that contains the definition for "forest products." This definition is designed to include those products that are noncontainerized cargo in lot sizes having a volume greater than 2,560 cubic feet. This definition exempts forest products from the requirements of filing a tariff and being subject to conference loyalty agreements, thus tracing a similar exception which already has been provided in this bill for bulk cargoes. This proposal is designed to replace the exemption for "softwood lumber" which was contained in the Shipping Act of 1916.

The forest products industry is in dire straits. This is of particular concern to those of us in the Pacific Northwest. Since the collapse of the housing market, many of the business opportunities for the forest products manufacturers have closed. In fact, in several cases the only business opportunity that exists which is keeping the industry afloat until the revival of the housing market is the export market. That is why it is so essential that regulatory relief is provided for such an economically depressed industry.

This legislation represents the bipartisan effort to address the problems of the maritime industry and to reform the procedures under which the Federal Government unnecessarily regulates the industry. I think it behooves us to act expeditiously in order to bring the necessary regulatory relief. This bill will correct procedures presently followed in order to reinstate certainty and predictability in the regulation of liner shipping in our foreign commerce, while adequately protecting all parties—shippers, carriers, and ultimately the American consumer. I would urge my colleagues to support the passage of H.R. 4374.●

● Mr. LENT. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the Shipping Act of 1982, H.R. 4374.

This legislation has been a long time in coming. Maritime regulatory reform has been the subject of hearings in both the House and Senate during the 96th and 97th Congresses.

The bill before us today is designed to clarify procedures which have in the past made U.S. regulation of the liner industry uncertain and unwieldy, and more closely conform our ocean shipping practices with those of our trading partners. As such, it represents an important step in our efforts to revitalize our merchant marine, improve the competitive stance of our international ocean shipping industry, and enhance our national defense capabilities.

Furthermore, H.R. 4374 is an example of what the legislative process of give-and-take can produce; this marvel of accommodation is supported by the leadership of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries and Judiciary Committees, the administration, U.S.-flag-liner shipping companies, port authorities, labor, and importers and exporters.

A vote for H.R. 4374 is a vote for a more efficient and effective merchant marine. I urge my colleagues to vote for its passage today.●

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All time has expired.

The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. JONES) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 4374, as amended.

The question was taken.

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 5, rule I, and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who wish to do so may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks, and include extraneous matter, on the bill H.R. 4374, as amended.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

PATENT TERM RESTORATION ACT OF 1982

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 6444), to amend the patent law to restore the term of the patent grant for the period of time that nonpatent regulatory requirements prevent the marketing of a patented product, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 6444

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Patent Term Restoration Act of 1982".

SEC. 2. (a) Title 35 of the United States Code is amended by adding the following new section immediately after section 154:

"§ 155. Restoration of patent term

"(a)(1) Except as provided in paragraphs (3) and (4), the term of a patent which encompasses within its scope a product subject to a regulatory review, or a method for using such a product or a method for producing such a product, shall be extended from the original expiration date of the patent if—

"(A) the product sponsor gives notice to the Commissioner in compliance with the provisions of subsection (b)(1);

"(B) the product has been subjected to a regulatory review pursuant to statute before its commercial marketing or use;

"(C) the patent to be extended has not expired prior to notice to the Commissioner under subsection (b)(1); and

"(D) the patent to be extended was issued on or subsequent to the date of enactment of the Patent Term Restoration Act of 1982.

"(2) The rights derived from any claim of any patent extended under paragraph (1) shall be limited.

"(A) in the case of any patent, to the scope of such claim which relates to the product subject to regulatory review, and

"(B) in the case of patent which encompasses within its scope a product—

"(i) which is subject to regulatory review under the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act, to the uses of the product which may be regulated by the chapter of such Act under which the regulatory review occurred, or

"(ii) which is subject to regulatory review under any other statute, to the uses of the product which may be regulated by the statute under which the regulatory review occurred.

"(3)(A) Subject to subparagraph (B), the term of the patent shall be extended by the time equal to the regulatory review period for such product for the period up to ten years after the date of filing of the earliest application for the patent and the time equal to one-half the regulatory review period for the period between ten and twenty years from the filing date of the earliest patent application.

"(B) In no event shall the term of any patent be extended for more than seven years. No term of any extended patent may exceed twenty-seven years from the date of filing of the earliest patent application for the patent. If the term that the patent would be extended is less than one year, no extension shall be granted.

"(C) In no event shall more than one patent be extended for the same regulatory review period for the product.

(4) The term of a patent which encompasses within its scope a method for producing a product may not be extended under this section if—

"(A) the owner of record of such patent is also the owner of record of another patent which encompasses within its scope the same product; and

"(B) such patent on such product has been extended under this section.

"(b)(1) To obtain an extension of the term of a patent under subsection (a), the product sponsor shall notify the Commissioner under oath, within ninety days after the termination of the regulatory review period for the product to which the patent relates, that the regulatory review period has ended. If the product sponsor is not the owner of record of the patent, the notification shall include the written consent of the owner of record of the patent to the extension. Such notification shall be writing and shall—

"(A) identify the Federal statute under which regulatory review occurred or, if the regulatory review occurred under the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act, the chapter of the Act under which the review occurred;

"(B) state the dates on which the regulatory review period commenced and ended;

"(C) identify the product for which regulatory review was required;

"(D) state that the requirements of the statute under which the regulatory review referred to in subsection (a)(1)(B) occurred have been satisfied and commercial marketing or use of the product is not prohibited; and

"(E) identify the patent and any claim thereof to which the extension is applicable; the date of filing of the earliest application for the patent; and the length of time of the regulatory review period for which the term of such patent is to be extended; and state that no other patent has been extended for the regulatory review period for the product.

"(2) Upon receipt of the notice required by paragraph (1), the Commissioner shall promptly publish in the Official Gazette of the Patent and Trademark Office the information contained in such notice. Unless the requirements of this section have not been met, the Commissioner shall issue to the owner of the record of the patent a certificate of extension, under seal, stating the fact and length of the extension and identifying the product and the statute under which regulatory review occurred and specifying any claim to which such extension is applicable. Such certificate shall be recorded in the official file of the patent so extended and shall be considered as part of the original patent.

"(c) As used in this section:

"(1) The term 'product' means any machine, manufacture, or composition of matter for which a patent may be obtained and includes the following:

"(A) Any new drug, antibiotic drug, new animal drug, device, food additive, or color additive subject to regulation under the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act.

"(B) Any Human or veterinary biological product subject to regulation under section 351 of the Public Health Service Act or under the virus, serum, toxin, and analogous products provisions of the Act of March 4, 1913 (21 U.S.C. 151-158).

"(C) Any pesticide subject to regulation under the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act.

"(D) Any chemical substance or mixture subject to regulation under the Toxic Substances Control Act.

"(2) The term 'major health or environmental effects text' means an experiment to determine or evaluate health or environmental effects which requires at least six months to conduct, not including any period for analysis or conclusions.

"(3) The term 'earliest application for the patent' means the patent application providing the earliest benefit of filing date to the patent and includes patent applications under sections 119 and 120.

"(4) The term 'product sponsor' means any person who initiates testing or investigations, claims an exemption, or submits an application, petition, protocol, request, or notice described in paragraph (5) of this subsection.

"(5) The term 'regulatory review period' means—

"(A) with respect to a product which is a drug, antibiotic drug, or human biological product, a period commencing on the earliest of the date the first product sponsor (i) initiates a clinical investigation on humans, or (ii) submits an application or petition with respect to such product the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act, Public Health Service Act, or the Act of March 4, 1913, and ending on the date such application or petition with respect to such product is approved or the product is licensed under such statutes or, if objections are filed to such approval or license, ending on the date such objections are resolved and commercial marketing is permitted or, if commercial marketing is initially permitted and later revoked pending further proceedings as a result of such objections, ending on the date such proceedings are finally resolved and commercial marketing is permitted;

"(B) with respect to a product which is a food additive or color additive, a period commencing on the earliest of the date the first product sponsor (i) initiates a major health or environmental effects test on the product, but only if the data from such test is submitted in a petition referred to in clause (iii) of this subparagraph, (ii) claims an exemption for an investigation with respect to such product, or (iii) submits a petition with respect to the product under the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act requesting issuance of a regulation for use of the product, and ending on the date such regulation becomes effective or, if objections are filed to such regulation, ending on the date such objections are resolved and commercial marketing is permitted or, if commercial marketing is initially permitted and later revoked pending further proceedings as a result of such objections, ending on the date such proceedings are finally resolved and commercial marketing is permitted;

"(C) with respect to a product which is an animal drug or veterinary biological product, a period commencing on the earliest of the date the first product sponsor (i) claims an exemption for investigation of the product or requests authority to prepare an experimental product under the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act, the Public Health Service Act, or the Act of March 4, 1913, or (ii) submits an application or petition with respect to the product under such statutes, and ending on the date such application or petition with respect to the product is approved or the product is licensed under such statutes or, if objections are filed to such approval or license, ending on the date such objections are resolved and commercial marketing is permitted or, if commercial marketing is initially permitted and later revoked pending further proceedings as a result of such objections, ending on the date such proceedings are finally resolved and commercial marketing is permitted;

"(D) with respect to a product which is a device, a period commencing on the earlier of the date the first product sponsor (i) submitted a proposed product development protocol with respect to the product under the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act, (ii) initiates a clinical investigation on humans, or (iii) submitted an application with respect to the product under such statute, and ending on the date such application with respect to the product is approved under such statute;

"(E) with respect to a product which is a pesticide, a period commencing on the earliest of the date the first product sponsor (i) initiates a major health or environmental effects test on such pesticide, but only if the data from such test is submitted in a request for registration of such pesticide under section 3 of the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act, (ii) requests the grant of an experimental use permit for the pesticide under section 5 of such Act, or (iii) submits an application for registration of such pesticide pursuant to section 3 of such Act, and ending on the date such pesticide is first registered, either conditionally or fully; and

"(F) with respect to a product which is a chemical substance or mixture for which notification is required under section 5(a) of the Toxic Substances Control Act—

"(i) which is subject to a rule requiring testing under section 4(a) of such Act, a period commencing on the date the first product sponsor has initiated the testing required in such rule and ending on the expiration of the premanufacture notification period for such chemical substance or mixture, of if an order or injunction is issued under section 5(e) or 5(f) of such Act, the date on which such order or injunction is dissolved or set aside;

"(ii) which is not subject to a testing rule under section 4 of such Act, a period commencing on the earlier of the date the first product sponsor—

"(I) submit a premanufacture notice, or

"(II) initiates a major health or environmental effects test on such chemical substance or mixture, but only if the data from such test is included in the premanufacture notice for such substance or mixture, and ending on the expiration of the premanufacture notification period for such substance or mixture or if an order or injunction is issued under section 5(e) or 5(f) of such Act, the date on which such order or such injunction is dissolved or set aside; except that the regulatory review period shall not be deemed to have commenced until a patent has been granted for the product which is subject to regulatory review, for the method for using such product, or for the method for producing such product.

"(d)(1) Notwithstanding subsection (a)(1)(D), in the event the regulatory review period has commenced prior to the date of enactment of this section, then the period of patent extension for such product or a method of using such product shall be measured from the date of enactment of this section. In the event that prior to the date of enactment of this section a new drug product was approved on a date more than seven years after the commencement of the regulatory review period and during such regulatory review period the patentee was notified that such product's application was not approvable under section 505(b)(1) of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act and as a result of which the patentee caused a major health or environmental effects test to be conducted to evaluate carcinogenic potential, then the period of patent extension for such product or the method of use of such product shall be seven years, if the filing required by subsection (b)(1) of this Act is made within ninety days of the date of enactment of this section.

"(2) Notwithstanding subsection (a)(1)(D), in the case of products approved and for which a stay of regulation granting approval pursuant to section 409 of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act was in effect as of January 1, 1981, the period of such patent extensions shall be measured from the date such stay was imposed until such proceedings are finally resolved and commercial marketing permitted, if the filing required by subsection (b)(1) is made within ninety days of the termination of the regulatory review period or of the date of enactment of this section, whichever is later.".

(b) The analysis for chapter 14 of title 35, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"155. Restoration of patent term.".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. KASTENMEIER) will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. RAILSBACK) will be recognized for 20 minutes.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, is the gentleman from Illinois opposed to the bill?

Mr. RAILSBACK. I am not. I favor the bill, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, I do oppose the bill, and I make demand for the time on this side of the aisle.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Florida (Mr. SHAW) will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. KASTENMEIER).

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 6444 is the product of over 4 years of study of ways in which Government patent policy can be changed to stimulate industrial innovation in the United States. The genesis of the legislation was a call by President Jimmy Carter in May 1978 for a domestic policy review of industrial innovation. President Carter's directive lead to the creation of an Advisory Committee on Industrial Innovation composed of more than 150 senior representatives from the industrial, public interest, labor, scientific, and academic communities. This committee made several recommendations for changes in Federal law with the goal of an improved patent system. Several of these changes were enacted by the 96th and 97th Congress, but a key recommendation of the Advisory Committee which remains to be implemented is that calling for "an adequate extension of the patent term * * * when commercialization of patented inventions is delayed due to Federal regulations." It is this recommendation which is embodied in H.R. 6444.

In view of the economic crisis our country is now experiencing and the obvious need for constructive ways to deal with it, we on the Judiciary Committee took the recommendation for patent term restoration very seriously and commissioned a more detailed analysis of the issue by the congressional Office of Technology Assessment which, after a year of independent study, presented the Congress with a 74-page report on the issue focusing on the pharmaceutical industry as an example.

The OTA report found that—

The drug develpment process is time consuming and is characterized by a high probability of failure. A decade or more may elapse between the time a chemical having promising biological activity is identified and the time it is marketed as a new drug. The odds against developing a marketable pharmaceutical are great . . . only one out of 7,000 to 10,000 newly synthesized chemicals will be found to have promising biological acitivity. Only one out of 10 promising chemicals will survive to marketing.

The report estimates that direct costs, in 1976 dollars, of developing a new pharmaceutical average $33 million. In addition to finding that the new drug-development process is extraordinarily costly and lengthy, the Office of Technology Assessement also found that the average effective patent term for drugs approved in 1979 was less than 10 years.

It is the extraordinarily long development time required by the testing needed to meet regulatory requirements which causes significant loss of effective patent term and underlies the need for H.R. 6444.

The testimony before the subcommittee and the information contained in the report of the Office of Technology Assessment confirms the link between effective commercial patent term and innovation and supports the recommendation of President Carter's Advisory Committee for remedial legislation.

It is important to keep in mind that the issue involved is not simply the growth of the economy, it is encouraging future investment of large sums of private capital in the high-risk area of breakthrough pharmaceutical and chemical technology. Such investments pay off not only in economic growth, but even more importantly in improvements to the health and well being of our people, especially those most likely to need new medical technology such as senior citizens. And, frequently, new pharmaceutical technology can be more cost effective than preexisting therapies which involve often costly hospitalization. I believe firmly that the generic pharmaceutical industry should be encouraged. But it is important to keep in mind that generic companies, by definition, do not develop new and better drugs—they simply copy existing therapies. We must look to the research intensive, patent dependent companies for new cures for disease. The goal of H.R. 6444 is simply to encourage these companies to produce more and better therapies.

Although the general thrust of the testimony presented to my subcommittee was supportive of the concept of patent term restoration, important criticisms were made. The committee was sensitive to those criticisms and adopted a number of amendments to the original proposal which were designed to respond to them. The modifications were so significant that an entirely new bill was drafted and approved by my subcommittee and the full Judiciary Committee. This new bill, H.R. 6444, is vastly different from the original House bill H.R. 1937, or the Senate passed bill, S.255.

The most important amendment restricts the bill to patents issued after the date of enactment. Therefore, generic companies will not experience any delay in access to patented technology until the year 2000. By the time the first patent is extended by the bill, the advantages of the new products induced by it will far outweigh any delay in generic reproductions coming to the market.

Further, the amendments deny any benefit under the legislation to companies which procrastinate in obtaining their patents and greatly limit any extension of patent to companies which fail to expedite the testing and regulatory approval process. Further, the bill applies to only one patent on any product to avoid pyramiding of patent protection.

H.R. 6444, as reported by the Judiciary Committee, is a balanced bill which will assure more rapid technological innovation in the pharmaceutical and chemical industries, resulting in a stronger economy and the development of less costly and more competitive new therapies and chemicals. At the same time, the interests of consumers have been protected.

The bill is sponsored by over 100 Members. S. 255, a Senate counterpart, passed the Senate last year by a unanimous voice vote.

Mr. Speaker, I urge Members to vote for H.R. 6444.

Mr. Speaker, with my remarks I include a letter received by me Today from the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. FORD) as follows:

WASHINGTON, D.C.,
September 13, 1982.

Re H.R. 6444—Patent Restoration Act.

Mr. ROBERT W. KASTENMEIER,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Courts, Civil Liberties and Administration of Justice, Committee on the Judiciary, House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I write to support the Patent Term Restoration Act (H.R. 6444) from my perspective as a member of the Subcommittee on Health of the Committee on Ways and Means.

We regard soaring health care costs as a major problem which, to date, has eluded any pervasive legislative or marketplace solution. Health care costs have increased sixfold over the past twenty years, and skyrocketing hospitalization and surgical costs have accounted for a substantial portion of the increase. Health care costs as a percentage of our GNP continues to increase at an alarming rate. Many families have been wiped out because of illnesses that have required protracted and costly hospitalization, and the Medicare and Medicaid programs—which are esssential to the elderly and the poor—have become prime targets for the Administration's budget cutters.

One component of our health care system—medicines—has provided an efficient, effective and humanitarian counterweight to an otherwise bleak health care picture. Prescription drug prices have increased only 34% over the past 20 years. Perhaps even more importantly, however, new drugs have alleviated human suffering and saved billions of dollars by providing effective alternatives to costly surgical procedures and hospitalization. The past two years alone has witnessed the introduction of new or improved drugs to treat or prevent ulcers, glaucoma, pneumococcal pneumonia, second heart attacks, epilepsy, hepatitis, arthritis and hypertension, to name some of our more common and costly illnesses.

New medicines, Mr. Chairman, represent the most compassionate and cost effective means of preventing and treating disease. It is in our national interest, and particularly in the interest of the poor and the elderly, to assure adequate incentives to encourage the introduction of new and better medicines. The stakes are too big to be penny wise and pound foolish.

An average 6.8 year patent term for drugs is grossly unfair and inequitable when better mousetraps receive 17 years of exclusivity. Continuation of this inequity is bound to reduce the flow of funds into R&D for new medicines and the number of new medicines that will be forthcoming in the 1990's.

H.R. 6444 both redresses this inequity and protects consumers and generic manufacturers by excluding products already marketed and patents already issued. It should be supported by all who are prepared to critically examine the importance of new medicines to the poor, the elderly and to our health care delivery system. Feel free to use this letter during floor debate on the bill if it will help secure its passage.

With best regards.

Sincerely,

HAROLD FORD,
Member of Congress.

Mr. RAILSBACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KASTENMEIER. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. RAILSBACK. Mr. Speaker, I think that the point that the gentleman makes is very, very important, and I would only add to that that one recent amendment that was adopted made it very clear that we did not want any pyramiding or we did not want extensions for one patent that may be discovered to have a new product or a new nature. We really limit it to one extension, and even that extension is limited to a period of 7 years, which may not cover the regulatory review period.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. The gentleman from Illinois is correct, and I thank him for that comment and would like to take this time to thank the subcommittee—the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. RAILSBACK), the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. SAWYER), as well as other members of the subcommittee, including the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. FRANK), although he disagrees with this bill. Nonetheless, I think he was of enormous help in the dialog attendant to producing what we have on the floor.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KASTENMEIER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Wisconsin has done his usual scholarly and lawyer-like job of exploring this subject, and it is a very important one. He has made a very careful and thoughtful presentation. The only thing that concerns me is that we have here a bill that is controversial. There were some amendments offered in the committee which were not adopted. I supported some of them. I did not support others. It does seem to me that it ought to be taken up under a rule so that we can debate those amendments and decide what we want to do instead of doing it under suspension of the rules.

I just wonder if the gentleman can comment on that.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. I am afraid that I have more or less the same answer for the gentleman as was given during the last bill.

□ 1330

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. KASTENMEIER) has expired.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 additional minute.

Mr. Speaker, in view of the period of time that we have remaining in this Congress, in view of what appeared to be overwhelming support for this bill—and I do exclude the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. GORE), the gentleman from California (Mr. WAXMAN), and the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. FRANK) who are in opposition to the bill—and considering what appears to be the numbers in support of this bill, it seemed to be the wisest, most prudent course of action to try to pass this under suspension.

Now, of course, we can go to the Committee on Rules and try to get a rule and open this bill up, but I would think that those who are interested in finding a plausible solution to the problem would think that we would like to test this bill, and I believe this body will approve it by a two-thirds margin or more.

Mr. MOORHEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KASTENMEIER. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. MOORHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 6444. This bill would amend the patent law by restoring that portion of the patent term during which the marketing or use of a patented invention was prevented due to Federal regulatory review. I am a cosponsor and strong supporter of this legislation.

For far too many years American industrial innovation has not kept pace with our foreign competitors. Analysis of our economic problems reveals that America's preeminence in the creation, possession, and use of advanced high technology has all but gone. Today, there is scarcely an American industrial sector which does not face stiff foreign competition in the sale of high technology products. The Europeans and Japanese are challenging and surpassing us in electronics, communications, and aviation, where in the past we had no peers.

The rate of new drug development is declining and will continue to decline unless there are adequate R. & D. incentives.

In 1960, 50 chemical new drugs came onto the market. In 1979, only 12 such drugs were introduced.

Other data submitted before the Subcommittee on Courts, Civil Liberties and the Administration of Justice support the conclusion that there is a real decline in U.S. pharmaceutical innovation. Studies conducted at the University of Rochester show that there has been a decline in the number of new drug compounds being studied in humans by U.S. companies. These studies show that after an initial rise to a high of 34 new drugs in 1964, the number dropped to a plateau of around 50 for the decade between 1965–1974. However, there was a 40–45 percent decline in new drugs in 1975 to 1976. A preliminary update of this data presented at the March 1980 meeting of the American Society of Clinical Pharmacology and Therapeutics indicates that this low level of new drug productivity has not changed.

There are other indications that R. & D. by U.S. pharmaceutical companies is declining. In 1964, U.S. firms asked FDA for permission to do research on 70 chemicals developed by their own research. In 1976, only 20 such applications were filed with FDA. Moreover, U.S. firms are becoming increasingly dependent upon licenses from foreign companies to provide them with research candidates. Testimony before the subcommittee projected that of the new drugs anticipated to be approved in the period 1981–1985, about 50 percent will have originated outside the United States.

A bill similar to H.R. 6444, S. 255 has already passed the other body and is also pending before our committee. This legislation is very important and will benefit all Americans, particularly the sick and the elderly by encouraging the development of important new medicines—and I urge the Members to vote favorably for the enactment of H.R. 6444.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I think that what we have to look at here when we are discussing this bill is exactly what it does. It extends the potential that a company is protected from any competition whatsoever in the field to 24 years. That is exactly what the bill does.

This means that we are simply guaranteeing, with the elimination of competition, a continuation of the high price of drugs which has now lasted for 17 years. We would now extend that for 24 years, and the people who are bitten are the consumers. Twenty-five percent of the drugs that are consumed today are consumed by the elderly, those people who can no longer support themselves and have limited means in which to do so. I think this is the important thing that we must consider and that we must keep in mind during this discussion.

Exactly what we are trying to do today is not to kill the bill but to open it up for the amendment process so that we can offer some technical amendments in this particular area, some amendments that are very important to the consumers at this time, particularly to the elderly population.

We are looking now at two time periods that basically extend the life of a patent. One is the time period during which the Government is doing its work. This is the time period over which the company has no control. I have no problem in extending that time in addition to the time the patent would last.

However, the other period of time we are talking about is the time that the companies themselves are controlling. This is the period of time between applying for the patent and the time they finish their experiments and what not with the drug. This can go on to extend to the full 7 years, together with the time consumed by the Government.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. RODINO).

Mr. RODINO. Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman of the subcommittee for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in support of this important compromise legislation, the Patent Term Restoration Act, which provides a limited patent term extension for pharmaceutical and chemical inventions, the primary class of inventions which loses commercial patent life due to regulatory testing and paperwork requirements.

I compliment the gentleman from Wisconsin and his able subcommittee, who have studied this issue for over 4 years, with the expert assistance of the Office of Technology Assessment and the Patent and Trademark Office.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to use my time to carefully respond to some of the criticism which has been leveled against this bill.

First, it has been suggested that H.R. 6444 will simply enrich already prosperous drug companies. In response, I would only say that the purpose of H.R. 6444 is not to enhance profits of anyone. Rather, the purpose of the bill is to channel existing profits into further research by insuring adequate patent term to amortize investments in research. Since 1966, effective patent life has declined from 14.6 years to 6.8 years. Unless a remedy such as this legislation is passed, pharmaceutical companies may not continue to invest in research, a situation which will not be in the public interest.

Further, it has been claimed that decline in patent term will have no effect on the level of investments in research. The committee record shows to the contrary, that pharmaceutical research as a percentage of sales fell almost 35 percent from 1966 to 1980. During the same period, average effective patent term declined from 14.6 years to 7.4 years—46 percent. In 1981, it declined further to 6.8 years.

Also, it has been claimed that patent owners can already extend patent life by obtaining more than one patent on a product, so-called patent pyramiding.

This is the most erroneous charge against this bill, because these subsequent patents are virtually always "process patents" which simply protect a new method of manufacture, they do not extend the patent on the invention itself. They in no way limit generic companies from using an off-patent chemical formula and manufacturing the product.

It is recognized by many that the issue involved is not simply the growth of the economy, it is encouraging future investment of large sums of private capital in the high risk area of breakthrough pharmaceutical technology. Such investments pay off not only in economic growth but even more importantly in improvements to the health and well being of our people, especially those most likely to need new medical technology, such as senior citizens.

That is why such nonprofit groups as the National Alliance of Senior Citizens, the American Cancer Society, the American Heart Association, the American Medical Association, the American Bar Association and dozens of research hospitals and universities support the legislation.

The committee has reported a measure that neither side is totally happy about. That is a mark of its fairness. It will, I believe, provide some impetus for development of the myriad drugs necessary to the continued health needs of our Nation.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the ranking minority member of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. RAILSBACK).

Mr. RAILSBACK. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 6444. This legislation would amend the patent law by restoring that portion of a patent term during which the marketing or use of a patented invention was prevented due to Federal regulatory review.

Large and small businesses must be encouraged to channel a larger share of profits, manpower, and investment capital into research and the development of commercial products; the pharmaceutical and agricultural chemical industries are research-intensive and risky. They are particularly dependent on the patent system and they face stiff foreign competition. Ironically, these industries, while especially needing the patent system, do not receive its full benefits. The effective term of pharmaceutical patents as a consequence of regulatory review, dropped from 16 years in 1960 to 13 years in 1970, to about 9.5 years in 1979, to 6.8 years today. The agricultural chemical industry today can expect an effective patent term of only about 12 years. This is just unacceptable!

Given the fact that today, upward of 10 years of patent life out of a total of 17 years, can be (and often is) lost because of Government-required testing. The drug company has less than 7 years of patent life to try and recover its initial investment. This bill would provide that if a company did lose a number of years of its patent life because of Government-mandated review, then it could recover a maximum of 7 years. This would give that company more years to recover its investment, and this should mean cheaper prices to the consumer. I also believe this legislation could mean more and better medications, resulting in better and earlier therapy. This point was well made by a Chicago Tribune Editorial of May 1, 1981, which said:

Some objections have been raised to the proposed legislation because it would lengthen the time until a drug could be copied by the developer's competitors and marketed as a generic product, presumably at a lower price. But in the long run, we all stand to benefit much more from the discovery and availability of new medications. It is far less expensive to treat patients with drugs than with surgery or long hospitalization, which may be the only alternatives. And one of the most effective ways to cut health care costs is to develop new medications. Enormous savings, for example, could be made if we had more effective durgs for heart disease, cancer, genetic disorders, respiratory diseases, and a long list of other ailments for which better treatment is urgently needed.

In addition to the support of the Chicago Tribune, this bill enjoys the editorial support of over 25 newspapers from around the country. It is also cosponsored by 103 Members of this body.

Although the National Council of Senior Citizens has sent you a letter in opposition, I would like to point out that the National Retired Teachers Association and the American Association of Retired Persons have decided not to take a position on this legislation. It also has the support of the American Medical Association, the National Alliance of Senior Citizens, the Johns Hopkins University, the Association of American Medical Colleges, the Health Industry Manufacturers Association, to mention just a few of the 38 letters of endorsement we have received from health, medical organizations, and universities around the country.

Mr. Speaker, at this time I would like to further clarify, for the purpose of legislative history, the amendments I offer and which were adopted by the Judiciary Committee.

Under section 155(a)(2), the rights derived from restoration of a patent term are limited to the scope of the claims which cover the product undergoing regulatory review. Because a single patent can also encompass a product with several uses subject to different regulatory review requirements, or subject to no regulatory review requirements at all, a patent extension for a product approved, that is, as a human drug, covers all human drug uses but not pesticidal, photographic, or other uses.

Under section 155(a)(3), any patent extension must be calculated from the original expiration date of the patent. Thus, if it would happen that two regulatory review periods for two different products under the same patent occurred, the resultant extensions would run concurrently, both dated from the original patent expiration date and not consecutively.

Under section 155(c)(2), acute and subchronic toxicity testing is ordinarily completed in less than 6 months. In that case, it would not be included within the definition of a "major health and environmental effects test." However, if acute and subchronic toxicity testing took longer than 6 months, it would be included within such definition.

Section 155(c)(4) defines product sponsor in a way to assure that any person or persons responsible for any part of the regulatory review process for a product qualifies as a product sponsor to obtain the restoration benefits provided under the bill. The term "first product sponsor" is used throughout section 155(c)(5) and is intended to assure that if there is more than one product sponsor (as is usually the case when a university or other inventor licenses a product), the period of patent extension includes the combined regulatory review period of the first and subsequent product sponsors even if the extension is obtained by a subsequent sponsor.

The clinical investigation referred to in section 155(c)(5)(A) is intended to permit the calculation of the period of patent extension for a drug or human biological product to commence with the first safety testing of the drug in humans. Normally, this testing will occur at the beginning of phase 1 of the IND phase of FDA review.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I would like to mention that during our subcommittee hearings and markup, a hardship case was brought to our attention by Senator GRASSLEY which this bill presently omits, and the case involved a company, Impro Products, Inc., an animal health products firm. I am advised that a district court, on September 2, 1982, issued a permanent injunction against the agency involved preventing them from further distribution of the false test results as the company wages a larger antitrust suit. If appropriate, this case may be considered when we meet with the other body in conference.

I urge the Members to vote in favor of H.R. 6444.

Mr. KINDNESS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAILSBACK. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. KINDNESS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding, and I wish to associate myself with his remarks in strong support of the bill.

Mr. Speaker, in recent years, the average patent life for new drugs introduced into the marketplace has declined significantly. It has been shown that our stringent regulatory requirements take 7 to 10 years to complete, almost half of the 17-year period that Congress has specified for exclusive patent protection on other products. No one wants to return to allowing the sale of any concoction off of the back of a wagon, without the public having any idea whether it is safe to take, or effective as a medicine. But, if the agencies of Government are going to demand costly and extensive development and testing procedures before any product can be marketed, it is only fair that the time required to obtain that approval is not taken off the patent life.

The average cost of marketing a new medicine is now about 470 million, and the number of such new medicines has declined dramatically in the last 20 years, at the same time that the regulatory approval process has been demanding increased resources of time and money.

This bill would simply restore part of the patent life not available, because the Federal Government delays marketing until appropriate clinical and animal tests have satisfied the Food and Drug Administration scientists that a drug is safe and effective. No patent would be extended unless such regulatory delay had actually occurred, and in no case could the term be extended more than 7 years.

Opposition to this idea has come from some who complain that restoring this part of the patent protection will result in higher prices for drugs, a particular concern of the elderly. They overlook the fact that research and development of new products are essential as an alternative to more costly forms of therapy, such as hospitalization or surgery. Besides being less costly, drug therapy is safer for elderly patients. They have certainly benefited from our superior technology in the past. In fact, out of every dollar spent on health care in the United States, only about 8 cents is paid for medicine. While the Consumer Price Index has risen 178 percent, and health care costs have increased 629 percent, the cost of prescription drugs has increased only 34 percent in the past 20 years.

Patent restoration will provide more incentive for research and development of new products, as well as promoting price competition between old and new medicines. Drug manufacturers who do not do research and development are very shortsighted to oppose this incentive, because if the basic research is not done and the testing and approval process not completed, there will be substantially fewer products brought to the market, and both they and the public will be the losers.

This extension of the patent term to compensate for time required by our regulatory procedures is a matter of equity, and will not affect the patent life of any drug or chemical currently being marketed. I urge the passage of this legislation.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HUGHES).

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 6444, the Patent Term Restoration Act, and urge my colleagues to adopt this important bill which provides for an extension of the patent term lost due to Federal agency review periods.

As a cosponsor of H.R. 6444, and as a member of the Judiciary Committee which favorably reported the patent term restoration bill in early August, I believe that enactment of this legislation will go a long way in stimulating industrial innovation and would reduce the inequities resulting from delays in bringing patented products to market due to Federal regulations and agency reviews.

Despite the fact that enactment of the patent term extension bill promises to improve the quality of health care by bringing more—and much improved—pharmaceutical products to the marketplace, some concern has been raised by those who fear that the extended patent term will result in slowing the process by which generic drugs come to the marketplace. The Judiciary Committee, however, mindful of the important role that generics play, limited the application of the legislation to patents issued after the date of enactment. The legislation also provides that no patent can be extended under the bill for more than 7 years.

I believe that the patent term bill is a fair and equitable approach to assure that American companies remain competitive while at the same time encouraging the developing of new products to meet our health needs. As Congressmen RODINO and KASTENMEIER have clearly indicated, this legislation will encourage the investment of the large sums of private capital needed to achieve new breakthroughs in the high-risk fields of pharmaceutical innovation and technology.

I urge you to join with us in supporting this important and well-balanced legislative proposal.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 7 minutes to a member of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. FRANK), in the belief that he will yield to those colleagues who support his point of view.

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman of my subcommittee for yielding to me.

Mr. Speaker, I want to acknowledge the significant work that the gentleman did to improve this bill, but I think in part that is one of the reasons why we ought not to be doing this on suspension.

There are two levels of discussion on this bill. One is whether or not any relief is needed for this industry, and Members differ about that. But there is another level which is even more important for those who agree that some relief would be required, and that is how best to structure it in a fairly difficult area.

In committee there were several amendments which were debated at some length and defeated. Allusion was made to the fact that opponents to the bill in its present bill were overwhelmed. Mr. Speaker, we were "whelmed," but I am not sure that we were overwhelmed. We got better than a third of the committee that supported some fairly substantial amendments, and we lost by votes of 16 to 10 and 16 to 9. That seems to me to justify a chance to deal with the bill in a form that allows amendment. This really is not the kind of legislation for which the suspension calendar was intended, since there is a substantial bipartisan section of the committee which seeks amendments and since there are subcommittees and chairmen having related jurisdiction which support amendments.

Mr. Speaker, the fundamental amendments are two in number. First, the question is, if some patent term as this is necessary, when should it begin? In its current form the patent term is extended for that period during which experimentation is being done on the drug. That is not in my judgment the requirement that the Federal Government imposes on the companies. It is something that common sense and common decency and a respect for human life imposes on the companies. I do not think they ought to be compensated in extra time for the time they use in testing this drug for efficacy and for safety.

Moreover, the FDA itself has no control over what happens during that period. That is in the control of the companies themselves.

One amendment proposed by the gentleman from Florida (Mr. SHAW), and supported by many of us in the subcommittee would have begun adding on to the patent process at that moment at which the Food and Drug Administration was given a completed application. It is at that point that the jurisdiction of the regulatory agency is engaged. It is during that period that any bureaucratic delay would occur.

Many of us were prepared to support an amendment that would say that the day the companies hand in a completed application to the FDA, from that moment forward they would get extra time.

Another amendment we wanted to have is related, because as the bill now stands, there is no mechanism for deciding who was at fault for the delay. Under the current bill a company which suffers delay because of its own ineptitude or its own shortcutting in not properly testing this drug would be rewarded with an extension of its patent term. I would like the opportunity to offer an amendment, supported by a substantial partisan minority of the subcommittee, to allow someone to intervene in that process and say, "wait, this is not the problem of bureaucratic delay."

Mr. RAILSBACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRANK. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. RAILSBACK. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I wanted to point out that there is, as the gentleman knows, a great deal of testing before it actually goes into the chemical testing stage, before they ever even apply for a patent. There are all kinds of testing before it ever reaches that stage.

Mr. FRANK. I thank the gentleman. I am glad there is. But I do not regard that as a favor at any point that the companies are doing for us. I regard that as an integral part of the process by which one determines the fitness of the drugs to go forward.

Let me say further I agree with the gentleman that this is a fit subject for debate. What we are asking for today is not defeat of the whole bill but defeat of the suspension process so that the gentleman from Illinois and I could in fact conduct this debate for the benefit of the Members in a somewhat more open fashion, not constrained as we are by the time.

I do not think, given the kinds of issues the gentleman from Illinois would like further to discuss, that the suspension process adequately contains this.

The cost of this is that generic drugs, a means of saving money for consumers and for the Government, a means of effective cost control that does not sacrifice the quality of care, will be put further out of the reach of consumers. I think that would be a mistake.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as I have remaining to the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. GORE).

Mr. GORE. I want to thank by colleague and pay my respects to the chairman of the subcommittee and the full committee.

I respectfully oppose this bill as strongly as I possibly can as an unnecessary giveaway for which nothing will be given in return. It proceeds from false premises and I want to outline them one by one.

No. 1, the impression is given that this industry is in distress. That is false. This industry is the third most profitable industry in the United States. This fact comes not from the debate of the chairman of the subcommittee this morning, but in the arguments and the general presentation of the industry. The profits of this industry are going up and up and up.

No. 2, that there is some problem with R. &. D. expenditure. Research and development spending has been skyrocketing and it has been going up in real terms, deflated dollars year after year after year. Let me read you a recent quote from Fortune magazine within the past year.

Merck is pouring a colossal $280 million into R&D this year, nearly four times more than ten years ago, while Eli Lilly's $210 million for 1980 was three times more than in 1971. Pfizer's research expenditure, which quintupled from 1970 to 1980, will grow by nearly 16% this year, to around $180 million, while Squibb has boosted spending 84% in the last five years to $91 million.

Where is the problem with incentive for research and development? And as if there was a problem, we already gave them just this past year a new 25-percent tax credit to stimulate them even more. How much encouragement do they need?

The second false premise is that innovation has been declining, it is said. Innovation has not been declining.

The statement has been made that there are half as many drugs approved this year as in 1960. That is misleading because 1962 was the year the modern era of drug regulation began. There were fewer new drugs approved in 1962 than there were this year.

The third false premise, that there is a problem with the effective patent life. Let us look at the effective patent life for not just the ones that the drug industry averages in but let us look at the top selling drugs for this year.

An average number of years of patent monopoly protection after FDA approval is not 17 years but 18½ years, more than the 17 years.

How could that be? It is because they use the patent system, they pyramid patents, and they evergreen patents. Even after the patent period expires they still control the market.

Take the example of librium.

I urge my colleagues to vote no when the occasion arises.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. GLICKMAN).

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I cosponsored this legislation and I still believe that there are many more changes in the law that need to be made.

But I would urge my colleagues, as a cosponsor, to vote against this bill on the Suspension Calendar.

This is a very serious piece of legislation. One of the amendments that was offered in committee, the Shaw-Frank amendment, would have provided that the extension period for patents be counted as to the various products covered from the time of the application to the Federal agency until it is approved. That is a critical amendment. The length of the patent term as it is to be extended under this bill would be modified significantly by a very important amendment that should have the opportunity to be offered.

While it is true many of the things that have been said about the nature of this industry and the need for innovation, I think the length of the time of the patent extension is one that demands the attention of this House under a separate floor vote and, therefore, I would urge a no vote under suspension of the rules.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. SAWYER).

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this legislation.

Right at the outset I want to make a correction or two in some of the statements made by the gentleman from Tennessee; namely, if you adjust for inflation the pharmaceutical research as a percentage of sales fell by almost 35 percent from 1966 to 1980.

During the same period of time the effective patent term declined from 14.6 years to 7.4 years. Then in 1981 the effective patent term declined to 6.8 years.

I would also suggest that the gentleman from Tennessee published an article not too long ago wherein he attributed this bill to the Reagan administration. This bill actually, if the gentleman had done his homework, had its genesis in the Carter administration. President Carter appointed a blue ribbon panel to get into this subject, to find out why innovation and patent applications were declining in the United States and in particular in this industry; namely, the pharmaceutical and chemical industries where they had declined by over 50 percent since 1960.

This panel came up with some four major recommendations. One was that we computerize and data process the Patent Office to make it more efficient. Second, that we get a review and restudy process and increase the patent examiners. Third, that we set up a new Patent Court of Appeals called the Court of Federal Circuit. Fourth, that we do something to correct this intrusion on the patent term that this process of Federal examination and licensing before it could be marketed that applied in both the pharmaceutical and chemical industries.

The first three of those have been accomplished by the Congress, and this is the fourth one that is being implemented to try and get some life back in our innovation and our patent applicatons and in our progress.

This bill has been endorsed by approximately 50 of the major newspapers in the country, including the New York Times and the Washington Post, which are certainly liberal and consumer-oriented newspapers.

Not only has it been endorsed by these major newspapers on the basis of fairness, but by every one of the major medical and health care organizations, including the American Medical Association, the American Bar Association, the Patent Division, and the American Association of University and American Association of Medical Schools, the Heart Association, the Cancer Association, who are all behind this legislation.

May I say that when we have a patent term for 17 years for the inventor of a toy, to say that the inventor of an important pharmaceutical can only have 6.8 years of patent protection is just a question of plain fairness. All of them had 17 years historically as indicated by the Constitution. Then in 1962 we started this Federal process of a patent, but before marketing, that has gradually chewed up that patent life as to pharmaceuticals and pesticides and certain chemicals.

In just plain fairness it is merely giving back that time or a portion of it.

Also, the pyramiding and evergreening has been alluded to and would be prevented by this bill which wipes that out.

So it is just in plain fairness to this industry and to reencourage the investment of research and development money.

Incidentally, we are getting very little for it. There is no effect on the patent life for almost 20-years down the pike from today if we do adopt the bill. Nothing will change except the encouragement of R. & D. money going into the development of pharmaceuticals and drugs.

Mr. RAILSBACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAWYER. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. RAILSBACK. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I wanted to make one point, which is that the New York Times and the Washington Post I think have now come out with a subsequent editorial that calls for an amendment.

But the gentleman is absolutely right, originally they were very strong for the bill.

I think the gentleman has made some excellent points. I think the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BROOKS) is also for the bill.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BROOKS).

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 6444, the Patent Term Restoration Act of 1982. This bill would allow the extension of the term of a patent for products which are subject to review by Federal agencies when the owners of those patents are prevented from marketing their inventions during the agency approval process.

Mr. Speaker, this bill has the important purpose of encouraging innovation by restoring full value to patents on inventions subject to agency review. It would grant patent owners an extension of their rights for up to 7 years beyond the traditional 17-year patent term. The knowledge that the regulatory review and approval process will not diminish the value of their patents is certain to encourage research and development in these regulated fields.

Mr. Speaker, under the able leadership of my friend, Chairman BOB KASTENMEIER, the Judiciary Subcommittee on Courts, Civil Liberties, and the Administration of Justice has made several changes to the original patent term bill, H.R. 1937. These amendments insure that the original purpose of the legislation will be carried out and that there will be minimum negative impact from the bill on the generic drug industry and on consumers.

I urge support of H.R. 6444.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. WAXMAN).

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, there is one proposition that I think both the proponents and opponents of this bill would agree upon that is the fact that when we give an extension of the patent interest period it is going to lead to a longer period of time in which there will be higher prices for drugs. That is logical, because a patent means you have a monopoly over the production and sale of a drug.

That monopoly means that there cannot be a competitor who can produce the same drug and sell it at a cheaper price.

What this bill will do will be to insist on the highest price for drugs to be paid by those people who need to buy drugs.

Who are the people who need to buy drugs? Primarily the elderly and certainly the sick. Eighty-four percent of drug purchases in this Nation are paid for out of the pockets of the people who must buy medications.

This bill will add a shift and it will add to the cost of drugs billions which will mean a shift out of the pockets of the elderly primarily into the pockets of the pharmaceutical manufacturers. We are told that we ought to support this shift of billions of dollars from those who are on limited, fixed incomes to those who are some of the wealthiest corporations in this Nation because it is going to be fair and it is going to bring about innovation.

But if we look at those claims, they just do not hold up because what we see with the pharmaceutical industry was, according to the Wall Street Journal, a 25-percent increase in profits in 1981. For 1982, a 20-percent increase in profits. And at a time when everyone else in this Nation is suffering from recession.

What we have seen in expenditures for research and development is a continuous increase year after year.

When the drug manufacturers manufacture drugs they get their investment back and they get a tremendous profit. I do not begrudge them that but what I do begrudge them is to come to Congress a year after we passed the tax break for them for research and development of 25 percent, and to ask us to help them out by giving them a longer period of time over which they are going to ask the elderly of this Nation to pay higher prices for drugs.

I do not think that is fair and a number of my colleagues agree that it is not fair who originally thought this idea of this bill seemed right.

A number of my colleagues joined in even coauthoring the bill, who accepted that superficial argument that is advanced for it; and then later, when they looked at the legislation more carefully, they decided to oppose it.

Two of the leading newpapers in this Nation originally supported the bill when they heard from the pharmaceutical industry. But when they looked at it a little more carefully, they backed away from it. The New York Times and the Washington Post both told us to support this legislation, and then later came out with editorials asking us to either oppose it or to severely curtail it.

Now, this legislation is different from that which the other body has proposed, and it is still not legislation that the drug industry will support because the drug industry wants the bill passed by the other body—because that is a much more generous bill for them. And this compromise which we are being urged to vote for is a compromise which they still do not accept.

I urge that on this suspension vote we defeat this bill, that we defeat it because as it stands today before us we have only one choice to vote up or down, and I say let us vote down this bill. I urge my colleagues to join me in doing so.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. GORE).

Mr. GORE. I thank my colleague for his courtesy.

Mr. Speaker, just to correct the record once and for all, the Post changed its position, the New York Times changed its position, too, and the Times did not just ask for amendments. I say to my colleagues; it came out flat, foursquare against the whole thing. Let me read to my colleagues what they said:

The pharmaceutical industry is efficient, profitable and healthy. It has no demonstrable need for any special break. The patent system as a whole may need reform, but that is a different issue. Monopoly rights should not be doled out to anyone with a hard-luck story, as Congress seems to believe. The proposed extension is unjustified, unsuited to the stated purpose of increasing research and offensive to the basic principle of a free economy.

To sum up, research and development spending is increasing. Profits are increasing. Innovation is stable. The industry does not need this bill. The only thing it will accomplish is to raise the price of medicine by an estimated $3 billion to $5 billion each year.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleauges to vote "no."

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Florida (Mr. SHAW) is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, I think in our desire to finish up the legislative business of this Congress, we are probably going to be doing a lot of things and voting on a lot of things that we have no business doing. In looking around this hall today, we see that most of the Members are apparently not here. I think that if we would check, we would find that they were not in their offices, that they are in their home districts doing important business. But this is important business. What we must do is to vote this bill down under suspension, get it here on the floor, with an open rule, so that we can present amendments to take the bad part out of this bill and pass it in a preferred form.

What we are talking about is the pocketbooks of the elderly. And for us to go running out of this hall so that we can get home to campaign and tripping over the limited earnings of the elderly in doing so, I think it would be a tragedy. We must take out of the bill the portion that would allow the extention of the patent, the period of time the prices are set without competition, to take out that portion which the company has complete control of, and come up with a good bill that all of us can support.

● Mr. CORRADA. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 6444, the Patent Term Restoration Act, which would restore the period of useful life of patents lost hurdling over Federal regulations. Currently, manufacturers of such products as drugs, medical devices, and chemicals, use more than half of the 17 years of their patents exclusivity period complying with FDA's premarketing requirements.

It is only fair play that we correct this inequity in the law. It is ironic that medical breakthroughs be penalized for having to meet Federal regulatory requirements directed to protect the public health.

With this kind of disincentive, it comes as no surprise that in the past 20 years there has been a dramatic decline in the number of new medicines introduced in the United States. Our research intensive industries feel betrayed when Congress incentives are diminished by subsequent regulations and nothing is done about it.

The future well-being of our citizens and the economic situation of our Nation demands the drafting of incentives for economic investment in high-risk areas that could bring about economic growth and new lifesaving products. This bill provides a simple, equitable, and uncostly way of stimulating this capital investment in areas that could lead us to a new era of economic stability and a healthier life for our people.

I urge my colleagues to vote for the passage of this legislation.●

● Mr. PEYSER. Mr. Speaker, while I am very sympathetic with the problems confronting pharmaceutical companies in the loss of patent protection time due to the delays in final approvals by the FDA, I think that this bill, in its present form where it cannot be amended, is not in the best interest of the public and particularly the elderly.

I would be willing to support an amendment to this legislation, such as the Frank amendment which would limit the extension time to the time elapsed between the actual filing for drug approval and final approval by the FDA. Drug research is obviously of great importance, and companies should not be penalized by needless loss of protection under their patent by delays over which they have no control.

It is certainly my intention to support this legislation with the type of amendment I have spoken of when it comes to the floor in the next Congress. In the meantime, it is certainly my hope that pharmaceutical companies, both for their good and for the good of the American public, will continue their active research work that has done so much good in improving the health of all Americans.●

● Mr. HOLLENBECK. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 6444, the Patent Term Restoration Act of 1982.

Mr. Speaker H.R. 6444 is a balanced bill which will assure more rapid technological innovation in the pharmaceutical and chemical industries resulting in a stronger economy and the development of less costly and more competitive new therapies and chemicals. At the same time, the interests of consumers have been adequately protected under the legislation.

The purpose of the Patent Term Restoration Act is to prevent the regulatory practices of the Federal Government from damaging the flow of new prescription drugs to the American people. The bill will allow manufacturers of pharmaceuticals requiring Federal regulatory approval prior to release, to reclaim patent protection for the period of time required for mandated testing and processing up to a maximum of 7 years.

Under present law, a research intensive pharmaceutical firm which submits a new drug to the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) for approval faces the prospect of losing much of the useful life of its patent protection while the drug undergoes the approval process. As the complexity and length of the approval process at FDA has increased over time, the average useful life of a standard 17-year patent has declined from about 14 years in 1966 to 7.4 years in 1980. At the same time, the cost of developing drugs has risen from an average of about $6 million in 1960 to a staggering $70 million today. This is not a good situation, especially when the drug industry is on the brink of major new medical breakthroughs.

The intent of this legislation is to place pharmaceutical firms on an equal footing with the rest of American industry, who face no regulatory hurdles before they can introduce new products. Drug manufacturers have come up with a number of effective pain relievers over the years. Now it is the Congress turn to deliver a pain reliever to them, in the form of long needed changes in the patent laws. I urge the bill's adoption.●

● Mrs. SCHNEIDER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H.R. 6444, the Patent Restoration Act. There are benefits and detriments to this legislation, but the primary question is—Do we want to forego the benefits of drug research?

Because of Federal regulatory requirements, it now takes 7 to 10 years to develop, test and obtain FDA approval for new medicines before they can be marketed. As a result, the average patent life left for new drugs approved for marketing in recent years has been less than half the 17 year period of patent protection that Congress has specified for all products.

This decline in effective patent life, coupled with an average cost of about $70 million per new medicine that enters the market, has been accompanied by a dramatic reduction in the number of new medicines introduced during the past 20 years. In 1960 the pharmaceutical industry produced 50 new medicines. Recently, the number of new medicines approved annually has amounted to only about one-half to one-quarter of that figure.

The patent has traditionally provided a major incentive for costly, risky research and development. Without it, many important advancements in medical, agriculture and other fields would not have occurred or been economically feasible. The sick will be the real victims of lost patent life.

Drugs have improved health care while in many instances reducing the need for surgery, but much work remains to be done. Research into incurable diseases, such as hypertension, glaucoma, herpes simplex, and mental illness, among many others, must be accelerated.

I ask my colleagues to reflect on the importance of health to the American people and the need to conquer disease. I am confident that with passage of this bill we will see a renewed effort in drug research. If, as some opponents maintain, research does not ensue and the public is not served, then I will work to change the situation so that it does. In the meantime, this is the best available vehicle for progress, and we ought to take it.●

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is one the motion offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. KASTENMEIER) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 6444, as amended.

The question was taken.

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the provisions of clause 5, rule I, and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings of this motion will be postponed.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 3 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill, H.R. 6444, just considered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request from the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF TITLE XVII OF PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE ACT

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 6384) to extend title XVII of the Public Health Service Act.

H.R. 6384

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 1701(b) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 300u(b)) is amended by striking out "and" after "1981," and by inserting before the period a comma and the following: "$8,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1983, and $9,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1984".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from California (Mr. WAXMAN) will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. MADIGAN) will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California (Mr. WAXMAN).

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this bill reauthorizes the health information and health promotion programs carried out by the Department of Health and Human Services. These programs, working closely with State and local government—as well as with such local private groups as the American Red Cross and the YMCA, are among our best hopes for containing the human and monetary costs of disease.

Whatever the setting, individuals who are better informed about health and healthy lifestyles are more likely to make responsible choices about their own health care and health habits. Through this authority the Surgeon General published his original report on health promotion and disease prevention, entitled "Healthy People."

Through this reauthorization, the Department of Health and Human Services will be able to continue and expand the efforts to implement the recommendations of "Healthy People" and will provide the public, educators, and professionals with information that will allow them to understand and use the principles of public health.

The public health problems of the 1980's will more and more include those chronic problems and conditions for which health information, promotion, and education are important—and sometimes the only—types of prevention activities available to society. This bill provides the Secretary of HHS with a specific vehicle in the basic Public Health Service Act to foster more effective strategies and methods for use by the many public and private sector groups that sponsor health promotion progams.

Mr. Speaker, under this authority the Secretary will be able to work through the Centers for Disease Control and the Office of Health Promotion to return—dozens of times over—savings in illness averted and disease prevented.

The Commerce Committee reported this bill without amendment by voice vote. I urge its adoption.

Mr. MADIGAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to urge the support of my colleagues for H.R. 6384, a bill which provides for a simple extension of title 17 of the Public Health Service Act through fiscal year 1984.

This is the legislative authority under which the Department of Health and Human Services conducts its health promotion and health information program. These education, information, and promotion activities form the cornerstone of the Department's prevention initiative.

The Committee on Energy and Commerce supports the continued efforts of the Department of HHS to educate the public, encouraging individuals to make more informed decisions about their activities which may lead to better health habits.

H.R. 6384 is a noncontroversial bill that was reported by voice vote without amendment by the Committee on Energy and Commerce. Authorization levels contained in the bill are for $8 million in fiscal year 1983 and $9 million in fiscal year 1984. Although no agency views were filed, it is my understanding that the administration supports this bill. I support H.R. 6384 and urge my colleagues to do likewise.

● Mr. CORRADA. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 6384, extending the health information and health promotion programs authorized under title XVII of the Public Health Service Act and increasing the funding level from $1.5 million currently for 1982 to $8 million in fiscal year 1983 and $9 million in fiscal year 1984.

The health information and health promotion programs were created in 1976 under Public Law 94-317 to provide "new and expanded authority for programs in health information and health promotion." These programs provide among others for the creation of an Office of Health Information and Health Prevention which "coordinates all activities within the Department of Health and Human Services related to health information and health promotion; coordinates its activities with similar activities of organizations in the private sector; and establishes a national information clearinghouse to facilitate the exchange of information and health promotion."

Also under this legislation, the National Health Promotion Training Network was created. This network has been carrying out extensive and effective work with local agencies, such as the American Red Cross, the YMCA, and the National Urban League.

This legislation provided for an essential part of the national prevention strategy: The Center for Disease Control. This Center has done important research, and has provided technical assistance to States, so the programs adopt and use available health promotion and education approaches.

The importance of available information for the Nation, including Puerto Rico on health issues and prevention is manifest. The Committee on Energy and Commerce anticipates that with the reauthorization of these programs, the Department of Health and Human Services will be able to expand its effort to implement recommendations to provide important information to the public, and to foster continued effective strategies and methods for use by the public and private sector groups sponsoring health promotion programs. Furthermore, the committee asserts that with the reauthorization of this bill no inflation impact will be felt.

Thus, I urge my colleagues to vote in support of H.R. 6384 to continue and increase the effectiveness of this Nation's health information and health promotion programs.●

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. MADIGAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. WAXMAN) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 6384.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PROPOSED LEGISLATION ENTITLED "THE CRIMINAL JUSTICE REFORM ACT OF 1982"—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 97-234)

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read and, together with the accompanying papers, without objection, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed:

(For message, see proceedings of the Senate of today, Monday, September 13, 1982.)

ABANDONMENT OF U.S. HUMAN RIGHTS POLICY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York (Mr. BINGHAM) is recognized for 10 minutes.

● Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I rise to express my horror and outrage that the Reagan administration last week abandoned this country's policy on human rights by approving a commercial sale of 500 electric shock batons to the Republic of South Korea. Shock batons are devices which may be used for interrogation and torture, as well as crowd control.

Leg irons, handcuffs, mace, fingerprint equipment, shotguns, thumbscrews, shock batons, and other "police-type" equipment are on the U.S. list of "crime control and detection equipment." U.S. Government approval is required under the Export Administration Act of 1979 to export these items to any country other than the NATO nations, Japan, Australia, and New Zealand.

Refusing to supply such equipment to regimes which have little regard for their citizens' human rights is essential to deterring human rights violations, and to distancing the United States from such regimes.

The State Department, which vigorously opposed this sale, stated in the most recent report on human rights practices in South Korea, "There were numerous allegations of torture * * *." And the Japan Emergency Christian Conference on Korean Problems recently stated:

> The use of torture today is, if anything, more systematic and brutal than at any previous time in modern Korean history.

The Commerce Department's OK of this sale, over the State Department's objection, signals all peoples of the world that pursuit of the almighty dollar includes providing oppressive regimes with instruments of torture. The decision is an embarrassment to President Reagan, who declared on Human Rights Day, December 10, 1981:

> We will continue to strive to respect these rights fully in our own country and to promote their observance abroad.

The sale of shock batons to South Korea promotes disregard, not observance, of human rights. If the President indeed intends to promote observance of human rights, he should dismiss the Commerce Department officials responsible for ignoring the State Department's recommendation that this export be denied.●

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California (Mr. STARK) is recognized for 5 minutes.

[Mr. STARK addressed the House. His remarks will appear hereafter in the Extensions of Remarks.]

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to:

Mr. PEPPER (at the request of Mr. WRIGHT), for this week, on account of leading the House delegation to the meeting of the Inter-Parliamentary Union.

SPECIAL ORDERS GRANTED

By unanimous consent, permission to address the House, following the legislative program and any special orders heretofore entered, was granted to:

(The following Members (at the request of Mr. WAXMAN) to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material:)

Mr. ANNUNZIO, for 5 minutes, today.
Mr. COELHO, for 5 minutes, today.
Mr. BINGHAM, for 10 minutes, today.
Mr. STARK, for 5 minutes, today.
Mr. SIMON, for 60 minutes, on September 21.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

By unanimous consent, permission to revise and extend remarks was granted to:

Mr. KASTENMEIER, and to include extraneous matter, on H.R. 6444.

(The following Members (at the request of Mr. MADIGAN) and to include extraneous matter:)

Mr. SMITH of Alabama.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 22 minutes p.m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, September 14, 1982, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

4715. A letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting the determination that it is in the national interest of the United States to make monthly payments under loan guarantees or credit assurances extended to the Polish People's Republic, pursuant to section 205 of Public Law 97-216; to the Committee on Appropriations.

4716. A letter from the Director, Office on Management and Budget, transmitting a cumulative report on rescissions and deferrals of budget authority as of September 1, 1982, pursuant to section 1014(e) of Public Law 93-344 (H. Doc. No. 97-236); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

4717. A letter from the Director, Defense Security Assistance Agency, transmitting a report on the impact on U.S. readiness of the proposed sale by the Air Force of defense articles to Korea (Transmittal No. 82-78), pursuant to section 813 of Public Law 94-106; to the Committee on Armed Services.

4718. A letter from the Director, Defense Security Assistance Agency, transmitting a report on the impact on U.S. readiness of the proposed sale by the Navy of defense articles to Egypt (Transmittal No. 82-83), pursuant to section 813 of Public Law 94-106; to the Committee on Armed Services.

4719. A letter from the Director, Defense Security Assistance Agency, transmitting a report on the impact on U.S. readiness of the proposed sale by the Navy of defense articles to France (Transmittal No. 82-76), pursuant to section 813 of Public Law 94-106; to the Committee on Armed Services.

4721. A letter from the Chairman, Federal Financial Institutions Examination Council, transmitting a report, "Section 340 Fair Housing Lending Study," pursuant to section 340(e) of Public Law 96-399; to the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs.

4722. A letter from the Assistant Secretary of State for Congressional Relations, transmitting a determination that it is in the national interest for the Eximbank to extend credit and guarantee loans to the People's Republic of China, pursuant to section 2(b)(2) of the Export-Import Bank Act of 1945, as amended; to the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs.

4723. A letter from the Chairperson, National Advisory Council on Indian Education, transmitting the eighth annual report of the Council, pursuant to section 442(b)(6) of Public Law 92-318; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

4724. A letter from the Secretary of Health and Human Services, transmitting the 1981 annual report on the National Health Service Corps, pursuant to section 366A of the Public Health Service Act, as amended; to the Committee on Energy and Commerce.

4725. A letter from the Secretary of Transportation and the President of the National Railroad Passenger Corporation, transmitting the annual report of the Railroad Revitalization and Regulatory Reform Act with respect to the completion of the Northeast corridor improvement project, pursuant to Public Law 94-210; to the Committee on Energy and Commerce.

4726. A letter from the Chairman, National Digestive Diseases Advisory Board, transmitting the Board's first annual report of its activities, pursuant to section 437(j) of the Public Health Service Act; to the Committee on Energy and Commerce.

4727. A letter from the Director, Defense Security Assistance Agency, transmitting notice of the Navy's intention to offer to sell certain defense articles and services to Egypt (Transmittal No. 82-83), pursuant to section 36(b) of the Arms Export Control Act; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

4728. A letter from the Director, Defense Security Assistance Agency, transmitting notice of the Navy's intention to offer to sell certain defense articles and services to Brazil (Transmittal No. 82-79), pursuant to section 36(b) of the Arms Export Control Act; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

4729. A letter from the Director, Defense Security Assistance Agency, transmitting notice of the Navy's intention to offer to sell certain defense articles and services to France (Transmittal No. 82-76), pursuant to section 36(b) of the Arms Export Control Act; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

4730. A letter from the Director, Defense Security Assistance Agency, transmitting notice of the Air Force's intention to offer to sell certain defense articles and services to Korea (Transmittal No. 82-78), pursuant to section 36(b) of the Arms Export Control Act; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

4731. A letter from the Assistant Secretary of State for Congressional Relations, transmitting notice that it is in the national interest to grant assistance to private sector organizations within the country of Tanzania, pursuant to section 620(q) of the Foreign Assistance Act; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

4732. A letter from the Assistant Secretary of State for Congressional Relations, transmitting a report of political contributions of Ambassador-designate Peter D. Constable, and members of his family, pursuant to section 304(b)(2) of Public Law 96-465; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

4733. A letter from the Assistant Secretary of State for Congressional Relations, transmitting a report of political contributions by Ambassador-designate Henry Allen Holmes, and members of his family, pursuant to section 304(b)(2) of Public Law 96-465; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

4734. A letter from the Assistant Secretary of State for Congressional Relations, transmitting a report of political contributions by Ambassador-designate Rozanne L. Ridgeway, and members of her family, pursuant to section 304(b)(2) of Public Law 96-465; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

4735. A letter from the Assistant Legal Adviser for Treaty Affairs, Department of State, transmitting copies of international agreements, other than treaties, entered into by the United States, pursuant to 1 U.S.C. 112b(a); to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

4736. A letter from the Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense, transmitting notice of a proposed new records system, pursuant to 5 U.S.C. 552a(o); to the Committee on Government Operations.

4737. A letter from the Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense (Administration), transmitting notice of a proposed new records system, pursuant to 5 U.S.C. 552a(o); to the Committee on Government Operations.

4738. A letter from the Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense (Administration), transmitting notice of a proposed new records system, pursuant to 5 U.S.C. 552a(o); to the Committee on Government Operations.

4739. A letter from the Director, Office of Personnel Management, transmitting the third annual report on the financial status of the civil service retirement system for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1981, pursuant to section 121(a) of Public Law 95-595; to the Committee on Government Operations.

4740. A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting notice of the leasing systems to be used in oil and gas lease sale No. 71, Diapir Field, to be held on October 13, 1982, pursuant to section 8(a)(8) of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act, as amended; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

4741. A letter from the Director, Minerals Management Service, Department of the Interior, transmitting notice of the proposed refund totaling $78,906 to Conoco Inc., Diamond Shamrock Corp., Oxy Petroleum Inc., and Union Texas Petroleum for an excess royalty payment, purusant to section 10(b) of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act of 1953; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

4742. A letter from the Director, Minerals Management Service, Department of the Interior, transmitting notice of the proposed refund of $1,109.67 to the Amoco Production Co. for an excess royalty payment, pursuant to section 10(b) of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act of 1953; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

4743. A letter from the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, transmitting notice that this Court will open the October 1982 term on October 4, 1982, at 10 a.m., and will continue, pursuant to our present calendar, until all matters before the Court, ready for argument, have been disposed of or decided; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

4744. A letter from the Special Prosecutor, Department of Justice, transmitting a supplemental report pursuant to the order of the Special Prosecutors Division of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit dated September 11, 1982, pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 595(a); to the Committee on the Judiciary.

4745. A letter from the Secretary of Transportation, transmitting a report on an application by the Margate Shipping Co. to retrofit three tankers in a foreign shipyard and its effect on the shipyard mobilization base, pursuant to Public Law 97-35; to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

4746. A letter from the Chairperson, Architectural and Transportation Barriers Compliance Board, transmitting the annual report of the Board for fiscal year 1981, pursuant to section 502(g) of Public Law 93-112; jointly, to the Committees on Education and Labor and Public Works and Transportation.

4747. A letter from the Acting Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting a report on Outer Continental Shelf production ratesetting functions (EMD-82-97, September 10, 1982); jointly, to the Committees on Government Operations and Interior and Insular Affairs.

4748. A letter from the Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting a report on moneys that can be saved through better energy management in Federal hospitals (GAO/HRD-82-77, September 1, 1982); jointly, to the Committees on Government Operations, Armed Services, Interior and Insular Affairs, Energy and Commerce, and Veterans' Affairs.

4749. A letter from the Secretary of Transportation, transmitting a report on the status of the public ports of the United States, pursuant to section 2 of Public Law 96-371; jointly, to the Committees on Merchant Marine and Fisheries and Public Works and Transportation.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII, reports of committees were delivered to the Clerk for printing and reference to the proper calendar, as follows:

[Pursuant to the order of the House on September 9, 1982, the following report was filed on September 10, 1982]

Mr. HUGHES: Committee on the Judiciary. H.R. 6946. A bill to amend title 18 of the United States Code to provide penalties for certain false identification related crimes; with an amendment (Rept. No. 97-802). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 5 of rule X and clause 4 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CHAPPELL (for himself and Mr. RUSSO):

H.R. 7090. A bill to repeal the provisions of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1982 which, for fiscal years 1983, 1984, and 1985, reduce and delay cost-of-living increases in annuities and retired or retainer pay based on Government service and reduce, in relation to the amount of such increases, the pay of members and former members of the uniformed services for their service in Federal civilian positions; to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

By Mr. HEFTEL:

H.R. 7091. A bill to amend the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 to make first concurrent resolutions on the budget binding, to eliminate second concurrent resolutions on the budget, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. PARRIS:

H.J. Res. 592. Joint resolution designating January 17, 1983, as "Public Employees' Appreciation Day"; to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

MEMORIALS

Under clause 4 of rule XXII, memorials were presented and referred as follows:

465. By the SPEAKER. Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Washington, relative to H.R. 3663, the Bus Regulatory Reform Act of 1982; to the Committee on Public Works and Transportation.

466. Also, memorial of the Legislature of the State of California, relative to gas and electric utility rates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

ADDITIONAL SPONSORS

Under clause 4 of rule XXII, sponsors were added to public bills and resolutions as follows:

H.R. 750: Mr. BROWN of Ohio, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mrs. SMITH of Nebraska, and Mr. ERDAHL.

H.R. 865: Mr. SOLOMON.

H.R. 2034: Mr. ANDREWS, Mr. KINDNESS, Mr. ROSE, Mr. SWIFT, and Mr. WILLIAMS of Montana.

H.R. 2347: Mr. SOLOMON.

H.R. 5362: Mr. HANSEN of Idaho.

H.R. 5995: Mr. FITHIAN.

H.R. 6170: Mrs. FENWICK.

H.R. 6306: Mr. HARTNETT, Mr. SPENCE, Mr. NAPIER, and Mr. CAMPBELL.

H.R. 6364: Mr. BAILEY of Pennsylvania.

H.R. 6573: Mr. LAGOMARSINO.

H.R. 6591: Mr. YOUNG of Missouri.

H.R. 6596: Mr. COELHO, Mr. WAXMAN, Mr. MARTINEZ, Mr. EDGAR, Mrs. KENNELLY, Mr. BEREUTER, Mr. DWYER, and Mrs. HECKLER.

H.R. 6970: Mr. PATMAN, Mr. LANTOS, Mr. MATTOX, Mr. RAHALL, Mr. HUCKABY, Mr. WON PAT, Mr. MINISH, Mr. KINDNESS, Mr. ANDREWS, Mr. HUGHES, Mrs. SCHROEDER, Mr. YATRON, Mr. BEARD, Mr. SANTINI, Mr. RATCHFORD, Mr. MOTTL, Mr. BAFALIS, Mr. FROST, Mr. FAZIO, and Mr. ROE.

H.J. Res. 144: Mr. MOLLOHAN, Mr. LEE, and Mr. ROSE.

H.J. Res. 531: Mr. ADDABBO, Mr. AKAKA, Mr. ALBOSTA, Mr. ALEXANDER, Mr. ANDERSON, Mr. ANDREWS, Mr. ANNUNZIO, Mr. BAFALIS, Mr. BAILEY of Pennsylvania, Mr. BARNES, Mr. BEILENSON, Mr. BEVILL, Mr. BIAGGI, Mr. BOLAND, Mr. BONER of Tennessee, Mrs. BOUQUARD, Mr. BOWEN, Mr. BRINKLEY, Mr. BRODHEAD, Mr. BURGENER, Mr. JOHN L. PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

588. By the SPEAKER: Petition of the International Typographical Union, Colorado Springs, Colo., relative to the President's veto of the extension of the manufacturing clause of the U.S. copyright laws; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

589. Also, petition of the American Bar Association, Chicago, Ill., relative to certain amendments to an appropriations bill being subject to a point of order; to the Committee on Rules.

590. Also, petition of the Centre County Board of Commissioners, Bellefonte, Pa., relative to a nuclear arms freeze; jointly, to the Committees on Armed Services and Foreign Affairs.

AMENDMENTS

Under clause 6 of rule XXIII, proposed amendments were submitted as follows:

H.R. 6956

By Mr. FLIPPO:

—On page 20, line 13, strike out "$5,542,800,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$5,402,800,000", and

On page 20, line 17, insert immediately before the period the following: ": Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated under this heading shall be obligated or otherwise made available for the sole-source procurement of the design, development, or production of liquid-hydrogen, liquid-oxygen (Centaur) upper stages".

By Mr. WALGREN:

—Page 42, immediately after line 18, insert the following new section:

"SEC. 416. None of the funds appropriated by this Act may be obligated or expended to promulgate, issue, prescribe, implement, administer, make or enforce any finding, rule, order, or sanction under the Clean Air Act on any State or political subdivision thereof for failure to adopt, implement, conduct, or enforce a vehicle emission control inspection and maintenance program. Nothing in this section shall be construed to preclude the use of funds for the purpose of providing technical assistance under such Act to any State or political subdivision thereof.".

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

THE JOURNAL OF COMMUNITY ACTION

HON. JOHN CONYERS, JR.

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 9, 1982

● Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, the Journal of Community Action is one of the most promising and innovative channels of communication I have come across in the areas of community development, local-State-Federal relations, and neighborhood economic development. Edited by two veteran community organizer-analysts, Nelson Rosenbaum and Milton Kotler, the bimonthly journal offers in each issue very thorough coverage of public policy, reviews of literature, current research, and practical organizing. Of particular value is a regular feature, "Notes From the Field," which provides highly useful information on community projects across the country that have proved successful and are models for replication. Published by the Center for Responsive Governance in Washington, D.C., Community Action is bound to become a leading journal, and I wish its editors every success.

An article by Lawrence Bailis, "Community-Based Organizations and CETA," that appeared in the January-February 1982 issue, reflects the high-quality journalism that is typical of Community Action. I recommend the article, that follows, to my colleagues.

COMMUNITY-BASED ORGANIZATIONS AND CETA

(By Lawrence N. Bailis)

As is almost always the case, federally funded employment and training programs are now at a critical crossroads. During the past fifteen years, supporters of these programs have seen expenditures for the Comprehensive Employment and Training Act (CETA) and its predecessors grow from less than a billion dollars a year to more than $10 billion, only to see them reduced sharply to less than one-third that size, with further cuts likely.

The growth of these programs has been accompanied by the rise of non-profit organizations that claim to serve all or portions of the client community, groups known as "community based organizations" (CBOs) in the CETA parlance. Many nationwide as well as local unaffiliated community groups were created largely in response to the availability of funding for what were then known as manpower programs (and are now known as employment and training programs since the term "manpower" is currently considered a sexist word). Other community groups had been in existence long before the creation of manpower programs but used the CETA program and its predecessors as an opportunity to widen the range of services that they were providing to the community.

During the past decade, the destinies of the employment and training programs and the CBOs that have provided services in them have become increasingly intertwined. Aided in part by federal regulations that encourage utilization of community groups, CBOs have received as much as one-fifth of the monies allocated to training adults, and the bulk of the monies for certain youth employment and training programs.

The importance of community based organizations to CETA has outweighed their share of total funding dollars. The documented successes of certain community groups in reaching, training, and employing disadvantaged Americans—and the political support enjoyed by many of these organizations—helped to promote the sustained growth in CETA funding. The equally well documented shortcomings in CBO management practices have, on the other hand, hurt the overall image of the problem, and thereby contributed to the atmosphere that has helped to promote the recent and ongoing cutbacks.

While many CBOs have developed a broad base of public and private sector funding sources, CETA has become the primary source of funding for many others. Federal grants have helped to sustain many organizations which have become spokesmen for the disadvantaged in areas that go far beyond preparation for the world of work. The cutbacks in CETA and other federal funding sources are thus jeopardizing the viability of many community groups, and forcing almost all of them to step up their efforts to provide alternative sources of funding.

Most of the discussion about the future of federally funded employment and training programs has focused on structural issues such as whether or not the current Prime Sponsor system should be preserved, or on the roles to be played by state government, local government, and the business community. However, for the reasons outlined above, analysis of the potential roles to be played by community groups should play an important part in ongoing efforts to enact a new federally funded employment and training system to replace CETA.

FRAMEWORK FOR DECISIONMAKING

Decisions about the future role of CBOs in employment and training systems should be made on the basis of two kinds of considerations: (a) the future shape of these systems and their objectives, and (b) assessments about the ability of community-based organizations to promote achievement of these objectives as evidenced by their previous track record.

At first glance, neither of these considerations can provide clear guidance. First, while a large number of different legislative proposals have been considered, no one can be sure what federal employment and training program of the future will look like. Second, nearly a decade of CETA research and evaluation studies has failed to provide definitive conclusions about the strengths and weaknesses of CBOs as service deliverers, or even more general information about what factors contribute to making an organization an effective provider of training services.

However, prudent planners cannot wait until the future is totally clear and predictable, and those who seek to affect the future do not have the luxury of waiting until all of the relevant data has been collected and analyzed. If they do wait, they will find that others have already made key decisions without ever consulting them. Therefore, now is an opportune time to review the role of CBOs in the past and reach conclusions about the role that they can play in the future.

WHITHER CETA?

Before attempting to prescribe the proper role for community based organizations in future federally funded employment and training systems, one must first address two sets of issues:

Is there likely to be any federal funding for such programs beyond the next year or two, and

If so, what are the program goals and structure likely to look like?

While it is always hazardous to make predictions on topics such as this (and doubly hazardous to put one's predictions into print where they can be so easily retrieved and reviewed), several conclusions appear justified by the contents of the legislative proposals offered by Senators Quayle and Kennedy and Representatives Hawkins and Jeffords.

First, major changes in the structure and functioning of employment and training programs seem inevitable. Even those who are happiest with the current CETA system admit that severe cutbacks are raising questions about such previously fundamental aspects of the CETA system as reliance upon local general-purpose governments representing 100,000 or more citizens as the basic planning and operational unit ("Prime Sponsor") under the system, and the importance of providing training allowances to permit low-income disadvantaged men and women to participate in training programs at all.

Beyond this, a general consensus appears to have emerged from recent Congressional hearings on CETA that the goals of the reauthorized or redesigned program should stress provision of training opportunities rather than Public Service Employment to the disadvantaged, and in particular to disadvantaged youth.

Despite these changes, the goals of future employment and training efforts are likely to resemble many of the current ones. It also seems reasonable to expect important continuities in the overall structure in which planning and service delivery take place. Some have called for retaining the current Prime Sponsor system in which cities and counties with a population of 100,000 or more are responsible for employment and training, with the state governors responsible for portions of states that do not meet the 100,000 cut off. Others have called for raising the population cutoff, and/or increasing the role of the governor as overseer or operator of the entire system within a state. Almost everyone seems to be calling for an increased role by the business community in planning and operating future programs. But, whichever of these or other alternatives is finally chosen, it is clear that some organization will be given responsibility for providing training and related services in a given jurisdiction. That organization will have to decide (a) whether it wishes to provide these services directly or to subcontract for at least some of them, and (b) if they are subcontracted, whom to subcontract them to.

In short, it seems increasingly likely that there will be either government bodies or consortia including government that will be deciding what role—if any—CBOs should be playing in the planning and administration of skills training programs for disadvantaged Americans. While politics will inevitably play a role in making these decisions, empirically based evaluations of the potential and limitations of community groups can also be expected to be influential. The remainder of this article seeks to provide information that will further such planning at both the federal and local levels.

LESSONS FROM THE PAST

During the first eight fiscal years of CETA, community-based organizations have played virtually every conceivable role in the planning and delivering of employment and training services. Many Prime Sponsors, especially the larger ones, have permitted CBOs to function as comprehensive service deliverers, i.e., to perform all needed services from outreach and recruitment of trainees through provision of training and supportive services to eventual placement of clients and followup on their progress on-the-job. Other Prime Sponsors have divided responsibility for client services among a number of organizations, but have given CBOs a number of important functions to carry out.

A recent survey of utilization of CBOs among twenty Prime Sponsors revealed the extent to which CBOs provide training services in adult programs. (Urban Systems, 1979). In cases where community outreach was subcontracted, it was done exclusively by community based organizations. Nearly 80 percent of the subcontractors with responsibility for provision of counseling and related supportive services were CBOs, and more than half of the agencies that provided specialized job development and/or placement were community groups. In addition to this, nearly half of the combined outreach, intake, assessment, and classroom training responsibilities that were subcontracted were assigned to CBOs as well. CBOs were also the leading choice of Prime Sponsors to deliver so-called work experience (on-the-job programs in which the primary benefit is developing work habits rather than skill acquisition) and represented more than 40 percent of the sub-grantees with responsibility for on-the-job training.

If there were universally accepted standards of performance for community-based service deliveries and adequate data to assess their performance, one could review this past experience and decide what CBOs did best, under what circumstances, and so forth. Unfortunately, neither the standards nor the data exist, and so the lessons from the past are more dependent upon judgement than mathematical manipulation of performance data. While there are disputes about all parts of the CBO record to date, it is possible to make relatively conclusive assessments of the role of CBOs as advocates for the client community, as links between that community and the more mainstream training institutions, and as direct deliverers of classroom training services.

THE ADVOCACY ROLE

While statistics about impact of training on earnings of trainees are sometimes hard to come by, there is broad recognition of the fact that community based organizations have been playing a client advocacy role since their initial involvement in employment and training programs. While all agencies that provide CETA services have felt pressures to "cream," i.e., to serve those who are most likely to succeed within the overall eligible group, many CBOs have apparently been relatively successful in resisting these pressures. While the employer community has incentives, to press for serving those who are most likely to become model employees, CBOs have competing incentives to remind government agencies and employers alike that one cannot measure the effectiveness of programs in terms of overall placement rates and cost per placement.

The creative tension between the drive to demonstrate cost-effectiveness and the need to serve those most in need is likely to persist into the foreseeable future. While government agencies serving as Prime Sponsors or overseers of employment and training programs might try to resist pressures to cream, a review of the CETA record to date does not give one total confidence that this can be expected to occur throughout all of the decentralized components of employment and training programs across the Nation.

Given this situation, it would seem reasonable to maintain the current statutory role for CBOs in planning employment and training programs—and to consider expanding it. Care must be taken, of course, to insure that advocacy of client needs does not become distorted into advocacy for providing money for CBOs regardless of their merits. The experience with CETA to date, however, suggests that there is little reason to be concerned that CBOs will become overly influential in a planning process that is shared among government officials, business leaders, and other key actors.

LINKAGES TO THE COMMUNITY

Community based deliverers of employment and training service have been funded, in large part, to remedy the perceived failures of so-called mainstream service deliverers (such as public schools, community colleges, and proprietary schools) to serve minorities and other disadvantaged clients. While CBOs have sometimes been seen as competitors to these mainstream groups, they have also often served as the "glue" that has linked the mainstream employment and training system together with the minority and disadvantaged client community.

The history of employment and training programs is replete with examples in which community groups have successfully promoted linkages between mainstream agencies and their disadvantaged clientele through the conduct of such activities as:

Outreach to the client community that is promoted by formal and informal ties between CBO staff and potential client groups,

Intake that is promoted by the location of many CBOs directly in the neighborhoods where clients line,

Assessment of client needs that is promoted by the rapport that can be developed between CBO staff and clients, and Direct placement of minority groups to further affirmative action goals of major employers that is promoted by all of the other three above-listed factors.

With the increased emphasis on economic development within the employment and training systems, community-based organizations have the potential to provide new forms of linkages. Perhaps the most promising of these is promoting ties between minority small businesses and larger Chambers of Commerce or Private Industry Councils.

In recent years, there has been a trend towards centralization of the functions of outreach, intake, assessment and placement, with Prime Sponsors directly carrying out these activities rather than subcontracting them to CBOs and other groups. It is widely believed that these centralized efforts are most desirable in smaller Prime Sponsors where geographic compactness and the relatively small numbers of clients permit centralized facilities to be accessible to those from outlying neighborhoods and where it is administratively feasible to carry them out in a single location. If, as seems likely, the service delivery areas of the future will be larger than the current prime sponsorships, the desirability of centralized outreach, intake, assessment, and placement will decline, and the relative attractiveness of delegating these tasks to community groups with a strong base in the neighborhoods where clients are drawn from will increase.

The above discussion provides logical arguments in favor of utilizing community groups to deliver services that link the mainstream organizations that are delivering employment and training services with the members of and organizations within the client community. But even if the logic is convincing to supporters of community groups, it is doubtful whether it will be enough to convince those with operational responsibility for future employment and training systems. Therefore, the burden of proof is likely to fall on community groups themselves to demonstrate that (a) such linkages are necessary if the overall system is to function as intended and (b) the community groups are better equipped to provide these linkage services than other organizational alternatives.

Doing so will not be easy. The CETA evaluation literature does not provide definitive conclusions on the relative advantages and disadvantages of utilizing community groups for outreach, intake and placement, as opposed to centralizing them within a single government agency. But the difficulty of the task does not diminish the need to proceed with it.

PROVISION OF TRAINING

The rhetoric of CBOs proclaims that community groups are more sensitive to the special needs of disadvantaged Americans than others and are therefore in a better position to provide meaningful training opportunities. The rhetoric of those who oppose CBO involvement in training stresses the importance of having up-to-date training methods and equipment, high standards, and close ties to the employer community, and notes that CBOs are often weak in these regards.

There is logic behind both sets of claims. Therefore, while strong cases can be made that CBOs deserve consideration as advocates and links to the client community, there are no obvious conclusions to be drawn about utilizing CBOs to deliver classroom training, or other skills acquisition opportunities such as on-the-job training.

CBOs have provided a substantial proportion of the total CETA classroom training services in the past. However, much of the CBO training has been pre-vocational (e.g. orientation to work routines and English as a Second Language) as opposed to skills training. But no study that we are aware of has provided definitive conclusions about the strengths and weaknesses of CBOs as providers of either pre-vocational or skills training service deliverers.

In the absence of any hard data one way or the other, it seems prudent to avoid drawing any overall conclusions about the desirability of utilizing CBOs to deliver either pre-vocational or vocational skills training. Instead, agencies that are responsible for selecting service deliverers in the future—be they Prime Sponsors or Private Industry Councils—would be well advised to require that those who would provide such services provide them in a demonstrably effective way, i.e., to build an evaluative capacity into their programs so that those funding them can see for themselves what they are getting for their money, and can compare these results with other service deliverers in the same jurisdiction or in similar jurisdictions.

Although methodologies for assessing the performance of individual training agencies across Prime Sponsors have yet to be developed, it would be desirable that they take into account CBO claims that they are serving clients who are more disadvantaged than are the clients of other institutions, and that CBO and non-CBO service deliverers be involved in their development.

THE QUESTION OF ACCOUNTABILITY

Any effort to assess the performance of CBOs in the past and prescribe a role for them in the future must address the issue of the management performance of community groups and the widespread beliefs that such groups cannot be relied upon to carry out their employment and training responsibilities in a "businesslike" way, i.e. with adequate record keeping and accounting safeguards.

Even the most enthusiastic supporters of community groups admit that there have been instances of inadequate record keeping by CBOs that have delivered services in the employment and training systems of the past. Some of them argue that if the staff of CBOs spent more time bringing record keeping systems up to date, it would mean spending less time with clients. But regardless of the reasons, those choosing to eliminate CBOs from CETA service delivery systems have done so on the grounds of management shortcomings far more often than on the grounds of inadequate performance.

Whatever justification such excuses may have had in the past, they clearly have no place in the employment and training systems of the future in which funding will be reduced, and in which pressures to demonstrate effectiveness will become stronger and stronger. If community groups cannot meet the record-keeping and procedural requirements of those who pass out employment and training monies, they will not have much opportunity to provide any excuses in the future.

SUMMARY AND CONCLUSIONS

The employment and training programs of the future are likely to resemble those of the past in many important ways. The experience of nearly two decades of community based organization involvement in these programs appears to justify involvement of such organizations in the planning for such programs in the role of client advocates.

Although logical arguments can be advanced to explain why community groups bring special advantages to the jobs of outreach to the community, intake and assessment, and the provision of skills training and supportive services, logic alone will no longer be sufficient to guarantee roles for community groups in such functions. The CBO record seems to justify giving community groups a chance to show that they can serve the client groups of future programs as cost-effectively as anyone else. But the only way to insure future involvement of community groups in the operation of employment and training programs will be to marshall evidence that funding community groups can help to achieve the objectives of whoever is running the system. CETA Prime Sponsors, state Governors, or Private Industry Councils will be under increasing pressure to show that they are providing cost-effective services to the disadvantaged. CBOs will be under increasing pressure to help them do this.

In the past, efforts to evaluate the effectiveness of community groups have generally been left to CETA Prime Sponsors and the academic research community. But the need for demonstration of effectiveness is likely to become so great in the future that community groups would be well-advised to develop a capacity to carry out such evaluation activities on their own, so as to avoid dependence upon others.

If community groups can demonstrate the need for their services and their effectiveness in providing them, neither rhetoric nor federal regulations mandating a role for community groups will be necessary. To the extent that they can not demonstrate their effectiveness, they may be left with little more than rhetoric and nostalgic reveries for the "good old days."●

PERSPECTIVES ON THE MIDDLE EAST

HON. PAUL N. McCLOSKEY, JR.

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 13, 1982

● Mr. McCLOSKEY. Mr. Speaker, during the summer recess, I was privileged to address the Commonwealth Club of San Francisco on the day after the President proposed his new Mideast peace initiative.

A copy of that speech follows:

PERSPECTIVES ON THE MIDDLE EAST

Ladies and Gentlemen: Thank you very much. If it is with some disjointedness that I address you today, it is in part because I had to rewrite my speech last night after listening to President Reagan give about four-fifths of what I was going to say to you today as to what should happen in the Mideast. Secondly, I've interrupted my honeymoon of ten days duration, the first five days on the River of No Return, the Middle Fork of the Salmon River; we go backpacking this evening, and those thoughts are much on my mind.

But with respect to the Middle East, you have seen the same papers I have: "McCloskey has become obsessed with the problem. Even his friends say he has gone too far." Let me try to lay out my perspective of the Mideast and of its importance to you, to me, to our children and to their children.

Thirty-seven years ago in this city we founded the United Nations in the hope that we could create, as we had in this country, a world forum for negotiation and dispute settlement under law, recognizing that the only methods of settling disputes peacefully were by the ballot box, the judicial decision or by negotiation, and that the only alternative was war. And in that same year, and indeed in this same San Francisco Bay Area where the United Nations was founded 37 years ago, the United States introduced to the world a weapon that was conceived largely here in the San Francisco Bay Area. And as you look across this Bay today at the Campanile and recognize that the Berkeley Laboratory and the Los Alamos Laboratory in effect developed atomic weapons, it seems fitting and proper 37 years later that we look at the problems of this world in perspectives with respect to the United Nations and to our success in controlling atomic warfare. And I would concede to you that I have been obsessed to some extent in the attempt to try to prevent nuclear war.

In the past few years it has been growing increasingly apparent that the greatest danger of nuclear war stems not from our confrontation with the Russians and their leadership which, like ours, recognized that a major nuclear war between the United States and the Soviets would destroy their civilization, our civilization and most of what the world has built up over the past 4,000 years of recorded history, but the greatest danger of nuclear war could come out of a creation of the United Nations itself—the confrontation in the Mideast, in what was once formerly known as Palestine, when the United Nations, two years after its founding, enacted a resolution creating—it thought—a Jewish state and an Arab state side by side in what had formerly been Palestine. And the creation of that Jewish state and that Arab state was under Resolution 181 of the United Nations adopted in November 1947, looking ahead to that day in 1948 when the British mandate over Palestine would be withdrawn. And I submit to you that all of us today, in the effort to avoid nuclear war, should fully understand and study the history of the conflict that has evolved in the Mideast between the Arabs and the Israelis, and particularly the incredible step forward that I think President Reagan made in his speech of yesterday and the position that he has taken.

In my judgment, we face the danger of nuclear war within the next decade between the Arabs and the Israelis unless a homeland is found for the Palestinian people; and that young Palestinians are going to fight and die until that homeland is achieved. And there is no ethnic group in this country that should understand the willingness to fight and die if necessary to achieve a homeland so much as the Jewish community throughout the world which for nearly 15 hundred years has been seeking such a homeland and has fought and paid so dearly to create and to preserve the state of Israel.

Now if you go back to 1947 and the creation of Isreal with the withdrawal of the British on May 14th, 1948, the Israelis have fought three bitter wars—1948, 1956 and 1967—because in that first 20 years following the action of the United Nations, no Arab state and no Arab individual conceded that Israel had the right to exist. The view of the Arab world and of Arabs throughout the world was that the creation of Israel was illegal; that it was a usurpation of the promises that the British and the French had made to the Arabs back in World World I when, in order to overthrow the Turks and Turkish control of that region, and Byzantine control before that, not only had the British Balfour Declaration, in 1917, espoused Britain's view that there should be a Jewish homeland in the Mideast. At the same time the allies in World War I were promising the Arabs that if they would join in our fight against the Turks under the leadership of Lawrence of Arabia and others that there would be an Arab sovereignty in that area, something that had not existed since the days of Mohammad.

Those promises that were made in 1917 came into fruition in 1948. But for those first 20 years the Arabs did not accept Israel's right to exist. It was not until finally in 1967, when the Israelis defeated soundly the massed armies of the Arab world martialed against them, that Israel earned its right to exist. During that victory, they occupied four areas—the Golan Heights, the Gaza, the Sinai, the West Bank, known as Judea and Samaria, and East Jerusalem. Again the United Nations looked at the problem and, in 1967, adopted Resolution 242. Resolution 242 to which the President referred to in his speech last night, should be understood by every American for what it means. I want to quote to you the specific language adopted in 1967 by the United Nations, again bearing in mind that if this dispute is to be settled by law, by negotiation, by ballot box, by vote, that through the United Nations the hope exists to solve the problem other than through conflict.

There are two parts, basically, to Resolution 242. It affirms that the fulfillment of the chartered principles of the United Nations requires the establishment of a just and lasting peace in the Mideast, and should include the application of both the following principles: the withdrawal of Israeli armed forces from territories occupied in the recent conflict—the West Bank and Gaza being those relevant today; and the respect for and the acknowledgement of the sovereignty territorial integrity and political independence of every state in the area, the right to live in peace within secure and recognized boundaries, free from threats or acts of force.

Now clearly the resolution envisoned two things: First, that Israel be recognized as having a right to exist; and, second, when they would be free from force or threats of force, that Israel would withdraw from the occupied territories.

There was yet to be another war in 1973, and finally, in 1978, with Sadat's famous mission to Jerusalem. The Egyptians and the Israelis, brought together by President Carter, entered into the Camp David agreement. And, again, Camp David should be understood for specifically what it is in this step towards hopefully the building of international rules to go by.

Camp David, specifically, in its opening preamble referred to the agreement . . . UN Resolution 242, that basis, and I quote: "For a peaceful settlement of the conflict between Israel and its neighbors is United Nations Security Council Resolution 242 in all of its parts." The Israelis signed that agreement; the Egyptians signed that agreement—witnessed by the United States. Resolution 242 in all of its parts clearly envisions the ultimate autonomy and self rule over the West Bank and Gaza by the Arabs who live there—some 700,000 on the West Bank; some 400,000 on the Gaza Strip. Bear in mind that, with the 500,000 Arabs living in current Israel, if Israel were to annex the West Bank and Gaza it would have nearly as many Arabs, and more by the end of this century at their existing birth rate, than there are Israelis living in that part of the world.

Israel, thus in 1978, agreed to ultimately abandon the West Bank and Gaza in return for the guarantees of secure borders and an end to the threat of force. Getting the Egyptians off their southern flank was a tremendous achievement. The Israelis tend to say that they gave up a good deal. But look what they got: They removed a nation of 40 million people with a major armed force in the region as a threat on their southern flank with a demilitarized Sinai. Camp David left Jordan, Syria and Lebanon as potential enemies, but the armed forces of Jordan had never been significant; the Lebanese armed forces are practically nonexistent. Note what has happened in the last two months, in Syria. The Israelis destroyed over one-fourth of the Syrian Air Force and tanks with scarcely any losses at all. So during the current invasion of Lebanon, the Israelis have removed in the military threat of Syria; they removed the threat of Egypt when they signed the Camp David accords. But now, in 1982, the position of Israel has materially changed. And it changed with the election of Prime Minister Begin a year ago last June when he said on June 30 that his election was a mandate for the creation of "Yretz Israel," the historic Israel, the Israel that included Gaza and the West Bank, Judea and Samaria.

In the recent visit that a number of us made in the Mideast, we met with the heads of states of six nations, missing only King Hussein of Jordan. We met with Crown Prince Hassan of Jordan, however, and met with the defense ministers and the foreign ministers or their deputies in each country. The most significant instruction and lesson that we got, however, was in Jerusalem from an Israeli taxi cab driver who said the problem with our democracy is that we are not a rule of the majority in a democracy, our country Israel, we are the captives of a small minority, the religious parties who believe that we own the West Bank and Gaza and who believe that the historic Israel includes Judea, Samaria and Gaza. For Israel to reach its ultimate Zionist goal is to have that land a part of Israel—Ramallah, Bethlehem, Jerusalem, Nazareth and Jericho. And because of the very slender majority for Prime Minister Begin today, his government depends for its power upon the five representatives of the five percent of the Israeli people who believe that they own the West Bank, Samaria, Judea and Gaza. And to stay in power the Begin government must take the position that Begin has taken in his outright opposition to what the President said yesterday.

This creates a new problem for the United States because, until recently, the entire Jewish community and most Americans, and I included, believed that what was good for Israel was in the best interest of the United States as well. As President Reagan said when he was a candidate, you may recall, Israel is the only democracy in the Mideast; the only ally that we can rely upon. It is true that there isn't one of the 22 Arab governments that this nation can be sure is going to be governed by the same people or the same religious sect a year from today. Israel is by far the most stable of the nations in that area. But if Israel is to be our ally, and Israel does the wrong thing, and the United States backs Israel right or wrong, then we create enemies amongst the Arab nations who are irrevocably opposed to the expansion of Israel and, not only irrevocably opposed to the expansion of Israel, but with the dispersion of 4 million Palestinians throughout the 22 countries of that region, there isn't an Arab government in the Mideast that is not threatened by a Palestinian revolt or insurgency within their own country because the leadership of that country has not joined in what all Arabs agree: that there must be a restoration of a Arab participation in the holiest of all cities, Jerusalem, the temple of the Islamic faith, as well as of the Christian and the Jewish faiths.

So we are in a difficult position today, with Israel taking the position it has for the past year that it will annex the West Bank and Gaza. As Mr. Begin said in our presence: "How can we annex what is already ours?, pointing to the West Bank on the historic maps of Israel. As Mr. Sharon said a few months ago: "Shamit (in the Sinai) is the last territorial concession that we will make." You recall when they gave up the Sinai there was the conflict with their religious settlers who had settled in those areas and who resisted to the point of fire works. So here we have a situation where Israel says in 1982: "we are no longer going to accept Resolution 242 with its requirement that we give up the West Bank and Gaza." We were shown a map when we were in Jerusalem prepared by the Israelis and it showed 50% of the West Bank assigned for agricultural purposes; 40% assigned to Israeli settlements, new or planned, and only 10% to the 700,000 Arabs who live there. And in the last several years, Begin has moved to rapidly expand those settlements, to appropriate the land ownership rights, in many ways illegally, and to achieve absolute control over what is imperative to survival on the West Bank, and that is water. No Arab can drill a well. The Israelis control all new uses of water and are taking Arab water. And the circumstances are clear, I think, to any observer of that area, and have been clear to our State Department for some months, that Israel is rapidly moving to annex the West Bank and Gaza, as they have already annexed East Jerusalem and the Sinai. Which puts the United States then with the problem: Do we back Israel as we have for 32 years or do we back United Nations Resolution 242 which this country has put so much behind?

The irony of our visit in Jerusalem was that when the five of us in the Congress who met with Yasir Arafat said to him—in fact our purpose for talking with these leaders was to try to see if we could move them towards peace—"can't you accept U.N. Resolution 242?" can't you accept Israel's right to exist? Those are absolutely necessary if we are to move towards peace. "Arafat's response to us was that I can't accept 242 standing alone because 242 provides for the protection of Israel but it doesn't have any provision at all for the Palestinians. I can accept 242 if you take it in context with the other United Nations Resolutions, including 181 which creates an Arab state as well as a Jewish state. And I said, well, what do you mean? Put it in your language. He said I can accept all U.N. resolutions pertaining to the Palestinian problem if they are taken in context all together. I can accept in effect 242 with its protection and guarantees for an Israeli state, if the rest of the world will accept our right to a Palestinian state. That statement by Arafat was a very significant breakthrough. We weren't duped and we weren't misled. He made no secret of what he said. I can accept them all; I can't accept 242 standing alone. The problem that occurred was that the next day, his representatives in three different capitols, particularly Mr. Terzi, the Ambassador to the United Nations, said he did not intend that. He didn't really intend to include 242. He couldn't have. Three days later Mr. Terzi reversed himself, went before the United Nations and said yes, Chairman Arafat and the Palestinian Liberation Organization does accept 242 as part of all of the U.N. resolutions. But by that time the press had picked up the initial denials, and the credibility of both our statements and Mr. Arafat's were destroyed perhaps for a rather extended period of time.

But not the irony of the situation today. Ask yourself this question: Why has the United States been the only government in the world in the last 60 days to try to preserve the Palestinian Liberation Organization leadership? Why? What do we have at stake? What we have at stake is (1) the oil in the Mideast which furnishes 25% of our fundamental basic economy in this country, and (2) that if the Palestinians, 4 million of them now dispersed throughout the Arab world, continue to fight for a homeland and overthrow Arab governments in that area, the very reason for our interest in the Mideast, the solidarity of that area as a barrier to Soviet expansion, is destroyed.

You recall in 1978 when President Carter said very explicity: We will repel with military force, if necessary, any intrusion of a foreign power into the Persian Gulf. why? Because on a very narrow stretch of land along the Red Sea, Persian Gulf, Kuwait, Qatar, the Emirates, Bahrain, Saudi Arabia, 25% of the oil on which the U.S. economy depends and 50% of the oil of Europe is produced. The three countries that stand between the Persian Gulf and the Soviets are Pakistan, Iran and Turkey, not one of them what you could call a stable government upon which we could rely. So the stability of that area, the continued flow of oil to the United States, upon which our economy depends, the countries like Saudi Arabia and Kuwait, which if they had an interruption of production such as we saw in Iran or following the 1973 war, could result in economic impact in this country. Those problems have been sufficient to cause an American President, Jimmy Carter, not a hawk but a dove, to say that we will repel with military force, if necessay, a foreign intrusion into the Gulf.

So we have a great deal at stake in maintaining that stability. We have a tremendous stake in seeing that the Palestinian aspirations for a homeland are met and the one barrier to both United Nations policy and U.S. policy today as announced by the President is the intransigence of a country for whom we have learned a tremendous affection and respect over the last 36 years.

The battle for peace in the Mideast will be won in the public opinion in the United States as to whether the American people and the Congress will not permit the President to stand up to Prime Minister Begin of Israel. There is no indication at this point that Begin does not mean what he says that they intend to continue the settlements and to proceed with the annexation. Or that Defense Minister Sharon, who is probably his heir-apparent, is not absolutely convinced that the last territorial concession has been made and that the historic Israel of Judea, Sumaria, all of Jerusalem and the Gaza Strip must be part of a secure Israel.

So the task in front of the United States now is a shift in policy direction of the very kind that Secretary Shultz and the President have crafted. Note that in this search for peace, and when you look at the responsibilities and privileges that we all share in the Bay Area, not that of the four men leading this policy, three of them come from the Bay Area—Secretary Shultz, Cap Weinberger, Phil Habib—and the President who comes from Southern California is advised by Ed Meese who once went through the Alameda County District Attorney's Office as some of the people in this room have done. So if there is any community which ought to play a part in the debate, the discussion, the reasonable dialogue, the formation of public opinion, in my judgment it is the San Francisco Bay Area out of which came the potential for a rule of law rather than a rule of combat in the United Nations, and where the atomic bomb which, if we go to war could destroy our civilization, was created.

Shimon Peres, who is the former Defense Minister of Israel said to us that he felt that they had a maximum of 10 years before the Arabs acquire the atomic weapon. If an Israel which is willing to destroy the city of Beirut, a town of 600,000 people, mostly Lebanese, to get at 6,000 PLO soldiers; an Israel which is willing to use cluster bombs in a city of that kind . . . and I found cluster bombs in hospitals and schools in West Beirut . . . if that kind of Israel is to be supported right or wrong, it seems to me clear that an Arab leader with all of the humiliation suffered by the Arabs throughout the last 1,000 years, that if there is not a Palestinian homeland when all of those billions of dollars that go to Saudi Arabia and Kuwait, and by them are funneled to the PLO and other Arab states, that some of those dollars are going to be used to acquire atomic weapons. And if atomic weapons are acquired by Arabs I think unhesitatingly they will be used against Israel, as I am sure that Begin and the Israeli leaders today would use them against Syria and Iraq if they felt that they were in a confrontation that meant their very survival.

So there is a tremendous amount at stake in this part of the world. And as I said the issue will not be decided by President Reagan. It will be decided by whether the people of the United States permit the Members of Congress who represent them to say for the first time we are prepared to cut foreign aid, we are prepared to cut military assistance, we are prepared to treat Israel as a sovereign nation, but no more than that. And if the interests of peace in that part of the world require that we demand of Israel that it ultimately give up the West Bank and Gaza, we should be prepared to do that. If we are not, if we do not have the political will to give our President that freedom to negotiate in foreign policy, I am very much afraid we will see an atomic war in that part of the world within this decade. And if you once have such an exchange of missiles and if the United States and the Soviets go on the kind of hair trigger alert that would then occur, I think we could see the war that would ultimately destroy mankind. And if I am obsessed with trying to prevent that, I plead guilty.

Thank you.●

A CENTENNIAL YEAR TRIBUTE TO FIORELLO LA GUARDIA

HON. BILL GREEN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 13, 1982

● Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, it is fitting that we take the occasion of the San Gennaro Street Festival in New York City to pay tribute to a man of Italian decent who left behind a legacy of dedication and hard work for the people of the city Fiorello H. LaGuardia.

The 56th annual San Gennaro festival has been dedicated to Mr. LaGuardia, in connection with the celebration of his 100th anniversary. The 99th mayor of the city of New York is recognized by historians and New Yorkers as the most effective and innovative chief executive. Known by many as the cosmopolite of this most cosmopolitan city LaGardia chose to work toward his goal of making our world a better place in which to live through politics.

To his enemies, he was egotistical, strutting and power hungry, a demagog and a radical. To his more numerous admirers, he was colorful, dynamic, contagiously self-confident, progressive and the deadliest Tammany killer of his day.

LaGuardia, often called an irregular Republican but a Republican all the same, won 11 out of 14 campaigns in a habitually Democratic city. He rose to national prominence in national politics before entering city hall and in 1916, became the first Republican since the Civil War to be elected to Congress from the Lower East Side—the area which I represent now in Congress.

He entered city hall as mayor of New York in 1934 and quickly earned the title of "Maverick." For the next 12 years, over the city's radio stations, before the legislature at Albany, at the board of estimate, and elsewhere, he identified good government in New York City with his name.

He believed in government with a heart and dedicated himself to projects that would benefit the needy. He brought the New York City Housing Authority into being and through this established 13 public housing units by 1942.

Some of us may remember hearing his tenor-alto voice over the radio as he read the Sunday comics or may recall stories of him racing his own firemen to a fire. LaGuardia's notoriously demanding work habits were contagious among his staff of first rate administrators. Rarely concerned with following the partisan path, he liked to say: "There isn't a Democratic or Republican way of collecting garbage."

In addition to his mayoral and congressional service, LaGuardia was the Director General of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration, a World War I aviator in Italy and, as a young man, a member of the U.S. Foreign Service. He left city hall in 1945.

During his last public appearnace, a commencement address to a boys school in 1947, he said: "My generation has failed miserably * * * It now requires more courage to keep the peace than to go to war." Characteristically, LaGuardia remained hopeful throughout his career that, somehow, a rising generation would learn how to make things in this world better and could pick up where he would eventually have to leave off.

I would like to join Governor Carey in proclaiming 1982 as the LaGuardia centennial year and urge all citizens to take up Fiorello LaGuardia's goal of peace and world improvement at every level.●

MOSCOW HELSINKI GROUP FORCED TO DISBAND

HON. SIDNEY R. YATES

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 13, 1982

● Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, as a Commissioner of the U.S. Commission on Security and Cooperation in Europe, the Government body charged with monitoring compliance with the Helsinki Accords of 1975, I was especially dismayed to learn that the Moscow Helsinki Monitoring Group has been forced by KGB pressure to announce the cessation of its activities.

The Moscow Helsinki Monitoring Group was founded in May 1976 by Dr. Yuri Orlov to monitor compliance by the Soviet Government with the human rights provisions of the Helsinki accords. From its inception, the group was subjected to KGB harassment and reprisals. Of the original 17 members of the Moscow Helsinki Group, 10 people were sent to prison or exile; 4 others were forced to emigrate from their homeland; and only 3 were still at liberty.

One of these last three in Sofya Kalistratova, 75-year-old attorney widely respected in Soviet human rights circles for her valiant defense of Soviet dissidents. Since December 1981, Mrs. Kalistratova has been threatened with arrest and trial. It is unlikely that Mrs. Kalistratova, who suffers from a heart ailment, could survive any prison sentence or exile. In her statement on the dissolution of the Moscow Helsinki Group, Elena Bonner, wife of Academician Andrei Sakharov, said that threats against Mrs. Kalistratova were the last straw.

At this point, I would also like to mention the fate of another Moscow Helsinki Monitor, 33-year-old Anatoly Shcharansky, a mathematician and computer scientist. He graduated from the Moscow Institute of Applied Physics in 1972. A year later, in April 1973, he was refused permission to emigrate, ostensibly on the grounds that he had access to state secrets. On July 4, 1974, just 1 day after marrying him, his wife Avital, left the U.S.S.R. for Israel without her husband, expecting him to follow in the near future. Instead, Shcharansky was barred from leaving.

He became a founding member of the Moscow Helsinki Group and soon emerged as one of the leaders and spokesmen for the Jewish emigration movement.

Shcharansky was arrested on March 15, 1977, and eventually charged with "anti-Soviet agitation and propaganda" (Article 70 of the RSFSR Criminal Code) and treason (Article 64-a). At his trial over a year later, Shcharansky was accused of working with the CIA, a charge President Carter specifically denied. After a trial that coincided with the trials of Ginzburg in Tarusa and Petkus in Lithuania, Shcharansky was sentenced on July 14, 1978 to 3 years in prison and 10 years in strict regimen camp. Even by Soviet standards, Shcharansky's treatment in prison has been abysmal, and he is now incarcerated in the notorious Chistopol Prison where he is scheduled to remain until December 1984.

Mr. Speaker, the announcement that the Moscow Helsinki Monitoring Group has been forced to cease its activities is only the latest in a series of negative developments in the Soviet Union. I note that the fledgling independent peace movement in Moscow has been suppressed by the KGB, and in the past month the Kremlin has severely curtailed telephone communications between the Soviet Union and the Free World. It is against this backdrop that the next session of the CSCE Review Conference is slated to begin in Madrid in November of this year. At this moment, I see little in Soviet behavior to suggest that they are seriously interested in finding a genuine solution to the questions of security and cooperation in Europe.●

ON BEHALF OF SOVIET REFUSENIKS

HON. ALBERT LEE SMITH, JR.

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 13, 1982

● Mr. SMITH of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank all my colleagues who recently signed my letter to the Honorable Andrei Gromyko and His Excellency Anatoly Dobrynin on behalf of the Ghinis family who are refuseniks for whose emigration I have worked for the past 2 years. Most particularly, I am grateful for the support of the distinguished chairman of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, Mr. ZABLOCKI, whose signature added much weight to this effort.

The current decline in emigration from the Soviet Union is tragic. But Soviet repression of individual freedom certainly is not new. For example, take the case of the Kazanevich family which is of great concern to me and my constituents. Mr. Kazanevich is a longtime refusenik. He and his family have been denied exit visas for 10 years on the excuse of "state secrets." During that time, the family has been constantly harassed by the KGB including threats, interrogations and smashing at the doors of his home at 5 a.m. Still, Mr. Kazanevich courageously continues his struggle to obtain an exit visa for himself and his family, and helps others as well.

This family's situation, and that of the Ghinises, is just one more reminder of what we can expect from the Soviet Union in terms of respect for the treaties which it agrees to. I urge you to keep these violations firmly in mind as you consider your support for any new agreements with the Soviet Union.●

BRIAN A. BELL: "OUTSTANDING AIRMAN OF THE YEAR"

HON. BARBARA B. KENNELLY

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 13, 1982

● Mrs. KENNELLY. Mr. Speaker, there are many truly outstanding volunteers in our military forces today, yet too often the accomplishments of these young men and women enlistees go unnoticed and unrecognized. Consequently, I am especially proud to bring to your attention today the record of one such individual, Air Force S. Sgt. Brian A. Bell, a 22-year-old native of Hartford, Conn.

Staff Sergeant Bell's record of achievement and excellence, compiled during 4 years of Air Force service, recently earned him recognition as an "Outstanding Airman of the Year." For the record, I would like to highlight these achievements.

Staff Sergeant Bell enlisted in the Air Force in 1978 after graduating from Hartford's South Catholic High School. He completed basic training at Lackland Air Force Base, Tex.

After basic training, Staff Sergeant Bell was assigned to Sheppard Air Force Base, Tex., for technical training as a telecommunications operations specialist. He graduated in the top 5 percent of his class.

Staff Sergeant Bell then joined the 2163d Communications Squadron at Peterson Air Force Base, Colo., where he began upgrade training. In March 1979, he completed that training to the five skill level and scored an impressive 96 percent on his end-of-course exam.

For more than 2 years, Staff Sergeant Bell was assigned to the communications security accounting section of the 2163d Communications Squadron. He was responsible for managing thousands of classified documents and codes and, again, he earned an outstanding rating for his performance.

Staff Sergeant Bell's decorations include the Air Force Good Conduct Medal, the Outstanding Airman of the Year Ribbon with star and one oak leaf cluster, and the Air Force Longevity Service Award Ribbon. He was recognized as Air Force Communications Command Airman of the Year and Colorado Springs Chamber of Commerce Outstanding Enlisted Military Representative.

While compiling a record of excellence as an Air Force enlistee, Brian Bell also found time to be active in fundraising for the Muscular Dystrophy Association and served as a volunteer at a muscular dystrophy camp in Colorado.

This outstanding individual presently serves as a Reserve liaison noncommissioned officer with the 1816th Reserve Advisory Squadron at Westchester County Municipal Airport in New York.

Mr. Speaker, Brian A. Bell is 1 of 12 outstanding airmen of 1982 who will be honored tonight at an Air Force Association banquet. It is with pleasure that I bring his achievements to the attention of this body and commend him for his excellent record of service to our country.●

COMMODORE JOHN BARRY

HON. EDWARD P. BOLAND

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 13, 1982

● Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, today marks the 237th anniversary of the birth of Commodore John Barry.

As my colleagues know, Commodore Barry is considered to be the Father of the U.S. Navy. He held the first commission in our Navy, commanded the first ship purchased and equipped to fight in the American Revolution, and captured the first enemy ship actually taken in battle.

Although his exploits at sea are best known, he also served with distinction as Washington's aide at Valley Forge and in combat at the battles of Trenton and Princeton. After American independence had been secured, John Barry fought to preserve it in actions against the French, and as commander of the first ships authorized under our Constitution.

Mr. Speaker, John Barry is an authentic American hero, but he holds a special place in the hearts of Irish Americans. Born in County Wexford, Barry came to America as a merchant seaman and, like so many of his countrymen who would follow, enriched his new home with the special qualities of courage, loyalty, and pride that characterize the Irish people. His life is an example of the things that can be achieved by those who believe in their cause and in themselves. It is fitting that we pause today to honor the memory of a man who contributed so much to the country we love.●

POSTAL REVENUE FOREGONE SUBSIDY

HON. WILLIAM (BILL) CLAY

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 13, 1982

● Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, last month the Subcommittee on Treasury—Postal Service—General Government of the Committee on Appropriations wisely recommended an appropriation of $708 million for the postal revenue foregone subsidy during fiscal year 1983. Thus, members of the Committee on Appropriations as well as the full House will soon have an opportunity to stand up and be counted in support of our Nation's sick, aged, disadvantaged, and minorities when the subcommittee's recommendation is considered later this month.

On August 15, 1982, the Los Angeles Times published an informative article which dramatized the impact of reductions in the postal revenue foregone subsidy upon those voluntary charitable organizations which would meet the safety net necessitated by withdrawal of public support of social programs. The article merits the attention of each Member of Congress and is printed below.

HIGHER POSTAGE PUTS SQUEEZE ON CHARITIES: FUND-RAISERS REACH FEWER DONORS AND SUFFER THE CONSEQUENCES

WASHINGTON.—Even as federal officials look to private charities to take up more of the nation's social burden, fund-raising by those groups has suffered a sharp blow because of higher postage costs.

Budget cuts have reduced government payments to the postal service, and that resulted Jan. 10 in rate hikes that affected subsidized second-, third- and fourth-class mail.

"It's killing us," said Joan Holmes, executive director of the San Francisco-based Hunger Project.

The higher rates have killed Sign magazine, a Roman Catholic monthly that folded after 61 years of publication.

And officials of the American Kidney Fund say the higher rates may have been associated with the death of a Virginia woman because every dollar paid in additional nonprofit postage is taken from those waiting for financial help to obtain treatment.

ABRUPT AND STAGGERING

"The relationship between nonprofit postal rates and deaths from kidney disease is direct and real. In January, after the abrupt and staggering increase in postal rates, a woman on our waiting list died," Ellen Kay Hatch, executive director of the fund told a House subcommittee.

Although she did not name the patient involved, Hatch said her organization raises 99% of its funds via mail, and the rate increase meant that in January it had $16,000 less to spend assisting individuals.

The woman, she said, had died that month while awaiting assistance from the foundation. It was the first fatality on the group's waiting list, which grew to about 500 people last fall, Hatch said.

Subsidies holding down the rates for certain classes of mail had been scheduled to be phased out gradually by 1987, but the Reagan Administration convinced Congress to end the subsidized rate early.

Known as "revenue foregone," the subsidy for 1983 was proposed at $500 million by the Administration. However, the House postal operations subcommittee has recommended a subsidy of $913.2 million, which would roll back the rates to the original schedule. The question is now before the House Budget Committee.

27 CENTS A POUND

Under the Administration cuts, nonprofit organizations soliciting money now have to pay 27 cents a pound for bulk mail, up from 15.8 cents. And those using second-class mail to distribute publications that contain little advertising saw the per-item charge jump from 0.9 cents to 4.5 cents.

The rates for first-class mail and most profit-making magazines and newspapers were not affected, having gone up last November. The January hike did involve an increase for some newspapers, those circulated within one county. That rate went from 3.4 cents to 3.9 cents per pound, or 1.3 cents to 1.9 cents per item.

"People are going to have to cut back on the amount of mail they send out. That's going to affect their returns," said Clyde Shorey of the March of Dimes.

A 2.1-cent increase means an extra cost of $2.5 million in mailing 120 million solicitations, he said.

Charles E. Taylor, president of Wilberforce University in Dayton, Ohio, said the rate hikes will mean less income for the United Negro College Fund, and, thus, less money for assisting students at his and other schools.

"Without any doubt, fewer young American will be able to break the cycle of poverty as a direct result of the sudden and steep increase in nonprofit third-class postal rates," he said.

Jane Biral of United Nergo College Fund told a congressional subcommittee that the January rate hike forced her organization to cut back mailing by 60%, resulting in a decline in income of $500,000.

That, said Taylor, results in an average of $12,000 less for each member college, and "assuming institutional aid of $500 per student, it would mean that Wilberforce's freshman class next year would be at least 5% smaller than the freshman class on our campus today."

Carolyn A. Emigh of the Nonprofit Mailers Federation said the subsidy cuts come at the same time the government wants private groups or charities to take over more of the nation's social service needs.

Her concern was echoed by the Rev. Gerald Orlando of the Passionist Fathers, publishers of Sign.

"We're asked as a religious group to pick up the slack because of the social programs that are being dropped by the Administration and we say 'OK, we'll do the best we can,'" Orlando said. "But then we're clobbered on the other side by higher postal rates. It just doesn't make any sense to us."

The family-oriented magazine, founded in 1921, was closed down with its May issue, despite a circulation of about 100,000.

"I think the postal rates were sort of the death blow of the magazine," Orlando said, "you could probably come up with less expensive paper in the magazine, less expensive color and things, but you can't do anything about the postal rates."●

THE PRESIDENT'S MIDDLE EAST PEACE INITIATIVE

HON. MATTHEW F. McHUGH

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 13, 1982

● Mr. McHUGH. Mr. Speaker, I would like to briefly comment on the Middle East peace initiative recently put forward by President Reagan. In my judgment, the President's statement was significant and timely. The parties in the Middle East have a golden opportunity to use this moment to broaden the peace process, and the President is right to press them to do so.

As the President said, the two key unresolved issues are the permanent recognition and security of Israel, and the legitimate concerns of the Palestinians to have some control over their own affairs. Unless these two issues are resolved, there is no chance for a permanent peace in the Middle East. Yet, if they are to be resolved, there must be broader participation in the peace negotiations, particularly by Jordan and the moderate Palestinians themselves. It is now time for them to join the Camp David process.

The President made these points forcefully and well. However, there is one key point on which I would disagree with the President. The Camp David agreement contemplated that no outside party would prejudge or impose the terms of a final settlement. Those terms were to be determined by the negotiating parties themselves.

This is a critical point. Thus, the United States should not attempt to dictate what specifically is required to assure Israeli security or Palestinian rights. For the President to suggest that a final settlement should involve Israeli withdrawal in exchange for Palestinian federation with Jordan is to prejudge the final settlement. The Israelis and Arabs themselves must work out their own arrangements. We can be an important catalyst and mediator, but not the final arbiter.

Finally, I would agree with the President that if negotiations are to have a hope of success, it will be important for the Arabs to forsake their demand for a new Palestinian state, a demand which is completely unacceptable to Israel, and, for its part, Israel should refrain from establishing new settlements on the West Bank, a process which is wholly unacceptable to the Palestinians. Unless there is mutual restraint on these two points, the negotiations will not get to first base.●

TRIBUTE TO COMMODORE JOHN BARRY

HON. EDWARD J. MARKEY

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 13, 1982

● Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to one of America's first and finest heroes, Commodore John Barry. Last year, President Reagan proclaimed September 13, 1981, as "Commodore John Barry Day." Today, I rise to honor this Revolutionary War hero, the father of the U.S. Navy, and one of our Nation's most famous Irish-Americans.

As a Revolutionary War hero, Commodore John Barry was commissioned to command the brig Lexington, the first ship bought and equipped for the Revolution. He became a national hero with the first capture of an enemy warship in actual battle. As father of the Navy, he commanded the first ships authorized under the new Constitution. In 1794, George Washington named him Senior Captain of the U.S. Navy. Today, his memory lives on in our Nation's Capital and in his home country. He was honored in 1906, when the Congress erected a statue of him in Lafayette Park in Washington, D.C., and in 1956, when our Government erected a statue at his birthplace, County Wexford, Ireland. Beyond this, the memory of Commodore John Barry serves to inspire many U.S. citizens with Irish-American ancestry, and in particular, the Ancient Order of Hibernians, this Nation's oldest and largest Irish-American organization. Navy personnel, and all who courageously defend our country, revere this man, as do all Americans who recall our proud past and seek to strive for an even greater future.●

LEONARD LURIA: RECIPIENT OF B'NAI B'RITH GOLD MEDALLION AWARD

HON. CLAUDE PEPPER

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 13, 1982

● Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to call to the attention of this House a man who has distinguished himself in business and in civic service to the Miami community. Mr. Leonard Luria has served our city with distinction for many years with the Miami Jewish Federation, the Hillel Foundation at the University of Miami, the Israel Bond Advisory Committee of Greater Miami, and as the president of the American Friends of the Hebrew University for Southeast Florida. Mr. Luria's unequaled dedication is an inspiration to all of us and a remarkable example of self-sacrifice for the well-being of others.

Mr. Luria graduated from the University of Pennsylvania's Wharton School of Business in 1947. Since 1960, he has been the president of L. Luria & Son, Inc., and remains a respected member of the Miami business community.

We recognize Mr. Luria at this time because he has been singled out by the B'nai B'rith Foundation of the United States and on the 23d of October a dinner-ball will be held in his honor at which time he will be presented with B'nai B'rith's Gold Medallion Award for Communal Service. B'nai B'rith is well known throughout our country for its many civic, charitable, and social welfare activities which benefit all of our citizens but most notably those in need. As an outgrowth of this tradition of sharing and service, the Gold Medallion Award carries with it great meaning, and Leonard Luria is a most worthy recipient of this great honor.

Mr. Speaker, as the B'nai B'rith Foundation honors Mr. Luria for his service and commitment, it is indeed appropriate that we also recognize his accomplishments. Our commemoration of his patriotism goes along with our gratitude for his many contributions and our pride in his giving spirit.●

COMMODORE JOHN BARRY DAY

HON. BARBARA B. KENNELLY

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 13, 1982

● Mrs. KENNELLY. Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to join today in commemorating Commodore John Barry, a Revolutionary War hero and an American patriot of Irish descent.

John Barry was born 237 years ago today in County Wexford, Ireland. He is widely recognized as the father of the U.S. Navy and his contribution to the birth of this Nation is not only a source of special pride to those of us of Irish ancestry, but to all Americans, regardless of heritage.

John Barry, historians say, delivered one of the first comprehensive intelligence reports on English intentions as the Continental Congress deliberated in Philadelphia over the merits of independence.

After the Colonies declared themselves free and independent, John Barry was named commander of the Lexington, the first ship bought and equipped by the United States during the Revolution.

Commodore Barry was the first American commander to capture an enemy ship in battle.

And, after the Revolution was over, when the sovereignty of the United States was threatened by pirates, Commodore Barry was placed in charge of the United States, one of the first ships acquired under the new Constitution. At the same time, he was named senior captain in the U.S. Navy.

President George Washington, in granting Commodore Barry his commission as senior captain in 1794, extolled him as a man of "patriotism, valor, fidelity and abilities."

These are qualities we all take pride in as we honor Commodore John Barry and remember his contribution to the American Revolution and the creation of the U.S. Navy.

It is fitting that today, the 237th anniversary of his birth, be designated "Commodore John Barry Day." Commodore John Barry was one of the first and greatest American patriots of Irish descent.●

EDUCATION FOR ALL HANDICAPPED CHILDREN—PUBLIC LAW 94-142

HON. EDWARD J. MARKEY

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 13, 1982

● Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to express my concern and outrage over proposed regulatory changes by the Reagan administration which will cripple the Education for All Handicapped Children Act, Public Law 94-142.

Just when real progress could be discerned in this area, the Department of Education, via the Reagan administration, is turning its back on this important issue. I do not understand this move; what can be more important than our children? How can anyone possibly rationalize an escalating defense budget, which supposedly is meant to protect us, while at the same time ignore the needs of our children, our future.

This law, Public Law 94-142, is working. The goal is simple and forthright: to provide a free and appropriate public education to all handicapped children. Proof of the fact that this goal is being met is the millions of handicapped children across the country who are doing well, and making previously unheard of strides, in our public schools. We must continue to go forward, not retreat, as these regulations would insure.

The importance of Public Law 94-142 cannot be understated or undermined. This act represents the opportunity for all handicapped children to reach their maximum potential. It means a chance for achievement and for acceptance—a chance to make a contribution to society.

The administration has repeatedly tried to destroy Public Law 94-142, first by placing it in a block grant, which Congress rejected; then by attempting to cut its funding; and now by changing its regulations. The Congress must, and will, continue in its efforts to block the administration's attempts at crippling this law which serves to protect and nurture our country's 4 million handicapped children. The regulations, if not withdrawn, must be rejected.●

OUR HEALTHY FLEET

HON. MARIO BIAGGI

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 13, 1982

● Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, during the recent past, there have been several replies by knowledgeable persons in the field of international ocean shipping in response to a Washington Post editorial that claimed that our U.S.-flag maritime fleet is doing fairly well and is in much better shape than we have been led to believe. I would like to reprint these rebuttals for the information and assistance they can provide us. However, before I do so, I would like to make a few observations of my own.

Today, our Nation is the greatest consuming and producing nation in the world, and the importation and exportation of goods has helped our economy and our prosperity grow so as to provide us with the best living standard in the world. However, the present market share of U.S.-flag shipping, which is engaged in the transport of these goods, is hovering around 3.6 percent.

In the past 10 years, this greatest trading Nation in the world has seen 10 U.S.-flag steamship companies go bankrupt—an average of 1 a year. At the present time, there are two more U.S.-flag carriers that are in a poor financial situation. We are increasingly dependent on foreign-flag vessels for the export of our products to the marketplaces of the world and the importation of our consumer goods. A look around the harbors of Baltimore, New York, and any other U.S. port will confirm our dependence on foreign-flag shipping. These are the facts. The reasons for the decay and what can be done to reverse this decline are the difficult questions that we have been trying to resolve.

What I want to see and what the Congress has been trying to do is to provide the incentive and climate so that U.S.-flag vessels will carry a fair share of our trade, in a competitive manner, so as to benefit all of us who depend on international trade. The key element that we must always consider is internationalism. Our fleet must compete with foreign fleets and operate within international regulations, rules, and policies. Ocean shipping is not like domestic trucking where the rules are the same and are enforced in an equal and equitable manner.

Simply stated, the problems of a healthy U.S.-flag merchant marine go far beyond the simple statements in uninformed editorials. The following informed responses to the Washington Post editorial are proof of the complicated nature of the issue of a healthy U.S.-flag merchant fleet.

[From the Washington Post, July 27, 1982]

"The Healthy Fleet" contained serious errors in fact. The exemption from U.S. antitrust laws granted to the international shipping industry is not a new one—it has been in effect for over 65 years. Amended some 33 times and the subject of numerous decisions of the court, the 1916 Shipping Act has become severely distorted over the years. The primary thrust of the legislation currently under consideration by both houses of the Congress is to spare the shipping public from the unnecessary delay and expense of an inappropriate and burdensome regulatory process, one that has evolved from these distortions. Relief from the burden of regulation will allow commercial entities to better respond to an extremely dynamic marketplace, thus further promoting competition in this industry.

Regardless of our quarrels over the health of the U.S.-flag merchant marine and the level and type of government support it requires, the desirability of effecting regulatory reform and retaining the antitrust exemption is not dependent on the conclusions of the GAO report.

ALAN GREEN, Jr.,
Chairman, Federal Maritime Commission.

Unfortunately, the health of our merchant marine is far from sound, as evidenced by shrinking employment, lower profits, and recent bankruptcies.

Under present law, ocean carriers are permitted to act collectively, but sometimes are in danger of having violated the antitrust laws. During the last 15 years, the federal courts have severely eroded the antiturst exemption provided by the 1916 Shipping Act. Because of this uncertainty, and the administrative delay in obtaining exemptions, ocean carriers have been constrained from making otherwise sensible commercial decisions. This has greatly impeded the effectiveness of the conference system in our trades, and outraged our trading partners. Although our foreign trade is also the trade of our partners, we now find ourselves not only out of step with the rest of the world, but also attempting to apply our antitrust laws extraterritorially.

Legislation (S. 1593, the "Gorton Bill" and H.R. 4374, the "Biaggi Bill") before Congress today is designed to eliminate regulatory burdens hampering all operations in U.S. trades. At the same time, it would protect independent carriers and shippers by prohibiting specified anti-competitive practices.

The reforms the administration supports would make it easier for companies and conferences not only to enter into agreements among themselves for more efficient service, but also to bring our unique regulatory policies more in line with the rest of the world.

H. E. SHEAR,
Maritime Administrator,
U.S. Department of Transportation.●

JOHN BARRY

HON. JAMES M. SHANNON

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 13, 1982

● Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, 1 year ago today, September 13, 1981, was proclaimed by our President as "Commodore John Barry Day." It was an appropriate way for our Government to honor an early, great Irish-American. And it is appropriate again this year that we pause to honor the man who has often been described as the "Father of the United States Navy."

John Barry was born on this day in 1745, in County Wexford, Ireland. Like millions of other immigrants since, he crossed an ocean with the desire to make his way in this new land. In fact, John Barry was to become one of those great patriots who fought for the creation of the United States of America. During the Revolutionary War he commanded the brig Lexington, which was the first ship bought and equipped for the War of Independence. He became a national hero when he led the first capture of an enemy warship during battle.

Our first President relied on Barry during those difficult days at Valley Forge. Later, Barry returned to the sea where he continued to serve his country with effectiveness and with honor.

Today, let us honor the memory of the man who represents part of the great tradition of Irish-Americans. Commodore Barry demonstrated that a single individual can make significant contributions to the welfare of his nation. We acknowledge him as a great Irish-American patriot.●

LEGISLATION TO REPEAL MILITARY RETIREMENT COLA OFFSET

HON. NORMAN D. DICKS

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 13, 1982

● Mr. DICKS. Mr. Speaker, today I introduced legislation to repeal the provision of the Omnibus Reconciliation Act which reduces civil service pay for military retirees working for the Federal Government by the amount of the military retirement cost-of-living adjustment they receive.

This action is blatantly unfair to military retirees and will have devastating impact on the civil service, particularly at defense industrial facilities.

We have established a program of veterans' preference for those seeking to work for the Federal Government. The intent of this program is to recognize the sacrifice made by those who have served honorably in the military service and who have often developed important skills applicable to the Federal Government's needs. By this action to offset retirment cost-of-living adjustments the Congress is undermining the very fiber of the veterans' preference concept.

Certainly the offset will significantly lower the incentives for military retirees to join the Federal service. He or she will receive no penalty if they seek employment in the private sector. Let me give you an example of what this will mean. For the last few years at facilities such as Puget Sound Naval Shipyard it has been virtually impossible to recruit quality nuclear engineers out of schools or from the private sector. The reason is that because of repeated pay caps on civil service employment, the Federal sector is now running 18 percent behind comparability with the private sector overall and substantially further behind in high skill professions such as engineering.

We have been able to meet requirements thus far, at least to some degree, by recruiting nuclear trained personnel who are military retirees. Now, that option will be much more difficult, and the critical work on our nucelar warships will be jeopardized.

In addition, the offset will create a second class of civil service worker. Employees working side by side at the same job will be receiving different pay if one is a military retiree and the other is not. This wage differental will be magnified when a person's civil service retirement is calculated and will follow him or her throughout their entire life.

By adopting the bill I introduced we can eliminate this inequity and avoid serious problems in maintaining an effective civil service. This provision was not included in either the House or Senate bill. It was pulled out of the hat as part of an overall deal in conference. In my judgment it was not well thought out and deserves to be reconsidered. If there are those who believe that we are overly generous with military retirement, let them address the issue directly and see if the Congress concurs in their judgment. Do not unfairly punish one group of military retirees through a last minute action.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 301 of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1982 (H.R. 6955, Ninety-seventh Congress) is amended by striking out subsection (d).

SEC. 2. The amendment made by the first section of this Act shall take effect as of the date of the enactment of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1982.●

CONCERN ABOUT H.R. 6046

HON. DON EDWARDS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 13, 1982

● Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise to express my concern about H.R. 6046, the Extradition Act of 1982.

This bill as reported not only fails to correct the current deficiencies in the extradition process but rather dangerously narrows the scope of judicial review. It would create the risk that the foreign dictatorships such as the Philippines, Taiwan, El Salvador, or South Africa could in collaboration with the executive branch, deprive Americans and foreigners alike of rights that the Constitution entitles them to.

This bill is far too important and complex to rush through the House in the next month. I hope that it will not be scheduled for debate. If it is, I intend to insist that it be debated fully and that we give careful consideration to a series of amendments that will cure the deficits in the legislation.

Under the bill as reported, a foreign government with the cooperation of the Justice Department, can have an American or a foreigner held without bail for at least 10 days without even presenting any evidence of a crime.

The definition of a political offense for which extradition would not be permitted would be drastically narrowed and courts would be precluded from inquiring into allegations that a request for extradition was a subterfuge for an effort to punish someone for their political views or that the individual would be denied due process.

Mr. Speaker, the problems with this bill are well laid out in a letter from the ACLU and an op-ed piece by Christopher Pyle. I ask unanimous consent that they be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

[From the New York Times, Aug. 11, 1982]

RUINING EXTRADITION

(By Christopher H. Pyle)

SOUTH HADLEY, MASS.—For more than two centuries, the United States has provided a refuge to which opponents of authoritarian regimes could flee without fear that they would be returned to stand trial for political offenses. That policy may be about to end.

Under either of the extradition bills now cleared for debate in Congress, persons charged with political crimes would be stripped of their legal defense and United States courts would be turned into the long arms of foreign persecution.

The purpose of the bills—to facilitate the return of terrorists—is manifestly worthwhile. However, both bills are so badly written that they would endanger the very persons that American law governing extradition has always shielded: critics of foreign regimes, former freedom fighters against authoritarian rule, former officials of regimes that the United States once supported.

For example, both bills provide for the arrest of an accused person without any proof that he is guilty of a crime. A mere allegation by a foreign dictatorship, coupled with a promise to produce evidence sometime in the future, would be sufficient to cause the United States Government to jail the accused for months. No United States prosecutor has this power of arbitary detention, but under these bills, Albania, Rumania, South Africa, El Salvador and about 90 more countries with which we have extradition agreements would have it, and could use it to bring about the imprisonment of their critics within the United States.

Under current law, no American court will allow a person to be extradicted if it can be shown that he or she is really being sought for "an offense of a political character." Each bill would, in its own way, destroy this defense.

The Senate bill, which the Administration favors, would do so by stripping the courts of jurisdiction over the political crimes defense. Instead, the accused would have to raise his claim with the State Department, which could then decide whether protecting him from persecution is worth the risk of alienating the foreign government involved.

The State Department's motive for supporting this bill is clear. It wants to be able to swap alleged criminals with foreign countries the same way that children trade baseball cards: "We'll give you one terrorist if you give us three embezzlers."

The House bill seems more protective of political refugees than the Senate bill because it would keep in the courts the power to decide the political crimes defense. However, the appearance is deceptive, because the House bill would forbid the courts to regard as political, and hence not extraditable, any offense involving bodily violence or a conspiracy to commit bodily violence. There is a tiny exception for crimes committed under "extraordinary circumstances," but the bill does not say what they might be. All that is clear is the political message: Protecting foreign revolutionaries from return to authoritarian regimes should be a rare, not common occurrence.

As if to emphasize a preference for authoritarian regimes, both bills would forbid the courts to question whether a request for extradition was really a subterfuge for persecution. Nor would the courts be allowed to hear evidence that the charges against the accused resulted from torture or to deny extradition on the ground that the requesting regime is notorious for brutal interrogations, unjust trials or cruel punishment. Judgments of this sort would be left to the State Department, which currently pretends that El Salvador protects human rights.

The Administration claims that the courts should be denied the power to look into foreign injustice in order to assure the neutrality of the United States in foreign political conflicts. However, there can be no doubt where the Justice Department's sympathies would lie; both bills would require its lawyers to represent all foreign governments in their extradition requests. The United States would be neutral—on the side of whoever happens to be in power.

In anticipation of this legislation and a treaty to implement it, the Marcos dictatorship is requesting the extradition of more than a dozen of its opponents now living in the United States. One of those charged with plotting in the United States to support bombings in the Philippines is Benigno Aquino Jr., an associate at Harvard University's School of International Affairs who ran against President Ferdinand E. Marcos in the last free election. The only "evidence" against Mr. Aquino comes from the confession of an alleged coconspirator who later recanted, claiming he had been tortured. However, if either bill now before Congress passes, that evidence will be sufficient to send this democratic politican back into the hands of the dictator he opposed.

AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION,
WASHINGTON OFFICE,
September 8, 1982.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE: I write to express the strong opposition of the American Civil Liberties Union to H.R. 6046, the Extradition Reform Act of 1982, as reported.

The ACLU supports efforts to modernize and reform extradition procedures which would protect civil liberties while facilitating the extradition of those charged with serious crimes. We are, however, adamantly opposed to the current bill because it would prohibit the courts from reviewing extradition demands by foreign governments to insure that no demand is part of a foreign effort to suppress political dissent. The bill would also permit individuals—U.S. citizens and foreigners alike—to be held without bail upon the mere allegation by a foreign government that an extraditable crime has been committed.

For more than two centuries the United States has provided a refuge to which opponents of authoritarian regimes could flee without fear that they would be returned to stand trial for political offenses. Although the stated purpose of the bill is to facilitate the return of terrorists, it is drafted so broadly that it would endanger the very persons that American law governing extradition has always shielded: critics of authoritarian regimes, whether they are U.S. citizens or foreigners.

If H.R. 6046 is brought to the floor of the House, we urge you to support amendments which would alter provisions in the legislation that now:

Require the court to hold an individual for at least 10 days based upon a mere request of a foreign government with no supporting evidence, unless the person can affirmatively demonstrate that he or she should be released;

Define the long-standing political crime exception to extradition so narrowly as to exclude in almost all circumstances crimes which in any way include violent conduct; and

Prohibit a court from inquiring into allegations that a state is seeking extradition of a person for the purpose of prosecuting such person because of his or her political opinions, race, religion, or nationality.

Consider just a few situations in which the courts would have no choice but to act:

A foreign government's mere, unsubstantiated allegation that an American citizen had, on a visit to that country, conspired to commit a violent act, coupled with a promise to produce evidence at a later date, would compel that the person be held without bail for at least 10 and perhaps for more than 60 days.

A leading critic of a foreign dictatorship could be extradited based on allegations that he engaged in violent acts, without having the opportunity to demonstrate that the charges were a mere subterfuge to punish him for his political views or that he would be subjected to arbitrary detention or torture if extradited.

An individual who used violence to escape from a foreign prison where he was being tortured or who used force directed at military units as part of an uprising against a repressive regime would be unable to claim the political exception to extradition which has traditionally been the hallmark of American extradition law.

It is not sufficient that the Executive branch could decline to file a complaint or to extradite in a particular case of manifest injustice. Every administration is under enormous pressure from its allies to extradite political opponents of the regime and to ignore evidence of torture or lack of due process. The recent decision by the Reagan Administration to certify that the government of El Salvador is not violating international human rights standards is but one recent manifestation of this continuing phenomenon.

The concerns that we have about this bill are anything but hypothetical. If it is passed, the government of the Philippines has served notice that it will seek extradition of Benigro Aquiro, Jr., who ran against President Marcos in the last free election and is now an associate at the Harvard University Center for International Affairs. Aquiro is an internationally prominent advocate of peaceful opposition to the Marcos regime who has been charged with planting bombs in the Philippines.

Since the Senate has enacted a similar bill, action in the House is necessary to prevent a serious erosion of civil liberties. When H.R. 6046 comes to the floor, we urge you to support amendments to deal with these problems. If such amendments are not passed, we ask you to vote against passage of the bill.

Yours sincerely,

JOHN SHATTUCK

PRIMARY CAUSE OF FALKLANDS WAR

HON. CHARLES E. BENNETT

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 13, 1982

● Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, I include at this point in the RECORD an article written by Gen. J. D. Hittle, U.S. Marine Corps, retired, recently in the Navy Times. It is a thought-provoking and issue-raising article which all people interested in the defense of our country and of Great Britain should give consideration to. The purpose of General Hittle and others who raise questions like this is not to cast criticism but to point out the things that need to be done in the future if we are to maintain the naval strength in the free world that is so greatly needed.

COST CUTTING AT ROYAL NAVY'S EXPENSE WAS PRIMARY CAUSE OF FALKLANDS WAR

(By J. D. Hittle, Brig. Gen., USMC (Ret.))

The British may be understandably pleased over their victory in the distant misty realm of sheepherding. Nevertheless, they want to know how they got into the Falklands war—so costly in lives, ships and money—in the first place. The result is that Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher has responded to the public and Parliamentary demands by creating a six-man panel to investigate why the Falklands war happened.

There are some intriguing things about this investigation. For one thing, it wasn't necessary. A primary reason there was a crisis that developed into a war was a simple and obvious one: The Thatcher government decided not to provide the Falkland Islands, whose sovereignty was in intense dispute with Argentina, with the naval protection of even a single combat surface ship. There was not even as sea sentry to make a visible show of British resolve to protect and retain the Falklands.

The disinclination or inability to provide even symbolic Royal Navy surface protection for the Falklands was an invitation to the anxious Argentines and, thus, a root reason for their miscalculation that led to seizure and war.

It's pretty well recognized that a key reason the Royal Navy had no surface ships in Falklands waters was that the Royal Navy was in the process of having its surface ships, naval aviation and amphibious capabilities drastically reduced.

This astounding anti-naval policy was the direct result of a plan by Mrs. Thatcher and her defense minister, John Nott, to scuttle a large part of the Royal Navy's conventional warfare strength. The reason, if it can be so termed, was to help get the money to procure four Trident missile submarines. This would put the Thatcher government into the international "nuclear club." That it would reduce the kind of conventional naval forces needed for protection of NATO Atlantic sea lanes—or protection of England's overseas colonies—didn't seem to matter.

It is now a matter of sad record that Mrs. Thatcher and Nott disregarded warnings, among which was the informed protest of the civilian head of the navy, Keith Speed. His reward for trying to prevent the anti-naval policy was to be fired by Mrs. Thatcher. Thus, another paradox of the Falklands tragedy and its causes was that Speed was sacked for being right, and Defense Minister Nott, who pushed the scuttling of so much of the navy, is, as of this writing, still defense minister.

Mrs. Thatcher said that the panel should not restrict itself to the policies of her government, but should also look at policies of previous governments.

Understandably, Mrs. Thatcher didn't want her policies to be the only target of investigation of the origins and handling of the Falklands war. Apparently she believes there is plenty of blame to go around. If Mrs. Thatcher is thinking in terms of overall reduction in defense forces, including the Royal Navy, she is correct. The trend in British naval strength has been generally downward since the Suez debacle in 1956. Soon afterward, the decision was made to withdraw from east of Suez and focus on defense of the home islands and NATO.

Yet it will be difficult for the investigators to avoid putting the finger on the Thatcher-Nott responsibility for an immediate cause of the Falklands crisis.

What they did was a hatchet job on conventional naval power. Naval aviation and amphibious forces were special targets. The Royal Navy task force that sailed for the Falklands was a valiant but handicapped one. It did not have a single large carrier, such as the U.S. Navy has, to project power against land targets and to provide far-out protection of the fleet from enemy air and sub attacks. Both of the Royal Navy carriers were small and specialized for antisub protection of NATO sea lanes.

Of these two carriers, one, the HMS Invincible, had already been sold to Australia! The Royal Marines, the amphibious specialists, were available for the Falklands as the result of some fortunate happenings. British sources say that part of the Thatcher-Nott plan for cutting back conventional naval power called for the disbandment of the Royal Marines. They were spared such a fate because, these sources say, civilian navy boss Keith Speed's protests helped expose the scheme before it became an accomplished fact.

So it is precisely in the targeting of naval aviation and Royal Marines where, if the investigators go back far enough, they will find precedent for the Thatcher-Nott anti-naval plans that helped set the Falklands stage.

Mrs. Thatcher may feel some satisfaction in the recognition that her plan for downgrading naval aviation and amphibious capabilities was not her invention. That satisfaction may be dulled a bit when the precedents for her plan are recognized.

Here's why: The historical origins of the Thatcher-Nott plans for drastic reduction of naval aviation and amphibious power go back to the period soon after World War I.

Two key features of that era of dismal and disjointed British defense policy were the virtual dissolution of naval aviation and the failure to develop an effective amphibious capability. England's navy emerged from World War I with its own Royal Naval Air Service. The echo of the war's final shot had hardly faded before the British government decided the navy didn't need its own air arm. The result was that naval aviation was snatched away from the Royal Navy and merged into the Royal Air Force.

Thus, the development of England's naval aviation was placed under the bomber-minded, single air force advocates. In such a predicament, the art of naval air war intellectually and physically withered. This sorry situation continued for 21 years. It was not until 1939, when the menacing clouds of war swirled low on the horizon, that naval air was reconstituted as an integral part of the Royal Navy. But, as events were to demonstrate, the remedial action was late. As World War II proved, England's dereliction of carrier war development could not be quickly rectified by recognition of the error on the eve of global war.

The late James Forrestal, our first Secretary of Defense, who understood the value of the U.S. concept of balanced naval power, summed up that early British anti-naval air policy: "The consequence of this neglect was that the British went into war with a totally inadequate naval air force."

Just as the Thatcher-Nott cutback in naval aviation contributed to unnecessary losses in the Falklands, the pre-World War II hobbling of naval aviation set the stage for the loss of HMS Prince of Wales and HMS Repulse to Japanese air attacks off Malaya and the sinking of HMS Glorious off Norway—all largely due to the lack of adequate naval aviation.

Similarly, in the period between World War I and World War II, British defense policy had as little regard for amphibious warfare as it did for naval aviation. Yet, while British defense officials let amphibious matters languish in neglect, the U.S. Navy and Marine Corps proceeded to develop the amphibious doctrine equipment and specialized forces that became a key to victory in that global war.

The perceptive James Forrestal also saw the British dereliction of amphibious matters and understood its cost. Commenting on the British defeat in Norway, our first Secretary of Defense said: "That disaster, which profoundly affected the course of the entire war, was more than a failure of 16,000 men, it was a failure in the exercise of seapower on the part of the then largest navy in the world, and it was due entirely to the lack of a small, specially trained amphibious force such as we have in the form of the U.S. Marines, to supplement ashore the action of the fleet at sea."

It is worth noting that British naval aviation, after release from captivity in the Royal Air Force and largely due to policies of enlightened defense thinkers such as Winston Churchill and Mountbatten, eventually forged an effective carrier warfare capability. So also, the Royal Marines, under favorable defense policies and by close liaison with U.S. Marines, achieved a highly professional amphibious effectiveness. Strangely, it was these laboriously attained naval air and amphibious capabilities that were selected as targets of the Thatcher-Nott anti-naval plan.

As the historical record so clearly shows, such governmental attitude didn't begin with Prime Minister Thatcher's tenure in office. It had precedent and a long period of acceptance during the period between World War I and World War II.

The irony is that it was the era dominated by the drastic defense cutbacks of Labor Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald, the strategic timidity of the Baldwin government, and the disastrous bumbling of the archappeaser Neville Chamberlain.

It will be interesting to see if the investigating panel looks far enough back to find these naval air and amphibious policy blunders that are precedents for the same kind of mistakes that contributed so heavily to the Falklands war and the cost of winning it.

It would be even more interesting to see how the present conservative Tory government explains why it backtracked to the weak-kneed era of isolationism and appeasement and embraced two of that period's most disastrous defense mistakes.●

ANNUAL LEGISLATIVE POLL RESULTS

HON. GUS YATRON

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 13, 1982

● Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to provide my colleagues with the findings of my annual legislative questionnaire. The response to my poll was tremendous and I am deeply gratified by this demonstration of interest in current issues.

Since I was first elected to Congress, I have been conducting an annual survey because I believe that a democracy functions best when there is an open line of communication between the people and their elected representatives. The questionnaire provides a unique opportunity for me to better understand the thoughts and concerns of the people of the Sixth Congressional District. It also enables constituents to play an active role in the legislative process by making their views known.

Mr. Speaker, I believe my colleagues will find the results of my poll interesting and useful, which is why I am making it available to them through the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

THE ECONOMY

1. Do you feel the Administration is moving in the proper direction with its economic policies? Yes, 43%; no, 46%; undecided, 11%.

2. Congress is debating a number of methods to reduce unnecessary and costly government regulations. Do you favor legislation requiring federal agencies to perform cost-benefit analyses before issuing major rules and regulations? Yes, 79%; no, 11%; undecided, 10%.

3. Do you support legislation to amend the United States Constitution to require a balanced federal budget except in times of national emergency? Yes, 69%; no, 20%; undecided, 11%.

4. Do you support the Administration's "New Federalism" proposal to transfer many existing federal functions to the states and local governments? Yes, 44%; no, 48%; undecided, 8%.

5. Many economists feel high interest rates will retard economic recovery. The Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, Paul Volcker, believes that a tight monetary policy is necessary to keep inflation down. Do you feel the Federal Reserve Board should relax its present monetary policy? Yes, 46%; no, 38%; undecided, 16%.

6. The U.S. trade deficit is approximately $40 billion, and the high level of imports is aggravating our economic problems. What do you think our policy should be with respect to trade and imports?

a. We should adhere to the principles of free trade and take no action to curb imports: 9.8%.

b. We should take action only against those countries which erect barriers against our goods, or subsidize goods sold in the U.S.: 30.1%.

c. We should impose import quotas on certain products to assist depressed industries: 20.9%.

7. What actions do you favor to create more jobs?

a. Lower interest rates: 26.9%.

b. Restrictions on imports: 15.1%.

c. Public work programs: 16%.

d. Tax and regulatory incentives to business: 16%.

e. None of the above: 1.3%.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

8. Do you agree with the Administration's position in support of Great Britain in the Falkland crisis? Yes, 66%; no, 22.3%; undecided, 12.1%.

9. In light of the Falkland crisis, what do you think United States policy should be regarding Argentina?

a. Restore a close working relationship with Argentina, involving economic and military aid: 24.2%.

b. Make improved relations with Argentina dependent upon the development of democratic institutions in that country: 52.3%.

c. Keep relationships with Argentina at a bare minimum for some time to come: 23.2%.

10. Do you think the United States should continue to extend military assistance to El Salvador? Yes, 29.9%; no, 53.6%; undecided, 16.5%.

11. The Polish government continues to suppress its people under a strict martial law policy. How do you feel the United States should respond to this situation?

a. Continue economic sanctions on the Polish government until it lifts martial law: 26.6%.

b. Ease sanctions to induce the Polish government to allow more freedom: 11.3%.

c. Pursue a harsher policy toward the Polish government: 7.9%.

d. Focus our policy on the Soviet Union, increasing pressure on that country to improve conditions in Poland: 29.4%.

e. Maintain a "Hands-off" policy: 20.7%

EDUCATION

12. The Congress is considering whether or not to give tax credits as one form of relief to families who are paying tuition for children enrolled in private educational institutions. Do you think Congress should allow tuition tax credits for:

a. Private elementary and secondary schools: Yes, 42.6%; no, 42.5%; undecided, 14.9%.

b. Colleges and universities: Yes, 49.2%, no, 39.5%; undecided, 11.3%.

THE ENVIRONMENT

13. This year the Congress will reauthorize the Clean Air Act. Some feel the act should be relaxed to stimulate our economy. Others believe that maintaining strong clean air standards is essential to prevent catastrophic deterioration of our environment. What do you think the Congress should do with respect to the Clean Air Act?

a. Make it stricter: 35%.

b. Keep it about the same: 35%.

c. Relax some of the standards: 24.2%

d. Undecided: 5.8%.

DEFENSE

14. There are currently several proposals in the Congress calling on the United States and the Soviet Union to immediately freeze their nuclear arsenals because both sides have more than enough weapons to defend themselves. Opponents of this strategy argue that a freeze is inflexible and reduces the incentive for the Soviets to negotiate substantial reductions in their nuclear arsenal. Do you support legislation calling on the U.S. to immediately freeze the development of nuclear weapons? Yes, 32.1%; no, 54.5%; undecided, 13.4%.

15. The Congress is debating the level of funding for the Defense Department. In general, do you feel that defense spending should be:

a. Somewhat increased: 29.8%.

b. Kept at current levels: 36.2%

c. Somewhat reduced: 34%.

ENERGY

16. Despite the unresolved risk inherent in the potential of nuclear power, do you feel we should continue our research in developing this energy source? Yes, 68.1%; no, 23.8%; undecided, 9.6%.●

COMMODORE JOHN BARRY DAY

HON. CHARLES F. DOUGHERTY

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 13, 1982

● Mr. DOUGHERTY. Mr. Speaker, September 13 marks the commemoration of Commodore John Barry Day, for it was 237 years ago today that John Barry, known as "the Father of the American Navy," was born in County Wexford, Ireland. Commodore Barry became a hero of the American Revolution when the ship he commanded captured an enemy ship in battle. After the Revolution, he bravely defended our new Nation against the pirates who attacked American ships on the high seas.

I am particularly proud of Commodore Barry's accomplishments for two reasons. First, as a member of the congressional Friends or Ireland, and a grandson of Irish immigrants, I can certainly appreciate the efforts John Barry took in coming from that grand country across the ocean to live in America. Second, as a member of the Seapower Subcommittee on the House Armed Services Committee, I respect the commodore for his leadership role in developing our country's Navy, which has proven so vital for a nation surrounded by water.

For these reasons, I join my colleagues today in saluting Commodore John Barry, the "Father of the United States Navy."●

ITALIAN TERRORISM MUST BE WIPED OUT

HON. MARIO BIAGGI

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 13, 1982

● Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, the shocking September 3 murder of Gen. Carlo Alberto Dalla Chiesa has once again focused world attention on Italy and her vulnerability to terrorism.

Gen. Dalla Chiesa was one of Italy's most outspoken, respected, and effective figures in law enforcement. On September 3 the general and his wife were in their car riding down a street in Palermo, Sicily when they were ambushed and murdered by a group of terrorist gunmen.

The general had been assigned by the Italian Government to Palermo in May to investigate still another terrorism murder, that of Mr. Pio La Torre, a regional Communist Party leader and another outspoken critic of organized crime in Italy.

Gen. Dalla Chiesa's murder evoked a strong and emotional reaction throughout Italy and Sicily. His death marked the end of a career which spanned more than 30 years in the fight against crime. The general fought against banditry after World War II and in the years up until his death, concentrated his energies on Italy's two main criminal elements—organized crime and political terrorists.

Gen. Dalla Chiesa was a fearless man—always willing and able to rise to the occasion in the fight against crime. In the eyes of many Italians

Gen. Dalla Chiesa died as the hero which millions considered him to be.

The anger and frustration of the Italian people about the murder of the general was evident at his funeral service. In his eulogy, the Archbishop of Palermo—Salvadore Cardinal Pappalordo attacked the perpetrators of the crime and was also critical of the reaction of those in government. He said:

> The slower and more uncertain are the actions of the state, the more opportune, decisive and violent are the actions of those who have the mind, the will and the might to strike.

I find tremendous significance in his words. It is absolutely essential that government and law enforcement agencies fight the scourge of terrorism as they would any enemy which poses such a threat to the internal security of her people. Not since the 1978 kidnap and murder of former Prime Minister Aldo Moro have the people of Italy reacted in such a united fashion against the terrorist elements in their nation. It is now time and it would be the most appropriate and meaningful tribute to the memory of General Dalla Chiesa for the Government of Italy to declare war against crime and terrorism. The fact that the government clearly has the people behind them should aid them immeasurably in this campaign.

A nation of laws must never yield to the forces of lawlessness. Italy must work to rid itself of terrorism and the United States should lend all necessary support to this important endeavor.●

SENATE COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Title IV of Senate Resolution 4, agreed to by the Senate on February 4, 1977, calls for establishment of a system for a computerized schedule of all meetings and hearings of Senate committees, subcommittees, joint committees, and committees of conference. This title requires all such committees to notify the Office of the Senate Daily Digest—designated by the Rules Committee—of the time, place, and purpose of the meetings, when scheduled, and any cancellations or changes in the meetings as they occur.

As an additional procedure along with the computerization of this information, the Office of the Senate Daily Digest will prepare this information for printing in the Extensions of Remarks section of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on Monday and Wednesday of each week.

Any changes in committee scheduling will be indicated by placement of an asterisk to the left of the name of the unit conducting such meetings.

Meetings scheduled for Tuesday, September 14, 1982, may be found in the Daily Digest of today's RECORD.

SENATE—Tuesday, September 14, 1982

(Legislative day of Wednesday, September 8, 1982)

The Senate met at 10:30 a.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the President pro tempore (Mr. THURMOND).

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Father in Heaven, this morning we pray for all the men and women whose tireless, dedicated labors support the Senate in its leadership. We thank Thee for those who serve faithfully at routine tasks without glamour or recognition. Help us never to presume upon their quiet, hidden ministeries. Help us to show love and appreciation at every opportunity.

We commend to Thy gracious care and blessing those who maintain buildings and grounds, who repair and clean, who prepare, serve and manage food services. We are grateful for the police on the grounds and in the buildings, for those who provide security at the doors and on the floor. In gratitude we recognize those who work in the document room and library; for the efficient, dependable staffs in Senators' and committee offices. We thank Thee for those in the offices of the Sergeant at Arms, the Secretary of the Senate, those so busily occupied in the cloakrooms, for the Official Reporters of Debates, and those in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD office who process so accurately the thousands of words of Senate business daily, and we thank Thee for the members of the Senate Press Corps.

Grant to us all a sense of the importance of each and our need for each other as part of this huge Senate family. In appreciation for each member of the team, may we respect, serve and love each other. In the name of the Servant of servants. Amen.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The majority leader is recognized.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I thank the Chair.

THE CHAPLAIN'S PRAYER

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I commend the Chaplain on his inclusive prayer today. I do not believe he left out anybody. Of course, all of us wish the Lord's blessings on every employee. But I must confess, as I listened to the prayer, I must acknowledge that I thank the Deity for the presence of the press most days, but not every day.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. May I say to the distinguished majority leader that our good friend the Chaplain included everybody but himself. We thank the Deity for him.

Mr. BAKER. As the saying goes in the Senate, I associate myself with the remarks of the minority leader.

(Mr. HUMPHREY assumed the chair.)

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 110

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I have a change in the schedule. As I indicated on yesterday, sometime during the day today, presumably early today, I would ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 110, the Hatch constitutional amendment dealing with abortion. Last evening I received a telephone call at my home from Senator HATCH indicating that he had been called away on urgent business, specifically—and I believe I am correct in saying this—that the State convention assembles today in Utah, and he found that it was absolutely essential that he be there.

In view of the fact that Senator HATCH is the principal sponsor and has long been the staunchest advocate of a constitutional amendment on the subject, I feel it would be unfair to him and to the Senate to try to motion up that measure in his absence. Therefore, I will not make the motion to proceed to Senate Joint Resolution 110 today. I do intend to ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of that resolution, however, before we complete this debate.

In view of that circumstance, Mr. President, the Baucus amendment No. 2040 to the Weicker amendment No. 2039 to Senate Joint Resolution 520, the temporary increase in the public debt limit, is the unfinished business and will have the attention of the Senate today.

CLOTURE VOTE AT 5 P.M. WEDNESDAY

Mr. President, a cloture motion has been filed. By unanimous consent, a vote has been set for 5 p.m. on Wednesday. There will be no quorum call prior to that vote. The vote will occur promptly at 5 p.m.

Mr. President, if cloture is invoked, then, of course, under the provisions of the rule, the Senate will proceed with the debate on that measure until it is completed. If cloture is not invoked, it is possible that the Senate will be asked to vote on cloture again on Thursday. But that is a matter I will discuss with the minority leader and principles on both sides.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 520

I would remind Senators again that we are dealing with the debt limit. We have been on it now about 3 weeks, almost 3 weeks. At some point, we have to pass the bill itself.

Members should know that by the end of this week it is my intention to try to deal with the underlying bill, the debt limit bill. It may not be possible to do that, but that is my wish.

Mr. President, I encourage Members to come to the floor and debate the abortion issue, debate the prayer in school issue, debate other issues which may be offered to the debt limit bill, with the knowledge that the leadership on this side wishes to finish this measure by the end of this week. The Senate will be in session on Friday and, if necessary to do so, we will be on the debt limit. If we finish the debt limit by Friday, it would be my intention to ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of S. 995, the contribution antitrust bill.

Mr. President, there are a number of routine matters that can be dealt with. Is the minority leader prepared to do those now or would he prefer to do them during the time for the transaction of routine morning business?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I would be happy to proceed as the majority leader wishes, but before we do so I wish to make an inquiry.

SENATE SCHEDULE

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I should like to ask the majority leader the schedule, as he sees it, for the next week and the week ending October 2. Early on, it was announced by both leaders that the Senate would probably try to adjourn by October 2.

Mr. BAKER. Yes, Mr. President. I say to my friend, the minority leader, that it is still my intention to ask the Senate to go out on October 2. I must say, however, that I have read in the newspapers that the Speaker of the House of Representatives indicated October 8 as the probable adjournment time for the House of Representatives.

After I read that in the newspapers, I called the Speaker, and we are supposed to get together on Wednesday to discuss the calendar. I believe today is the only day of the primary election in Massachusetts and it was not possible to have that meeting in advance of the two caucuses today.

As soon as I meet with the Speaker and find out what he has in mind, I will have an announcement. I still plan on October 2, but I want to hear what the Speaker has in mind.

The reason for this, other than simple comity and courtesy, is the principal business yet to be disposed of, mainly the entire body of the appropriations process of which it is highly doubtful and undesirable for the Senate to originate such legislation.

If we are to finish the appropriations bills, we must receive them from the House. If we must deal with a continuing resolution or continuing resolutions, I suppose they have to come from the House as well. Our ability to deal with the appropriations process after the House has acted is the final and ultimate determiner of whether we can get out on the 2d of October or even the 8th.

Mr. President, I still believe we can do all of this by the 2d of October, and I intend to urge that we arrange our affairs and schedules in both Houses so that we can accomplish it.

Members should be on notice that there is a possibility, at least, that it will be extended a little past the 2d. If that is so, it will be against my better judgment and against my personal wishes.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, will the distinguished majority leader yield further?

Mr. BAKER. Yes.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. The House will return after the election, as they have been doing in recent years, for organizational purposes. I hope that the Senate will go out on the 2d of October and, inasmuch as the House is going to come back in any event, I would also expect to talk with the Speaker and the majority leader of the House and at least those over there to try to pursue adjournment on the 2d. If the House is coming back after the election in any event, I do not see why the House should proceed until October 8 and hold us here until October 8—if they are coming back, anyhow. Perhaps we should come back for organizational purposes and if there is any cleanup work to be done, do it at that time. I would not suggest that we ought to attempt to do a lot of work following the election, but I would want to underscore the hope that has been expressed by the majority leader and the intention that has been expressed by him to try to complete the work here by October 2.

I agree with him that we are, to a considerable degree, dependent upon the House acting first on appropriations matters and the continuing resolutions, but I join with him in urging the House leadership to try to complete action by October 2. I have a number of Senators on this side of the aisle who have scheduled engagements back in their respective States beginning October 2, as a matter of fact. If there is going to be any change from October 2, I would personally hope that it would be possible for us to go out on October 2 and come back after the election and do whatever cleanup work has to be done.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I agree with that. The minority leader and I have discussed this at length on a number of occasions, as Members must surmise. I have told my own caucus that it is my firm intention to go out on the 2d, even if we have to come back after the elections. That, of course, depends on whether we can complete the appropriations process or make provisions for operation of Government past October 2, which is also the beginning of our fiscal year.

I shall discuss these matters with the Speaker, and I am sure the minority leader will discuss them with the Speaker, and perhaps he and I can sit down, as we so often do, to compare notes.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I thank the majority leader.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I thank the minority leader.

BOWIE K. KUHN, COMMISSIONER OF BASEBALL

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, like millions of Americans I enjoy our "national pastime," the sport of baseball. It is a sport native to the United States, and has over decades secured a unique place in our heritage.

Unlike most Americans, Mr. President, I have had the special privilege of coming to know, to respect, and to admire the current commissioner of baseball, Bowie K. Kuhn. As the chief ambassador of baseball, Mr. Kuhn is a welcome visitor to the Capitol corridors. As the primary defender of the game, he is an able advocate in advancing the interests of baseball in Washington.

For these reasons I was interested in a column about Commissioner Kuhn that appeared in the Washington Post last month, and because the article should also be of interest to other baseball fans—of which there are many in the Congress—I ask unanimous consent to include that article in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post, Aug. 17, 1982]

WITH KUHN'S ENEMIES, WHO NEEDS FRIENDS?

By Thomas Boswell

SAN DIEGO, August 16.—One of the ways to judge a man is by his enemies.

By that standard alone, Bowie Kuhn ought to be reelected here on Wednesday as commissioner of baseball. The small group of foes now lined up against Kuhn is tantamount to a testimonial for the commissioner.

If Kuhn had picked the least credible possible group of palace plotters, he'd probably have come up with the same coalition of National League owners who will arrive here Tuesday to politic for his firing.

And if Kuhn had tried to align the best minds and the most respected organizations in baseball to back him—or at least agree to tolerate his continuance in office—he'd have come up with just such supporters as he has.

Let's look at the forest, not the trees. When vindictive old Augie Busch and selfish, capricious Ted Turner line up against stable Peter O'Malley and imaginative Roy Eisenhardt, it's not hard to figure out which side has the general state of baseball at heart and which just has private axes to grind.

"Right now, it looks like there are three firm votes against Kuhn in the National League and two others wavering," said Eisenhardt, president of the Oakland A's and cochairman of baseball's Restructuring Committee. "What it looks like is what you have is three 'nos' in search of the fourth 'no' that's necessary to block the rehiring of the commissioner.

"Of course, if they get a solid fourth 'no,' then you might see a fifth and a sixth 'no' vote, too," continued Eisenhardt, who is pro-Kuhn. "But I'd say getting No. 4 is going to be tough for them.

"Whatever happens, doesn't it make you wonder about baseball's structure when four owners can thwart the will of 22 others? And that's exactly what it could come down to."

It's possible to find only seven owners—five in the National League and two in the American—who smile when the phrase "Dump Bowie" is mentioned.

Taken as a group, they're quite a cast: Busch of St. Louis, Turner of Atlanta, John McMullen of Houston, the Williams brothers of Cincinnati (who get one vote), Nelson Doubleday of the Mets, George Steinbrenner of the Yankees and Eddie Chiles of Texas.

Busch's middle name is bile.

To Turner, baseball is just another situation comedy. He'll vote his cable-TV wallet and everybody else be damned.

McMullen, whose eye is on baseball and hockey pay-TV millions, is another who is voting his bank account, not his conscience. He and Turner are afraid Kuhn will use his influence to keep baseball from being damaged, as boxing was, by overexposure, this could cost these two an extra Swiss villa somewhere along the line, so they're ready to fire Kuhn.

The Williams brothers—emblematic of the anachronistic, nearly demolished Reds—just can't force themselves to believe that times have changed: the players have been emancipated, but they don't want to believe it.

Doubleday has sniffed the wind and smells the future: the revenue sharing of pay-TV dollars. Kuhn's basically for it. So, Doubleday is voting according to his own New York megamarket wallet rather than voting in the best interest of the game his ancestor may have invented. He's bringing shame to the name. Maybe Alexander Cartwright dreamed up the sport after all.

Since the AL is locked up for Kuhn, Chiles and Steinbrenner don't count, but they make interesting allies. Both are meddlesome millionaires in the process of devaluing their clubs by trying to manage and general manage their teams, instead of letting pros do it. Naturally, they figure to be on the wrong side of this issue, too.

For the past year, ever since baseball took its $25 million strike bath, the game has, for the first time in memory, been looking seriously at its two basic problems of the '80s: labor relations and revenue sharing. In other words, how the loot should be split between the owners and the players, and how the owners should split their part of the pot among themselves.

"No real progress can be made in these areas until the issue of the commissioner is settled," says Eisenhardt. "If Kuhn is fired, it won't do any real damage to the work of the Restructuring Committee, but it will certainly delay the game's ability to act on these important matters."

That may be putting the issue too mildly. In the 12 months since the strike, baseball has made progress in reaching a significant consensus among owners in several areas. The Restructuring Committee's extremely important proposals—especially on joint league voting on major issues, as well as placing both league presidents and the Player Relations Committee under the commissioner—are emblematic of this:

No matter what anybody says up front, the committee has operated on the assumption that a new, more powerful Kuhn—given a mandate, among other things, to bring PRC strike general Ray Grebey sharply to heel—would be the next commissioner.

While gaining some powers, Kuhn is perfectly willing, perhaps even glad, to welcome a newly created power figure—a sort of chief executive officer for baseball. This CEO would have a business background and focus on revenue sharing and cable TV. The Restructuring Committee is on record as endorsing such a move. But, as Kuhn backer John McHale of Montreal says, "If you carve out new areas for such a 'business' executive, it's essential that he must report to the commissioner. He can't be tunneling under him."

This growing common-sense consensus is possible in large part because, in the past three years, so many teams have come under new ownerships. "All the bad blood that's historically been in the game has apparently decreased," says Eisenhardt. "That's why we've made progress."

That is, until now.

"Maybe this is the last hurrah for the old-school way of doing baseball's business," said Eisenhardt. "And then maybe we can get on with our business and do something right for a change."

If men like O'Malley, Eisenhardt, Kuhn, McHale and Edward Bennett Williams in Baltimore can't pull baseball's wagon out of the ditch, then it's just going to have to stay stuck.

However, if a tiny gang of short-sighted self-servers stands in their way here this week, then more, much more's the pity.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I now yield briefly to the distinguished Senator from Iowa.

AN EXHIBIT OF WESTERN PAINTINGS

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, for the next week, an exhibit of the work representative of the finest contemporary western artists in 18 States will grace the rotunda of the Russell Senate Office Building. Recalling the style of Frederick Remington and Charles Russell, these paintings display western cattle ranching in the 1980's instead of the 1880's

This collection is the property of one dedicated man, James "Gene" Rush of Sioux City, Iowa, who commissioned artists following the recommendations of professionals and academics from each State selected.

I thank those 26 Senators who, with me, have cosponsored this exhibit and ask all of my colleagues to take some time to enjoy this interesting and representative display depicting the life of the contemporary cowboy and cattle ranch.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I yield the remainder of my time to the minority leader.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I thank the Senator.

RECOGNITION OF THE MINORITY LEADER

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The minority leader is recognized.

RISING UTILITY BILLS

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, last weekend the Washington Post published an article entitled, "Rising Utility Bills Stir Revolt." The article reported that—

Consumers, angry over rising utility bills, have forced utility issues onto the ballot in November in an unprecedented number of States, alarming the industry and producing heated campaigns that have seeped into other races.

In other words, the Post article indicates that rising utility bills are becoming a political issue in many States.

I was interested in this report, because the Committee on Environment and Public Works recently completed their revision of the Clean Air Act which included a very controversial acid precipitation proposal. The committees proposal is to impose a new regulatory program on a 31-State region to achieve a reduction of 8 million tons of sulfur dioxide emissions by 1995. If passed, one of the major effects of such a program would be to increase the electric utility bills for thousands of consumers in the Midwest and Appalachia. One analysis has estimated the change in electric utility rates that would be required in the first year that the 8-million-ton reduction is achieved. These would be rate increases required in order for utilities to recover capital costs associated with an acid precipitation control program. According to that analysis, several States in the Midwest would have utility rate increases of over 10 percent. These same States are also currently facing high unemployment rates. In my own State of West Virginia, where unemployment is about 10.9 percent, first year electric utility rate increases would be about 6.3 percent. In Ohio, where unemployment is about 11 percent, electric utility customers would see their rates increase by 19 percent. In Kentucky, where unemployment is about 9.8 percent, customers would see their rates increase by 10.9 percent. In other words, people who have already been hit hard by the economic recession could also look forward to the prospect of significantly higher electric rates.

Mr. President, I know there are many other Senators who are very concerned by the Environment Committee's acid precipitation proposal and its impact on utility rates. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD this article

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post, Sept. 11, 1982]

RISING UTILITY BILLS STIR REVOLT—CONSUMERS ALARM INDUSTRY BY PLACING ISSUES ON NOVEMBER BALLOT

(By Martha M. Hamilton)

Consumers, angry over rising utility bills, have forced utility issues onto the ballot in November in an unprecedented number of states, alarming the industry and producing heated campaigns that have seeped into other races.

In eight states from coast to coast, groups have used the initiative process to put utility-related proposals on the ballot. One has already been knocked off on a technicality, and most of the rest have provoked massive counterefforts by utilities and the business community to defeat them.

In Maine and Massachusetts voters will decide whether to eliminate or limit the use of nuclear power plants, while in five other states ballot issues proposed changes ranging from the election of state public utility commissions and the creation of agencies to act as advocates for consumers in utility cases to the prohibition of automatic pass-throughs of increased fuel costs. In Idaho, voters will be asked to vote to support nuclear power.

"Unlike the last spate of consumer revolt, when anger was directed at the Public Utility Commissions . . . consumers seem to have gotten more savvy in their approach," a recent Dean Witter Reynolds utility industry analysis noted.

One of the initiatives that has caused the greatest concern is in Maine—"because of the precedent it might set," said Fran Valluzzo, manager of the Edison Electric Institute's state and local government relations office.

The Maine initiative would shut down nuclear power generation in the state by 1987, closing the Maine Yankee power plant, which provides approximately a third of Maine's power.

A similar initiative failed in 1980. That proposal would have shut down the plant immediately.

"The accident at Three Mile Island was the original reason for the first referendum," said Jo Ann Mooney, director of the referendum campaign. In February the state approved placing the issue on the ballot a second time.

In July, opponents of the issue began advertising heavily on radio and television. Mooney claims the advertising helped her group's cause. "Then it became real to people. The phones haven't stopped ringing since," she said.

The Committee to Save Maine Yankee, which successfully opposed the earlier ballot proposal, is also leading the opposition this year. The group includes some 40,000 citizens and is supported by but not run by utility companies such as Central Maine Power, according to that company's spokesman.

Opponents of the measure argue that it would force the state's utility companies to replace generating capacity by buying expensive oil. To do so would increase residential electricity bills dramatically—perhaps by as much as 21 percent, according to one state study—and drive industry from the state, they argue.

An Arkansas initiative has already been stricken from the ballot by the state Supreme Court. It called for an elected utility commission, a consumer advocate agency and elimination of fuel cost pass-through. The court ruled that the ballot's summary—some 800 words long—was confusing.

Proponents asked for a rehearing but concede that their chances are slim. "Fundamentally the court decided that the voters are too dumb to vote on this issue—that it's too complicated for the voters," said Zach Polett, of Arkansas Community Organizations for Reform Now (ACORN).

ACORN, the state labor federation and other groups collected signatures in favor of the initiative, spurred by a $102 million increase granted in May, 1982, to Arkansas Power and Light Co. Nearly three weeks ago, the state certified that the group had enough signatures for the initiative to appear on the ballot

Then came the court challenge to the proposal on the basis that the ballot description was too complicated. "It did work to the benefit of the utilities that the proponents had put so much into it that it sort of collapsed of its own weight," said Jerol Garrison, a spokesman for Arkansas Power and Light.

The utility company itself was neutral on the issue, although the company's president said he personally opposed the initiative.

In Massachusetts, voters will decide whether to restrict construction of new nuclear power plants. In Michigan and Ohio, ballots will include proposals for elected utility commissions. "Governors generally appoint political hacks," said lawyer Henry W. Eckhart, former chairman of Ohio's utility commission and a supporter of the measure.

In Missouri, whether or not a proposal for a citizen's utility board appears on the ballot depends on a court hearing. Supporters failed to get the issue on the ballot after opponents got petition signers to withdraw their names. Although supporters of the measure later produced affidavits from people saying they were misled and wanted their names reinstated, it was too late. The court will review a challenge to the law that permits signatures to be withdrawn, said Dean DeHart of Missourians for a Citizens Utility Board.

Nevada's ballot includes a proposal for a utility consumer advocacy agency.

In Idaho, Citizens for Energy and the Environment, which includes a large number of John Birch Society members, got a pro-nuclear power proposal on the ballot. "We think it's just historic," said Don Fotheringham, an organizer of the group.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Wisconsin (Mr. PROXMIRE).

Mr. PROXMIRE. I thank the minority leader.

NATO-WARSAW PACT COMPARISONS—PART II

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, yesterday, in part I of the three-part series from the Defense Monitor, I talked about the various static comparisons of strategic capability—the number of nuclear warheads, missiles, submarines, bombers, and the qualitative aspects of these force levels.

Today, the Monitor materials explore the relationship between the military forces of the Warsaw Pact nations and NATO. All to often we see comparisons between the U.S.S.R. and the United States without the contribution that would be made in any all-out war by their respective alliance partners. With a population of 626 million in NATO compared to 380 million for the Warsaw Pact, considering that NATO has more than a 2-to-1 lead in GNP and a $54 billion advantage in military spending, it can easily be seen that the NATO partners contribute much more to the relative defense of their military alliance than do the nations of the Eastern Bloc. Even considering Soviet border troops, internal security personnel, and construction units, the military manpower levels of the PACT and NATO are about equal.

The Warsaw Pact does have a commanding lead in tanks, armored vehicles, and submarines and this cannot go overlooked. The United States and our NATO allies must find production plants that allow higher production levels at lower unit costs if these relative disadvantages are to be redressed.

Most interesting is the fact that NATO has always outspent the Warsaw Pact in defense costs and that gap appears to be widening in the projections for 1980-86.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that part II of the Defense Monitor be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEFENSE MONITOR—PART II

THEATER NUCLEAR FORCES

The U.S. has about 6,000 nuclear weapons in Europe, excluding those on ships and submarines.

The U.S. has over 400 fighter bombers in Europe which can strike all Warsaw Pact nations with nuclear weapons.

France and Great Britain have over 500 nuclear weapons of their own that can be exploded on the Soviet Union.

2,600 of the NATO and U.S. nuclear weapons in Europe can be exploded on the Soviet Union.

The Soviet Union has been deploying SS-20 intermediate range missiles since 1977. It now has about 300 SS-20s with 3 warheads each (900 weapons) deployed. One-third of these face China.

The Soviet Union also has 300 SS-4 and SS-5 medium and intermediate range missiles for a total of 600 MRBMs and IRBMs. This is the same number of these types of missiles they had 10 years ago, though because the SS-20 is MIRVed they now carry more weapons.

The Soviet MRBM/IRBM force has ⅓ less total megatonnage than it had in 1970.

The U.S. has 180 medium-range Pershing 1a missiles based in West Germany. France has 18 intermediate-range missiles of its own.

The U.S., the U.S.S.R., France, and Britain all have a substantial number of nuclear weapons for combat in Europe. It is estimated that over 15,000 weapons are allocated directly on both sides for nuclear war in Europe.

VERIFICATION CAPABILITIES

Both the U.S. and U.S.S.R. use a vast array of sophisticated and powerful intelligence gathering systems to survey each other regularly, thoroughly and accurately. These systems include photo-reconnaissance satellites, radars and other devices in space, on land, sea, and in the air, which monitor all aspects of weapon testing and deployments. U.S. satellites reportedly can photograph objects 6 inches or less in diameter. U.S. satellites also use infra-red scanning to monitor Soviet missiles.

The Soviet Union is surrounded by U.S. monitoring stations.

The U.S. does not depend only on the technical limits of satellite cameras. Electronic and computer techniques are also used to enhance the quality of pictures.

Both civilian and military officials have repeatedly testified that the U.S. has the capbility to adequately verify existing arms control trends.

The Soviet Union, the U.S., and Britain have agreed in principle on arrangements for on-site inspection of a comprehensive nuclear test ban.

NATO/WARSAW PACT COMPARISONS

"In the Central Region of Europe, a rough numerical balance exists between the immediately available non-nuclear forces of NATO (including France) and those of the Warsaw Pact."—Defense Secretary Harold Brown, January 1980.

The Warsaw Pact has 253 active divisions and NATO has the equivalent of 143 divisions when independent brigades are included. NATO divisions are, in general, larger than Warsaw Pact divisions. U.S. divisions average about 18,300 soldiers. Soviet divisions 11,000.

NATO leads the Warsaw Pact in total manpower in uniform, total ground forces, and total ground forces in Europe.

The Warsaw Pact has more than a 2-1 edge over NATO in the total number of tanks. The Warsaw Pact has only a 1.54-1 advantage in main battle tanks in Europe.

NATO has invested heavily in anti-tank weapons and leads the Warsaw Pact in both the quantity and quality of such weapons, NATO deploys over 50 types of anti-tank weapons and a total of almost half a million.

NATO and the Warsaw Pact have approximately the same number of total combat aircraft.

The quality of NATO weapons including combat aircraft, artillery, anti-tank weapons, military helicopters, and air launched missiles, exceeds that of the Soviets.

"What are called static measures of assessment, in which for example, Soviet and American missile or tank inventories are compared in isolation, are rarely illuminating about the expected outcome of a battle or instructive as to the defense posture we should adopt."—Defense Secretary Harold Brown, January 1980.

"NATO forces are well trained and, given the full range of capabilities at their disposal, are capable of presenting a credible defense of Alliance territory."—1982 NATO Report.

NAVAL COMPARISONS

U.S. and other NATO navies have twice the naval tonnage and several times the firepower of the Soviet and other Warsaw Pact navies.

The Soviet Navy, which started far behind us, has also been declining in size recently, not increasing. In certain types of Soviet naval vessels, the decline over the years has been significant. The Soviets have 100 less submarines of all categories today than they had ten years ago.

NATO has 428 major surface combatants. The Warsaw Pact has 281. NATO has deployed more than twice as many as the Soviet Navy since the early 1960's and will continue to outproduce the Soviets in the future.

The U.S. has 13 heavy aircraft carriers, the Soviets none. The Soviets have two Kiev ships which are equipped with less capable aircraft and are comparable in both size and capability to the five U.S. Tarawa-class amphibious assault ships.

The U.S. continues to hold superiority over the Soviet Navy in performance of critical missions such as strike warfare, amphibious warfare, and anti-submarine warfare as well as in readiness.

The U.S. Navy has 553,000 personnel compared to 433,000 for the Soviet Navy.

The U.S. has 193,000 marines; the Soviets only 12,000.

The U.S. has major naval bases around the world. The Soviet Union has no naval bases outside of the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe.

"The Soviet Union must divide its large naval forces between four separate and widely dispersed fleets. It would be extremely difficult for the Soviet Union to utilize ships from one fleet in another theater in the event of hostilities, since these ships must pass through geographical barriers and bottlenecks which are subject to closure by U.S./NATO naval operations."—Department of Defense, 1980.

MILITARY SPENDING

The Administration proposes spending 1.9 Trillion dollars over the next six years on the military. This means we will spend $36 million every hour for the next six years. It will cost a total of more than $20,000 for every taxpayer in America.

Seventy-eight percent of all discretionary spending in the federal budget goes to pay for the military.

The cost of new and often unnecessary weapons continues to escalate. The estimated cost for 44 major weapons sytems jumped $114.5 Billion in the last three months of 1981.

The U.S. and its NATO allies have outspent the Soviet/Warsaw Pact military forces for many years—$256 Billion to $202 Billion in 1980 alone.

The Administration's claim that the Soviets outspend the U.S. on military forces ignores the contribution of our military allies.

Official estimates which compare U.S. and Soviet military spending use a C.I.A. methodology based on costing out the Soviet military at U.S. prices. For example, the Soviets pay their soldiers less than 5 rubles (about $8) per month. The U.S. pays its recruits more than $500 per month. Yet, Soviet manpower costs are calculated at U.S. wages.

Because the Soviets have twice as many soldiers as we do (the Soviets face twice as many NATO and Chinese troops as they have in their own forces), every one million dollars we put into pay increases for our troops shows up as a $2 million increase in the Soviet budget.

The C.I.A. acknowledges this problem, stating that its dollar cost calculations "overstate Soviet programs relative to the U.S."

RESTRAINT ON FREEDOM OF SPEECH: INVALID OBJECTION TO THE GENOCIDE CONVENTION

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, America was instrumental in drafting the Genocide Convention in 1946, a measure intended to prevent human nightmares such as the Holocaust perpetrated by the Nazis. But, as we are painfully aware, the Senate has not yet ratified this important treaty.

Why is this treaty so important? Because it guarantees to all groups, no matter what their race, religion, or creed, the right to live free of the specter of systematic annihilation. We were not only the leader of the human rights fight for the Genocide Convention, we were the author of it. The United States was the principal proponent. The United States should have been the first nation to ratify the Genocide Convention. Instead, we have stood passively by while 82 other nations have ratified the treaty. Mr. President, 82 other countries, large and small, rich and poor, east and west, every other developed country in the world except us. In this instance, we did not even join, much less lead, the march toward an international human rights code.

Why, then, has not the Senate acted to correct this embarrassing flaw in our record? One long-standing objection to the convention is that the clause which forbids "direct and public incitement to commit genocide" violates the freedom-of-speech amendment to our constitution. Anyone who has done his legal homework, Mr. President, knows this objection has no basis in fact.

According to a 1969 Supreme Court ruling on the first amendment, freedom of speech and the incitement to commit lawless actions are not the same thing. One is legal, and the other is not. A person can declare that he is in favor of genocide, or murder, or incest, or any lawless action. But he is forbidden to incite others to commit a criminal act.

There is nothing in the Genocide Convention that prevents someone from saying he is in favor of genocide. The only constraint it places on an individual's speech is that he refrain from inciting others to commit genocide—and that is in perfect accord with our Constitution.

For the record, then, Assistant Attorney General William Rehnquist, speaking on behalf of the Nixon administration, testified before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on the relation between our Constitution and the Genocide Convention. I quote the following testimony:

Senator CHURCH. In other words, you are satisfied that such constitutional protection, as presently exists in the field of free speech, would not be adversely affected in any way by the terms of this Convention?

Mr. REHNQUIST. I am satisfied, first, that they would not be, and, second, that they could not be.

Clearly, the argument that this Convention infringes on our constitutional right to freedom of speech, like so many other objections to the treaty, does not stand up to close scrutiny. Mr. President, I ask that the Senate ratify the Genocide Convention.

I yield the floor.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may reserve the remainder of my time until the special orders have been completed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR THURMOND

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from South Carolina is recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes.

Mr. THURMOND. I thank the Chair.

S. 2902—A BILL TO DEFINE THE AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE OF INSANITY AND ESTABLISH PROCEDURES FOR THE COMMITMENT OF MENTALLY ILL OFFENDERS

(Introduced by Mr. THURMOND, for himself, Mr. BIDEN, Mr. SPECTER, Mr. COCHRAN, Mr. DECONCINI, Mr. DOLE, Mr. EAST, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. HATCH, Mr. HEFLIN, Mr. LAXALT, Mr. LONG, Mr. NUNN, Mr. PRESSLER, Mr. QUAYLE, Mr. SIMPSON, Mr. SYMMS, Mr. ZORINSKY, Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD, Mr. CHILES, Mr. HELMS, Mr. WARNER, Mr. BAKER, Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. HUMPHREY, and Mr. HUDDLESTON.)

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, today, I am introducing a bill to define the affirmative defense of insanity and to establish uniform and comprehensive procedures for the civil commitment of Federal offenders suffering from a mental disease or defect.

In sponsoring this measure, I am joined by Senator BIDEN, the ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary. Senator SPECTER, a distinguished former prosecutor and chairman of the Subcommittee on Juvenile Justice, is also cosponsoring this bill. Further, Senator HEFLIN, the former chief justice of the Alabama Supreme Court and a man whose legal opinion I value highly, is joining me in introducing this legislation.

Mr. President, among the distinguished Members of this body cosponsoring this measure are 10 members of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, will the distinguished Senator yield?

Mr. THURMOND. Yes.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Is my name among those names?

Mr. THURMOND. No, Mr. President, it is not.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I should be very happy if the distinguished Senator would add my name.

Mr. THURMOND. I am very pleased to do that.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the name of the distinguished Senator from West Virginia (Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD) be added as cosponsor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I thank the Senator.

Mr. THURMOND. Moreover, Mr. President, Senators COCHRAN, HATCH, PRESSLER, NUNN, QUAYLE, SYMMS, and ZORINSKY, all of whom have previously introduced legislation on this subject, are joining me in cosponsoring this bill. Clearly, this proposal has strong bipartisan support.

The issue of the insanity defense is one that cries out for legislative reform. Unfortunate as the verdict was in the attempted assassination of the President of the United States, it did serve to focus the attention of the Nation and this Congress on the serious shortcomings of the insanity test presently applied by the Federal courts. People throughout this country, from every walk of life and of every political persuasion, have called for a change in the law. I am sure that my colleagues have been overwhelmed by calls, letters, and telegrams from their constituents demanding that we address this issue so that the law will no longer allow the criminals of this world to escape responsibility for deliberate, violent, vicious acts.

We in the Senate would be shirking our duty to protect law-abiding citizens if we fail to take the time of this Congress to reform the insanity defense. The bill that I and my colleagues are introducing today would provide this needed reform and restore public confidence in our criminal justice system.

Congress has never enacted legislation defining the test to be used for insanity in Federal criminal cases, or spelling out procedures to be applied once the defense is raised. The development of the insanity defense has therefore been left to the Federal courts of appeal.

The foundation for the insanity defense was laid over a century ago by the British courts seeking to deal with mentally deranged defendants in a legally rational manner. The first articulated rule for defining insanity in the context of a criminal prosecution was established in England in the case of Daniel M'Naghten in 1843:

> Every man is to be presumed to be sane . . . To establish a defense on the ground of insanity, it must be clearly proved that, at the time of the committing the act, the party accused was labouring under such defect of reason, from disease of the mind, as not to know the nature and quality of the act he was doing; or if he did know it, that he did not know he was doing what was wrong.

This rule became the dominant test of the insanity defense used in the United States for many years.

However, the M'Naghten rule, or right-wrong test as it is often called, has been gradually but steadily broadened by the American courts. In 1897, the notion of "irresistible impulse" was added to the M'Naghten rule to excuse criminal behavior by defendants even if they could discern right from wrong, as long as they were unable to control their actions because of some form of mental illness.

In 1954, the Durham rule was established which extended the insanity defense even further to forgive unlawful acts which were the "product" of a mental disease or defect. After wrestling with the vague Durham rule "products test" for almost 20 years, the Federal courts adopted the governing standard used in the Hinckley case, and which the American Law Institute sets forth in the Model Penal Code.

This formulation, commonly referred to as the ALI test, includes both cognitive and control criteria in framing the insanity defense. The test provides:

> A person is not responsible for criminal conduct if at the time of such conduct as a result of mental disease or defect he lacks substantial capacity either to appreciate the wrongfulness of his conduct or to conform his conduct to the requirements of the law.

The drafters of this provision, therefore, expanded the defense to cover not only the inability of a person to distinguish right from wrong with respect to his acts, but to accord independent significance to the inability to control behavior, thus adopting the irresistible impulse notion. In addition, by its "substantial capacity" formulation, the American Law Institute recommended explicit recognition of a vague and blurred line between the sane and the insane.

A survey recently conducted by the Congressional Research Service shows that 23 States apply some version of the M'Naghten test, although 6 of those States have supplemented the test with the "irresistible impulse" concept. Twenty-five States and the District of Columbia have adopted a formulation of the ALI test, which is also the basic test applied in the Federal courts. Two States have utilized what is commonly referred to as a mens rea approach and seven States have created an alternative verdict of "guilty, but mentally ill."

A factor equally important as the test used to legally define insanity is the assignment of the burden of proof. In a criminal trial, the prosecution has the burden of proving all the essential elements of the crime charged. The burden of proof is composed of two parts: The burden of production and the burden of persuasion. The burden of production only requires that evidence be introduced to place a fact at issue in a trial, while the burden of persuasion requires that enough evidence be introduced to persuade the judge or jury of the actual existence of that fact.

The prosecution's burden of proof does not automatically extend to the sanity of the defendant. Instead, the defendant is presumed to be sane at the time he committed the acts constituting the offense. However, this presumption of sanity can be rebutted by the defendant by introducing evidence at trial to place his sanity, or mental condition, at issue.

Once the defendant's mental condition becomes an issue, the burden of persuasion becomes important. There are two views as to who must carry this burden: Some jurisdictions shift the burden of persuasion to the prosecution so that the defendant's sanity must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt, while other jurisdictions label it an affirmative defense, requiring the defendant to carry the burden of proving his insanity.

The States are evenly split between the two views of the burden of proof allocation. In 25 States and in the Federal courts, the prosecution bears the burden of disproving the elements of the insanity defense—that is proving sanity—beyond a reasonable doubt. Twenty-five States and the District of Columbia place the burden of proof on the defendant. Nineteen States require the level of proof to be "by a preponderance of the evidence," while three States require "beyond a reasonable doubt." Four other States have proof levels ranging from "to the satisfaction of the jury" to "by a reasonable certainty."

Mr. President, I have outlined the confused history of the modern insanity defense and provided background information on the sharply different practices used in the allocation of the burden of proof to provide a context and framework for examining the issues raised by the insanity defense. Primarily these are defining the test to be used to determine insanity, the burden of persuasion as to mental condition, and the proper disposition of offenders shown to be suffering from a mental disease or defect.

The legislation that I am proposing today has evolved from the hearings held by the Subcommittee on Criminal Law and by the full Judiciary Committee over the summer months. Senator SPECTER provided great leadership during that period, always being available to chair the hearings during my absence and participating in examining the many witnesses who appeared before the committee. I express my sincere appreciation to Senator SPECTER for all of his hard work on this issue. In addition, Senator HEFLIN was actively involved in the hearings and helped to focus the issues by drawing upon his extensive and impressive legal background and experience, and I thank him for his participation. Moreover, Senator GRASSLEY and Senator HATCH were equally helpful in chairing the hearings, and I commend them for their efforts and interest in this most important matter.

The hearings held by the Committee on the Judiciary were, in part, a response to the public outcry over the verdict in the Hinckley trial, but, more importantly, served to examine the various legislative proposals pending before the committee. By the conclusion of the hearings, nine bills had been introduced and referred to the Judiciary Committee. I should like to take this opportunity to briefly describe these bills.

S. 818.—This bill was introduced by Senator HATCH and adopts what has been termed the mens rea test. Under this approach, the insanity defense is focused upon the defendant's intent at the time of the commission of the acts constituting the offense. Senator HATCH has also introduced S. 1558, which uses the same mens rea approach but also provides for civil commitment procedures similar to the ones contained in the bill which I am introducing today.

S. 1106.—This measure was introduced by Senator ZORINSKY and establishes a plea of "guilty but insane." The bill also contains civil commitment procedures such as those contained in my bill.

S. 2658.—Senator SPECTER sponsored this bill which utilizes a M'Naghten test, shifts the burden of proof to the defendant by clear and convincing evidence, and limits psychiatric testimony as to the ultimate legal issues raised by the defense.

S. 2672.—This bill, which was introduced by Senator QUAYLE, defines the insanity defense under a mens rea test and establishes a special verdict of "guilty but mentally ill."

S. 2678.—Senator NUNN introduced this proposal which uses the same definition of insanity as used in my bill, makes it an affirmative defense, and provides for a verdict of guilty but mentally ill. The bill also establishes comprehensive civil commitment procedures.

S. 2745.—This legislation, which was sponsored by Senator SYMMS, is modeled on the law adopted by his own State of Idaho. It abandons the concept of mental condition as a defense to a criminal prosecution, yet it does allow the admission of expert testimony regarding a defendant's state of mind or mens rea.

S. 2780.—Senator COCHRAN introduced this proposal, which utilizes a M'Naghten test, shifts the burden of persuasion to the defendant, and limits psychiatric testimony. It further provides for a special verdict of guilty but mentally ill and establishes civil commitment procedures.

Seven hearings were held by the Committee on the Judiciary relative to the insanity defense. Three hearings were held by the Subcommittee on Criminal Law, and four were held by the full committee. A total of 42 witnesses appeared at these hearings. The committee heard testimony from some of the jurors who participated in the trial of John Hinckley. At that hearing, it was made poignantly clear that the jurors did not feel that they could properly assess the defendant's criminal responsibility under the ALI formulation of the insanity defense used by the Federal courts. The jurors expressed their frustration with the control test—or volitional prong of the ALI rule—which exculpates the defendant if he cannot "conform his conduct to the requirements of the law." Further, the jurors disclosed their dismay with the requirement of the law that the prosecution, once the insanity defense has been raised, be required to prove the defendant's sanity beyond a resonable doubt. It was suggested at that hearing and in subsequent hearings that the prosecution should not have to bear the burden of proving the defendant's sanity.

Throughout the hearings, the committee received testimony from a wide array of witnesses with a particular expertise or interest in this issue. The committee heard from psychiatrists and psychologists who expressed a broad divergence of opinion regarding the efficacy of psychiatric testimony and the need for an insanity defense. The committee also heard from legal scholars whose testimony ranged from advocating the abolishment of the defense to retaining current law.

The Attorney General appeared before the committee and testified in support of the mens rea approach. While I feel that approach certainly has merit, I share the concerns that my colleague Senator HEFLIN has often expressed regarding the mens rea test. I have spoken with the Attorney General on subsequent occasions, and I have shown him the bill that I am introducing today. He acknowledges that this proposal is a great improvement over current law.

The committee also heard from practicing lawyers from both the prosecution and defense sides of the issue. Attorneys litigating in States using alternative forms of the insanity defense, such as guilty but mentally ill, appeared and shared their experiences and insights with the Committee. Further, representatives from the Judicial Conference and mental health organizations testified and made recommendations to the committee. Mr. President, I am very satisfied that the committee thoroughly explored all of the issues relative to the insanity defense through the course of the seven hearings held on this matter.

The bill that I and my colleagues are introducing today does, I believe, represent a consensus view among those Senators on the committee, as well as those Senators who have introduced their own legislative proposals. This bill narrows the insanity defense to the degree that only those individuals who have no comprehension of what they are doing or have no understanding of the consequences of their acts, will be able to successfully assert the defense. Further, the bill addresses an important, yet overlooked, area of the law—the civil commitment of mentally ill persons in need of medical care and treatment. Today, there is no means by which the Federal Government can institutionalize insane and dangerous persons who have committed violent and criminal acts. The Government has had to rely on the benevolence of the States to commit dangerously ill persons. This bill will remedy that obvious defect in our laws.

Section 1(a) of the bill establishes that insanity is an affirmative defense, thus placing the burden of persuasion on the defendant asserting the defense. The test of insanity is as follows:

It shall be an affirmative defense to a prosecution under any Federal statute that, at the time of the commission of the acts constituting the offense, the defendant, as a result of mental disease or defect, lacked entirely—

(1) the ability to understand the nature and quality of his acts or

(2) the ability to distinguish right from wrong with respect to his acts.

This would be the sole and exclusive test of insanity. The bill specifically states that mental disease or defect does not otherwise constitute a defense.

This particular formulation of the insanity defense focuses on the defendant's cognitive ability to perceive what he is doing and to know that his actions are wrong. The bill rejects any notion that a defendant should be excused from criminal liability because he could not conform his conduct to the requirements of the law or because he had an irresistible impulse to commit the act.

This is a point that cannot be overemphasized. A person's volitional ability to control his behavior or resist impulses is simply not contemplated under this insanity defense. It is, I submit, impossible to distinguish between offenders who were undeterrable and those who were merely undeterred, or between the impulse that was irresistible and the impulse resisted. Therefore, this formulation of the insanity defense does not recognize a volitional or control test.

Another important aspect of this test which deserves comment is the defendant's ability to distinguish right from wrong with respect to his acts. This test is meant to be an objective inquiry into the individual's cognitive ability to know whether he was doing right or wrong. The motivations for the criminal acts are irrelevant. For instance, religious or political reasons given for criminal behavior will not excuse the conduct even though the defendant may have felt that his actions were somehow justified.

Section 1(b) of the bill addresses the burden of proof issue, which is clearly a crucial factor in any criminal prosecution. The bill provides that the defendant has the burden of proving the defense of insanity by clear and convincing evidence. As a result, the prosecution no longer has to show that the defendant is sane once he has asserted the defense of insanity. The use of the clear and convincing standard requires that the defendant prove his insanity by evidence greater than a preponderance but less than beyond a reasonable doubt.

Section 2 of the bill makes technical changes in the notice provisions of the criminal code so that the defendant is required to notify the prosecution when he intends to introduce expert testimony relative to his mental condition at the time of the offense.

Section 3 establishes seven new sections under chapter 313 of title 18 of the United States Code establishing civil commitment procedures for an individual who suffers from a mental disease or defect and, as a result, presents a danger to the person or property of himself or another. These procedures provide uniform, clear, consistent treatment of an individual at every stage of the criminal justice process from the pretrial stage through conviction and release. The foundation for these procedures lies in the notion that the court should retain jurisdiction over Federal offenders suffering from mental diseases and that disposition of such offenders, whether it be institutionalization, release, or probation, should be ordered by the court following a hearing. As a result, the public is protected from insane and dangerous persons, and those criminal offenders in need of mental health care will receive proper and humane treatment.

There are two important aspects contained in section 3 which, I feel, deserve special comment. In section 4242, the bill provides for a special verdict of "not guilty only by reason of insanity." This additional verdict requires that the trier of fact specifically find that the "not guilty" verdict is founded upon a successful defense of insanity.

Another important provision is found in section 4243, which sets out the disposition of an individual acquitted by reason of insanity. This section requires the insanity acquittee to bear the burden of proving that he is no longer insane—that is, that he is presently sane—and no longer dangerous before he can be released to the community. This differs from present law in which the prosecution, which previously argued that the defendant was sane, must turn around after an acquittal and assert that the defendant is presently insane.

Other than these two changes, the commitment procedures contained in this bill are those which have been considered by the Committee on the Judiciary for several years. Also, these same procedures were passed by the Senate by unanimous consent in the 95th Congress.

Mr. President, in closing, let me remind my colleagues that the first duty of a government is to protect innocent and law-abiding persons from the bullies and predators of the world. We must insure that criminals who deliberately plan and carry out brutal acts of violence with full knowledge of the nature and wrongfulness of their conduct will be morally condemned by the community and held appropriately accountable for their acts.

The citizens of this Nation are watching the Congress to see whether we respond to their demands for a change in the laws governing the insanity defense. This bill meets those demands. I sincerely hope that my fellow Senators will respond to their constituents by supporting this measure, and I urge prompt consideration of this bill.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a copy of the bill and a section-by-section analysis.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2902

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. (a) Chapter 1 of title 18, United States Code is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"§ 16. Insanity Defense.

"(a) AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE.—It shall be an affirmative defense to a prosecution under any Federal statute that, at the time of the commission of the acts constituting the offense, the defendant, as a result of mental disease or defect, lacked entirely—

"(1) the ability to understand the nature and quality of his acts; or

"(2) the ability to distinguish right from wrong with respect to his acts.

Mental disease or defect does not otherwise constitute a defense.

"(b) BURDEN OF PROOF.—The defendant has the burden of proving the defense of insanity by clear and convincing evidence."

SEC. 2. Rule 12.2 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure is amended—

(a) by amending the title of the rule to read "Rule 12.2 Notice of Insanity Defense or Expert Testimony of Defendant's Mental Condition";

(b) by amending subdividion (b) to read as follows:

"(b) EXPERT TESTIMONY OF DEFENDANT'S MENTAL CONDITION.—If a defendant intends to introduce expert testimony relating to a mental disease or defect or any other mental condition bearing upon the issue of guilt, he shall, within the time provided for the filing of pretrial motions or at such later time as the court may direct, notify the attorney for the government in writing of such intention and file a copy of such notice with the clerk. The court may for cause shown allow late filing of the notice or grant additional time to the parties to prepare for trial or make such other order as may be appropriate."; and

(c) by deleting "by a psychiatrist designated for this purpose in the order of the court" in subdivision (c) and inserting in lieu thereof "pursuant to 18 U.S.C. 4242".

SEC. 3. Chapter 313 of title 18, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"Chapter 313—OFFENDERS WITH MENTAL DISEASE OR DEFECT

"Sec.

"4241. Determination of mental competency to stand trial.

"4242. Determination of the existence of insanity at the time of the offense.
"4243. Hospitalization of a person found not guilty only by reason of insanity.
"4244. Hospitalization of a convicted person suffering from mental disease or defect.
"4245. Hospitalization of an imprisoned person suffering from mental disease or defect.
"4246. Hospitalization of a person due for release but suffering from mental disease or defect.
"4247. General provisions for chapter 313.

"§ 4241. Determination of mental competency to stand trial.

"(a) MOTION TO DETERMINE COMPETENCY OF DEFENDANT.—At any time after the commencement of a prosecution for an offense and prior to the sentencing of the defendant, the defendant or the attorney for the government may file a motion for a hearing to determine the mental competency of the defendant. The court shall grant the motion, or shall order such a hearing on its own motion, if there is reasonable cause to believe that the defendant may presently be suffering from a mental disease or defect rendering him mentally incompetent to the extent that he is unable to understand the nature and consequences of the proceedings against him or to assist properly in his defense.

"(b) PSYCHIATRIC OR PSYCHOLOGICAL EXAMINATION AND REPORT.—Prior to the date of the hearing, the court may order that a psychiatric or psychological examination of the defendant be conducted, and that a psychiatric or psychologial report be filed with the court, pursuant to the provisions of section 4247 (b) and (c).

"(c) HEARING.—The hearing shall be conducted pursuant to the provisions of section 4247(d).

"(d) DETERMINATION AND DISPOSITION.—If, after the hearing, the court finds by a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant is presently suffering from a mental disease or defect rendering him mentally incompetent to the extent that he is unable to understand the nature and consequences of the proceedings against him or to assist properly in his defense, the court shall commit the defendant to the custody of the Attorney General. The Attorney General shall hospitalize the defendant for treatment in a suitable mental hospital, or in another facility designated by the court as suitable—

"(1) for such a reasonable period of time, not to exceed four months, as is necessary to determine whether there is a substantial probability that in the foreseeable future he will attain the capability to permit the trial to proceed; and

"(2) for an additional reasonable period of time until—

"(A) his mental condition is so improved that trial may proceed, if the court finds that there is a substantial probability that within such additional period of time he will attain the capacity to permit the trial to proceed; or

"(B) the pending charges against him are disposed of according to law;

whichever is earlier.

If, at the end of the time period specified, it is determined that the defendant's mental condition has not so improved as to permit the trial to proceed, the defendant is subject to the provisions of section 4246.

"(e) DISCHARGE.—When the director of the facility in which the defendant is hospitalized pursuant to subsection (d) determines that the defendant has recovered to such an extent that he is able to understand the nature and consequences of the proceedings against him and to assist properly in his defense, he shall promptly file a certificate to that effect with the clerk of the court that ordered the commitment. The clerk shall send a copy of the certicate to the defendant's counsel and to the attorney for the government. The court shall hold a hearing, conducted pursuant to the provisions of section 4247 (d), to determine the competency of the defendant. If, after the hearing, the court finds by a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant has recovered to such an extent that he is able to understand the nature and consequences of the proceedings against him and to assist properly in his defense, the court shall order his immediate discharge from the facility in which he is hospitalized and shall set the date for trial.

"(f) ADMISSIBILITY OF FINDING OF COMPETENCY.—A finding by the court that the defendant in raising the issue of his insanity as a defense to the offense charged, and shall not be admissible as evidence in a trail for the offense charged.

"§ 4242. Determination of the existence of insanity at the time of the offense.

"(a) MOTION FOR PRETRIAL PSYCHIATRIC OR PSYCHOLOGICAL EXAMINATION.—Upon filing of a notice, as provided in Rule 12.2 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, the court, upon motion of the attorney for the government, may order that a psychiatric or psychological examination of the defendant be conducted, and that a psychiatric or psychological report be filed with the court, pursuant to the provisions of section 4247 (b) and (c).

"(b) SPECIAL VERDICT.—If the issue of insanity is raised by notice as provided in Rule 12.2 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure on motion of the defendant or of the attorney for the government, or on the court's own motion, the jury shall be instructed to find, or, in the event of a nonjury trial, the court shall find the defendant—

"(1) guilty;

"(2) not guilty; or

"(3) not guilty only by reason of insanity."

"§ 4243. Hospitalization of a person found not guilty only by reason of insanity.

"(a) DETERMINATION OF PRESENT MENTAL CONDITION OF ACQUITTED PERSON.—If a person is found not guilty only by reason of insanity at the time of the offense charged, he shall be committed to a suitable facility until such time as he is eligible for release pursuant to subsection (e).

"(b) PSYCHIATRIC OR PSYCHOLOGICAL EXAMINATION AND REPORT.—Prior to the date of the hearing, pursuant to subsection (c), the court shall order that a psychiatric or psychological report be filed with the court, pursuant to the provisions of section 4247 (b) and (c).

"(c) HEARING.—A hearing shall be conducted pursuant to the provisions of section 4247(d) and shall take place not later than forty days following the special verdict.

"(d) BURDEN OF PROOF.—In a hearing pursuant to subsection (c) of this section, a person found not guilty only by reason of insanity of an offense involving bodily injury to, or serious damage to the property of, another person, or involving a substantial risk of such injury or damage, has the burden of proving by clear and convincing evidence that his release would not create a substantial risk of bodily injury to, or serious damage to the property of, another person due to a present mental disease or defect. With respect to any other offense, the person has the burden of such proof by a preponderance of the evidence.

"(e) DETERMINATION AND DISPOSITION.—If, after a hearing, the court fails to find by the standard specified in subsection (d) of this section that the person's release would not create a substantial risk of bodily injury to, or serious damage to the property of, another person due to a present mental disease or defect, the court shall commit the person to the custody of the Attorney General. The Attorney General shall release the person to the appropriate official of the State in which the person is domiciled or was tried if such State will assume responsibility for his custody, care, and treatment. The Attorney General shall make all reasonable efforts to cause such State to assume such responsibility. If, notwithstanding such efforts, neither such State will assume such responsibility, the Attorney General shall hospitalize the person for treatment in a suitable facility until—

"(1) such a State will assume such responsibility; or

"(2) the person's mental condition is such that his release, or his conditional release under a prescribed regimen of medical, psychiatric, or psychological care or treatment, would not create a substantial risk of bodily injury to another person or serious damage to property of another;

whichever is earlier. The Attorney General shall continue periodically to exert all reasonable efforts to cause such a State to assume such responsibility for the person's custody, care, and treatment."

"(f) DISCHARGE.—When the director of the facility in which an acquitted person is hospitalized pursuant to subsection (e) determines that the person has recovered from his mental disease or defect to such an extent that his release, or his conditional release under a prescribed regimen of medical, psychiatric, or psychological care or treatment, would no longer create a substantial risk of bodily injury to another person or serious damage to property of another, he shall promptly file a certificate to that effect with the clerk of the court that ordered the commitment. The clerk shall send a copy of the certificate to the person's counsel and to the attorney for the government. The court, on the motion of the attorney for the government or on its own motion, shall hold a hearing, conducted pursuant to the provisions of section 4247(d), to determine whether he should be released. If, after the hearing, the court finds by the standard specified in subsection (d) that the person has recovered from his mental disease or defect to such an extent that—

"(1) his release would no longer create a substantial risk of bodily injury to another person or serious damage to property of another, the court shall order that he be immediately discharged; or

"(2) his conditional release under a prescribed regimen of medical, psychiatric, or psychological care or treatment would no longer create a substantial risk of bodily injury to another person or serious damage to property of another, the court shall—

"(A) order that he be conditionally discharged under a prescribed regimen of medical, psychiatric, or psychological care or treatment that has been prepared for him, that has been certified to the court as appropriate by the director of the facility in which he is committed, and that has been found by the court to be appropriate; and

"(B) order, as an exlicit condition of release, that he comply with the prescribed regimen of medical, psychiatric, or psychological care or treatment.

The court at any time may, after a hearing employing the same criteria, modify or eliminate the regimen of medical, psychiatric, or psychological care or treatment.

"(g) REVOCATION OF CONDITIONAL DISCHARGE.—The director of a medical facility responsible for administering a regimen imposed on an acquitted person conditionally discharged under subsection (f) shall notify the Attorney General and the court having jurisdiction over the person of any failure of the person to comply with the regimen. Upon such notice, or upon other probable cause to believe that the person has failed to comply with the prescribed regimen of medical, psychiatric, or psychological care or treatment, the person may be arrested, and, upon arrest, shall be taken without unnecessary delay before the court having jurisdiction over him. The court shall, after a hearing, determine whether the person should be remanded to a suitable facility on the ground that, in light of his failure to comply with the prescribed regimen of medical, psychiatric, or psychological care or treatment, his continued release would create a substantial risk of bodily injury to another person or serious damage to property of another.

"§ 4244. Hospitalization of a convicted person suffering from mental disease or defect.

"(a) MOTION TO DETERMINE PRESENT MENTAL CONDITION OF CONVICTED DEFENDANT.—A defendant found guilty of an offense, or the attorney for the government, may, within ten days after the defendant is found guilty, and prior to the time the defendant is sentenced, file a motion for a hearing on the present mental condition of the defendant if the motion is supported by substantial information indicating that the defendant may presently be suffering from a mental disease or defect for the treatment of which he is in need of custody for care or treatment in a suitable facility. The court shall grant the motion, or at any time prior to the sentencing of the defendant shall order such a hearing on its own motion, if it is of the opinion that there is reasonable cause to believe that the defendant may presently be suffering from a mental disease or defect for the treatment of which he is in need of custody for care or treatment in a suitable facility. "(b) PSYCHIATRIC OR PSYCHOLOGICAL EXAMINATION AND REPORT.—Prior to the date of the hearing, the court may order that a psychiatric or psychological examination of the defendant be conducted, and that a psychiatric or psychological report be filed with the court, pursuant to the provisions of section 4247 (b) and (c). In addition to the information required to be included in the psychiatric or psychological report pursuant to the provisions of section 4247(c), if the report includes an opinion by the examiners that the defendant is presently suffering from a mental disease or defect but that it is not such as to require his custody for care or treatment in a suitable facility, the report shall also include an opinion by the examiner concerning the sentencing alternatives available under chapter 227 of this title that could best accord the defendant the kind of treatment he does need.

"(c) HEARING.—The hearing shall be conducted pursuant to the provisions of section 4247(d).

"(d) DETERMINATION AND DISPOSITION.—If, after the hearing, the court finds by a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant is presently suffering from a mental disease or defect and that he should, in lieu of being sentenced to imprisonment, be committed to a suitable facility for care or treatment, the court shall commit the defendant to the custody of the Attorney General. The Attorney General shall hospitalize the defendant for care or treatment in a suitable facility. Such a commitment shall be treated for administrative purposes as a provisional sentence of imprisonment for the maximum term authorized for the offense committed.

"(e) DISCHARGE.—When the director of the facility in which the defendant is hospitalized pursuant to subsection (d) determines that the defendant has recovered from his mental disease or defect to such an extent that he is no longer in need of custody for care or treatment in such a facility, he shall promptly file a certificate to that effect with the clerk of the court that ordered the commitment. The clerk shall send a copy of the certificate to the defendant's counsel and to the attorney for the government. If, at the time of the filing of the certificate, the provisional sentence imposed pursuant to subsection (d) has not expired, the court shall proceed finally to sentence the defendant in accordance with the sentencing alternatives and procedures available under chapter 227.

"§ 4245. Hospitalization of an imprisoned person suffering from mental disease or defect.

"(a) MOTION TO DETERMINE PRESENT MENTAL CONDITION OF IMPRISONED DEFENDANT.—If a defendant serving a sentence of imprisonment objects either in writing or through his attorney to being transferred to a suitable facility for care or treatment, an attorney for the government, at the request of the director of the facility in which the defendant is imprisoned, may file a motion with the court for the district in which the facility is located for a hearing on the present mental condition of the defendant. The court shall grant the motion if there is reasonable cause to believe that the defendant may presently be suffering from a mental disease or defect for the treatment of which he is in need of custody for care or treatment in a suitable facility. A motion filed under this subsection shall stay the release of the defendant pending completion of procedures contained in this section.

"(b) PSYCHIATRIC OR PSYCHOLOGICAL EXAMINATION AND REPORT.—Prior to the date of the hearing, the court may order that a psychiatric or psychological examination of the defendant be conducted, and that a psychiatric or psychological report be filed with the court, pursuant to the provisions of section 4247 (b) and (c).

"(c) HEARING.—The hearing shall be conducted pursuant to the provisions of section 4247 (d).

"(d) DETERMINATION AND DISPOSITION.—If, after the hearing, the court finds by a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant is presently suffering from a mental disease or defect for the treatment of which he is in need of custody for care or treatment in a suitable facility, the court shall commit the defendant to the custody of the Attorney General. The Attorney General shall hospitalize the defendant for treatment in a suitable facility until he is no longer in need of such custody for care or treatment or until the expiration of his sentence of imprisonment, whichever occurs earlier.

"(e) DISCHARGE.—When the director of the facility in which the defendant is hospitalized pursuant to subsection (d) determines that the defendant has recovered from his mental disease or defect to such an extent that he is no longer in need of custody for care or treatment in such a facility, he shall promptly file a certificate to that effect with the clerk of the court that ordered the commitment. The clerk shall send a copy of the certificate to the defendant's counsel and to the attorney for the government. If, at the time of the filing of the certificate, the term of imprisonment imposed upon the defendant has not expired, the court shall order that the defendant be reimprisoned until the date of his release.

"§ 4246. Hospitalization of a person due for release but suffering from mental disease or defect.

"(a) INSTITUTION OF PROCEEDING.—If the director of a facility in which a person is hospitalized certifies that a person whose sentence is about to expire, or who has been committed to the custody of the Attorney General pursuant to section 4241(d), or against whom all criminal charges have been dismissed solely for reasons related to the mental condition of the person, is presently suffering from a mental disease or defect as a result of which his release would create a substantial risk of bodily injury to another person or serious damage to property of another, and that suitable arrangements for State custody and care of the person are not available, he shall transmit the certificate to the clerk of the court for the district in which the person is confined. The clerk shall send a copy of the certificate to the person's counsel, and to the attorney for the government, and, if the person was committed pursuant to section 4241(d), to the clerk of the court that ordered the commitment. The court shall order a hearing to determine whether the person is presently suffering from a mental disease or defect as a result of which his release would create a substantial risk of bodily injury to another person or serious damage to property of another. A certificate filed under this subsection shall stay the release of the person pending completion of procedures contained in this section.

"(b) PSYCHIATRIC OR PSYCHOLOGICAL EXAMINATION AND REPORT.—Prior to the date of the hearing, the court may order that a psychiatric or psychological examination of the defendant be conducted, and that a psychiatric or psychological report be filed with the court, pursuant to the provisions of section 4247 (b) and (c).

"(c) HEARING.—The hearing shall be conducted pursuant to the provisions of section 4247 (d).

"(d) DETERMINATION AND DISPOSITION.—If, after the hearing, the court finds by clear and convincing evidence that the person is presently suffering from a mental disease or defect as a result of which his release would create a substantial risk of bodily injury to another person or serious damage to property of another, the court shall commit the person to the custody of the Attorney General. The Attorney General shall release the person to the appropriate official of the State in which the person is domiciled or was tried if such State will assume responsibility for his custody, care, and treatment. The Attorney General shall make all reasonable efforts to cause such a State to assume such responsibility. If, notwithstanding such efforts, neither such State will assume such responsibility, the Attorney General shall hospitalize the person for treatment in a suitable facility, until—

"(1) such a State will assume such responsibility; or

"(2) the person's mental condition is such that his release, or his conditional release under a prescribed regimen of medical, psychiatric, or psychological care or treatment would not create a substantial risk of bodily injury to another person or serious damage to property of another;

whichever is earlier. The Attorney General shall continue periodically to exert all reasonable efforts to cause such a State to assume such responsibility for the person's custody, care, and treatment.

"(e) DISCHARGE.—When the director of the facility in which a person is hospitalized pursuant to subsection (d) determines that the person has recovered from his mental disease or defect to such an extent that his release would no longer create a substantial risk of bodily injury to another person or serious damage to property of another, he shall promptly file a certificate to that effect with the clerk of the court that ordered the commitment. The clerk shall send a copy of the certificate to the person's counsel and to the attorney for the government. The court, on the motion of the attorney for the government or on its own motion, shall hold a hearing, conducted pursuant to the provisions of section 4247 (d), to determine whether he should be released. If, after the hearing, the court finds by a preponderance of the evidence that the person has recovered from his mental disease or defect to such an extent that—

"(1) his release would no longer create a substantial risk of bodily injury to another person or serious damage to property of another, the court shall order that he be immediately discharged; or

"(2) his conditional release under a prescribed regimen of medical, psychiatric, or psychological care or treatment would no longer create a substantial risk of bodily injury to another person or serious damage to property of another, the court shall—

"(A) order that he be conditionally discharged under a prescribed regimen of medical, psychiatric, or psychological care or treatment that has been prepared for him, that has been certified to the court as appropriate by the director of the facility in which he is committed, and that has been found by the court to be appropriate; and

"(B) order, as an explicit condition of release, that he comply with the prescribed regimen of medical, psychiatric, or psychological care or treatment.

The court at any time may, after a hearing employing the same criteria, modify or eliminate the regimen of medical, psychiatric, or psychological care or treatment.

"(f) REVOCATION OF CONDITIONAL DISCHARGE.—The director of a medical facility responsible for administering a regimen imposed on a person conditionally discharged under subsection (e) shall notify the Attorney General and the court having jurisdiction over the person of any failure of the person to comply with the regimen. Upon such notice, or upon other probable cause to believe that the person has failed to comply with the prescribed regimen of medical, psychiatric, or psychological care or treatment, the person may be arrested, and, upon arrest, shall be taken without unnecessary delay before the court having jurisdiction over him. The court shall, after a hearing, determine whether the person should be remanded to a suitable facility on the ground that, in light of his failure to comply with the prescribed regimen of medical, psychiatric, or psychological care or treatment, his continued release would create a substantial risk of bodily injury to another person or serious damage to property of another.

"(g) RELEASE TO STATE OF CERTAIN PERSONS.—If the director of a facility in which a person is hospitalized pursuant to this subchapter certifies to the Attorney General that a person, against whom all charges have been dismissed for reasons not related to the mental condition of the person, is presently suffering from a mental disease or defect as a result of which his release would create a substantial risk of bodily injury to another person or serious damage to property of another, the Attorney General shall release the person to the appropriate official of the State in which the person is domiciled or was tried for the purpose of institution of State proceedings for civil commitment. If neither such State will assume such responsibility, the Attorney General shall release the person upon receipt of notice from the State that it will not assume such responsibility, but not later than 10 days after certification by the director of the facility.

"§ 4247. General provisions for chapter 313.

"(a) DEFINITION.—As used in this chapter—

"(1) 'rehabilitation program' includes—

"(A) basic educational training that will assist the individual in understanding the society to which he will return and that will assist him in understanding the magnitude of his offense and its impact on society;

"(B) vocational training that will assist the individual in contributing to, and in participating in, the society to which he will return;

"(C) drug, alcohol, and other treatment programs that will assist the individual in overcoming his psychological or physical dependence; and

"(D) organized physical sports and recreation programs; and

"(2) 'suitable facility' means a facility that is suitable to provide care or treatment given the nature of the offense and the characteristics of the defendant.

"(b) PSYCHIATRIC OR PSYCHOLOGICAL EXAMINATION.—A psychiatric or psychological examination ordered pursuant to this chapter shall be conducted by a licensed or certified psychiatrist or clinical psychologist, or, if the court finds it appropriate, by more than one such examiner. Each examiner shall be—

"(1) designated by the court if the examination is ordered under section 4241, 4242, 4243, or 4244; or

"(2) designated by the court, and upon the request of the defendant, an additional examiner may be selected by the defendant, if the examination is ordered under section 4245 or 4246.

For the purposes of an examination pursuant to an order under section 4241, 4244, or 4245, the court may commit the person to be examined for a reasonable period, but not to exceed thirty days, and under section 4242, 4243, or 4246, for a reasonable period, but not to exceed forty-five days, to the custody of the Attorney General for placement in a suitable facility. Unless impracticable, the psychiatric or psychological examination shall be conducted in the suitable facility closest to the court. The Director of the facility may apply for a reasonable extension, but not to exceed fifteen days under section 4241, 4244, or 4245, and not to exceed thirty days under section 4242, 4243, or 4246, upon a showing of good cause that the additional time is necessary to observe and evaluate the defendant.

"(c) PSYCHIATRIC OR PSYCHOLOGICAL REPORTS.—A psychiatric or psychological report ordered pursuant to this chapter shall be prepared by the examiner designated to conduct the psychiatric or psychological examination, shall be filed with the court with copies provided to the counsel for the person examined and to the attorney for the government, and shall include—

"(1) the person's history and present symptoms;

"(2) a description of the psychiatric, psychological, and medical tests that were employed and their results;

"(3) the examiner's findings; and

"(4) the examiner's opinions as to diagnosis, prognosis, and—

"(A) if the examination is ordered under section 4241, whether the person is suffering from a mental disease or defeat rendering him mentally incompetent to the extent that he is unable to understand the nature and consequences of the proceedings against him or to assist properly in his defense;

"(B) if the examination is ordered under section 4242, whether, at the time of the commission of the acts constituting the offense, the person, as a result of mental disease or defect, lacked entirely the ability to understand the nature and quality of his acts or the ability to distinguish right from wrong with respect to his acts;

"(C) if the examination is ordered under section 4243 or 4246, whether the person is suffering from a mental disease or defect as a result of which his release would create a substantial risk of bodily injury to another person or serious damage to property of another;

"(D) if the examination is ordered under section 4244 or 4245, whether the person is suffering from a mental disease or defect as a result of which he is in need of custody for care or treatment in a suitable facility.

"(d) HEARING.—At a hearing ordered pursuant to this chapter the person whose mental condition is the subject of the hearing shall be represented by counsel and, if he is financially unable to obtain adequate representation, counsel shall be appointed for him pursuant to section 3006A. The person shall be afforded an opportunity to testify, to present evidence, to subpena witnesses on his behalf, and to confront and cross-examine witnesses who appear at the hearing.

"(e) PERIODIC REPORT AND INFORMATION REQUIREMENTS.—(1) The director of the facility in which a person is hospitalized pursuant to—

"(A) section 4241 shall prepare semiannual reports; or

"(B) section 4243, 4244, 4245, or 4246 shall prepare annual reports; concerning the mental condition of the person and containing recommendations concerning the need for his continued hospitalization. The reports shall be submitted to the court that ordered the person's commitment to the facility and copies of the reports shall be submitted to such other persons as the court may direct.

"(2) The director of the facility in which a person is hospitalized pursuant to section 4241, 4243, 4244, 4245, or 4246 shall inform such person of any rehabilitation programs that are available for persons hospitalized in that facility.

"(f) VIDEOTAPE RECORD.—Upon written request of defense counsel, the court may order a videotape record made of the defendant's testimony or interview upon which the periodic report is based pursuant to subsection (e). Such videotape record shall be submitted to the court along with the periodic report.

"(g) ADMISSIBILITY OF A DEFENDANT'S STATEMENT AT TRIAL.—A statement made by the defendant during the course of a psychiatric or psychological examination pursuant to section 4241 or 4242 is not admissible as evidence against the accused on the issue of guilt or punishment in any criminal proceeding, unless the defendant waived his privilege against self-incrimination, but is admissible on the issue whether the defendant suffers from a mental disease or defect.

"(h) HABEAS CORPUS UNIMPAIRED.—Nothing contained in section 4243 or 4246 precludes a person who is committed under either or such sections for establishing by writ of habeas corpus the illegality of his detention.

"(i) DISCHARGE.—Regardless of whether the director of the facility in which a person is hospitalized has filed a certificate pursuant to the provisions of subsection (e) of section 4241, 4243, 4244, 4245, or 4246, counsel for the person or his legal guardian may, at any time during such person's hospitalization, file with the court that ordered the commitment a motion for a hearing to determine whether the person should be discharged from such facility, but no such motion may be filed within one hundred and eighty days of a court determination that the person should continue to be hospitalized. A copy of the motion shall be sent to the director of the facility in which the person is hospitalized and to the attorney for the government.

"(j) AUTHORITY AND RESPONSIBILITY OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL.—The Attorney General—

"(A) may contract with a State, a political subdivision, a locality, or a private agency for the confinement, hospitalization, care, or treatment of, or the provision of services to, a person committed to his custody pursuant to this chapter;

"(B) may apply for the civil commitment, pursuant to State law, of a person committed to his custody pursuant to section 4243 or 4246;

"(C) shall, before placing a person in a facility pursuant to the provisions of section 4241, 4243, 4244, 4245, or 4246, consider the suitability of the facility's rehabilitation programs in meeting the needs of the person; and

"(D) shall consult with the Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services in the general implementation of the provisions of this chapter and in the establishment of standards for facilities used in the implementation of this chapter.

"(k) This chapter does not apply to a prosecution under an Act of Congress applicable exclusively to the District of Columbia or the Uniform Code of Military Justice."

(b) The item relating to chapter 313 in the chapter analysis of Part III of title 18, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"313. Offenders with mental disease or defect."

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

I. INTRODUCTION

The bill amends various provisions of title 18, United States Code, and of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, relating to the procedures to be followed in Federal courts with respect to offenders who are or have been suffering from a mental disease or defect. Among the matters provided for by these amendments are the determination of mental competency to stand trial, the determination of the existence of insanity at the time of the offense, to limit the scope of a separate insanity defense, and the post-trial hospitalization of defendants suffering from a mental disease or defect.

II. SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

Section 1 states the affirmative defense of insanity under Federal statute in subsection (a) ". . . the defendant, as a result of mental disease or defect, lacked entirely—(1) the ability to understand the nature and quality of his acts; or (2) the ability to distinguish right from wrong with respect to his acts". The bill further states that this is the sole and exclusive test for insanity by providing, "mental disease or defect does not otherwise constitute a defense. In section (b) the bill establishes that the defendant has the burden of proving the insanity defense by "clear and convincing" evidence. This standard is greater than a preponderance of the evidence but less than beyond a reasonable doubt.

Section 2 of the bill amends Rule 12.2 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure to conform with chapter 313 of title 18 as amended by this bill.

Section 3 provides a comprehensive amendment of current chapter 313 of chapter 18, United States Code. Proposed 18 U.S.C. 4241 deals with the determination of mental competency to stand trial; 18 U.S.C. 4242 relates to the determination of the existence of insanity at the time of the offense; 18 U.S.C. 4243 provides for the hospitalization of a person found not guilty only by reason of insanity; 18 U.S.C. 4244 deals with the hospitalization of a convicted person who is suffering from a mental disease or defect; 18 U.S.C. 4245 covers the hospitalization of an imprisoned person who suffers from a mental disease or defect; 18 U.S.C. 4246 deals with the situation of such a person who is scheduled to be released; and 18 U.S.C. 4247 contains general provisions for chapter 313. These sections are discussed below:

18 U.S.C. 4241, Determination of Mental Competency to Stand Trial, contains six subsections which deal exclusively with the determination of the mental competency of the defendant to stand trial or to enter a plea. Subsection (a) permits either the defendant or the government to move for a hearing to determine the defendant's mental competency, and requires the court to order a hearing if there is resonable cause to believe that a mental disease or defect renders the defendant unable to understand the proceedings or to assist in his defense. Subsection (b) permits the court to order a psychiatric or psychological examination of the defendant prior to hearing. Subsection (c) requires that the hearing be conducted pursuant to the provisions of section 4247(d). Subsection (d) provides that a defendant found by a preponderance of the evidence to be mentally incompetent shall be hospitalized for treatment in a suitable facility for a reasonable period of time to determine whether there is a substantial probability that he will attain the capacity to permit the trail to proceed. If the defendant appears unlikely to improve sufficiently, he is to be treated in accordance with the provisions of section 4246. Subsection (e) provides for the discharge from the hospital of a defendant who has recovered sufficiently to stand trial. Subsection (f) specifies that a court finding of competency to stand trial shall not prejudice the defendant in raising the issue of his insanity as a defense to the crime charged and shall not be admissible as evidence at trial. (See S. Rept. No. 97-307, pp. 1191-1197.)

18 U.S.C. 4242, Determination of the Existence of Insanity at the Time of the Offense, provides for an examination of a defendant who intends to rely on such a defense and sets forth the types of verdict to be rendered in such cases.

Subsection (a) provides for the psychiatric or psychological examination of a defendant who files a notice of intent to rely on the defense set forth in Section 1 of the bill. Subsection (b) specifies that in a case involving such a defense the trier of fact is to return a verdict of guilty, or not guilty only by reason of insanity.

18 U.S.C. 4243, Hospitalization of a Person Found not Guilty Only by Reason of Insanity, sets out the procedure to be followed when a person is found not guilty only by reason of insanity at the time of the offense. Subsection (a) requires that such a person be committed to a suitable facility until he is eligible for release pursuant to subsection (e). Subsection (b) requires that the person undergo a psychiatric of psychological study, while subsection (c) mandates a hearing on his present mental condition within 40 days following the verdict. Subsection (d) provides that in such hearing, the person found not guilty only by reason of insanity has the burden of proving by clear and convincing evidence that his release would not create a substantial risk of bodily injury to another person or serious damage to property of another. Subsection (e) provides that if, after hearing, the person fails to prove that his release would not create a substantial risk of bodily injury to another person or serious damage to the property of another person due to present mental disease or defect, he shall be committed to the custody of the Attorney General for treatment, preferably in a State facility. Subsection (f) provides for the absolute or conditional release of such a person pursuant to a medical certification and a court finding that such release will no longer create a substantial risk to the person or property of others. Subsection (g) permits revocation of a conditional release order if such a risk is created anew by the person's failure to comply with the conditions of release.

18 U.S.C. 4244, Hospitalization of a Convicted Person Suffering from Mental Disease or Defect, sets forth procedures to be followed when there is reasonable cause to believe that a recently-convicted defendant may be suffering from a mental disease or defect and in need of care or treatment in a suitable facility. Subsection (a) permits the court, shortly after a guilty verdict and before sentencing, on motion of the defendant or the government or on its own motion, to order a hearing on the defendant's present mental condition if there is reasonable cause to believe he is suffering from a mental disease or defect for the treatment of which he is in need of custody for care or treatment in a suitable facility. Under subsection (b), the court may order a psychiatric or psychological examination of the defendant. If, after a hearing provided for by subsection (c), the court determines by a preponderance of the evidence pursuant to subsection (d) that the standard set forth in subsection (a) has been met, the defendant is to be committed to the custody of the Attorney General for hospitalization in a suitable facility in lieu of being imprisoned. Subsection (e) permits the discharge and final sentencing of a hospitalized defendant when the director of the facility certifies that the defendant is no longer in need of custody for care and treatment. (See S. Rept. No. 97-307, pp. 1204-1206.)

18 U.S.C. 4245, Hospitalization of an Imprisoned Person Suffering from Mental Disease or Defect, deals with the hospitalization of an imprisoned person who is suffering from a mental disease or defect for which he is in need of custody for care and treatment, if the person objects to being hospitalized. Unlike current Federal law, subsection (a) provides that, when a defendant who is imprisoned objects to being transferred to a suitable facility for care and treatment of a mental disease or defect, the court shall, on the government's motion, order a hearing on the defendant's present mental condition if there is reasonable cause to believe that the defendant may be suffering from a mental disease or defect for the treatment of which he is in need of custody for care and treatment in a suitable facility. Subsections (b) and (c), respectively, provide for the psychiatric or psychological examination of the defendant, and for the conduct of the hearing. Subsection (d) provides that a defendant who is found to be suffering from a mental disease or defect and in need of custody for care and treatment shall be hospitalized in a suitable facility until he is no longer in such need, or until his prison sentence expires. Subsection (e) provides for the defendant's discharge from the hospital and return to prison upon the certification by the director of the facility that he is no longer in need of custody for care and treatment. (See S. Rept. No. 97-307, pp. 1206-1208.)

18 U.S.C. 4246, Hospitalization of a Person Due for Release but Suffering from Mental Disease or Defect, covers those circumstances where State authorities will not institute civil commitment proceedings against a hospitalized defendant whose Federal sentence is about to expire, who is mentally incompetent to stand trial, or against whom all criminal charges have been dropped solely for reasons related to his mental condition, and who is presently mentally ill. Subsection (a) requires the court to order a hearing if the director of the facility in which the person is hospitalized certifies that he is presently suffering from a mental disease or defect as a result of which his release would create a substantial risk of bodily injury to another person or serious damage to property of another, and that suitable arrangements for State custody and care of the person are not available. Subsections (b) and (c), respectively, provide for the psychiatric or psychological examination of the person and for the conduct of the hearing. Subsection (d) provides that if the facts certified are found by the court by a preponderance of the evidence, the person is to be committed to the custody of the Attorney General for treatment, preferably in a State facility. Subsection (e) provides for the absolute or conditional release of such a person pursuant to a medical certification and a court finding that such release will no longer create a substantial risk to the person or property of others. Subsection (f) permits revocation of a conditional release order if such a risk is created anew by the person's failure to comply with the conditions of release. Subsection (g) deals with mentally ill persons who have been hospitalized and against whom all charges have been dismissed for reasons not related to their mental condition. If the director of the hospital certifies that the release of such a person would create a substantial risk of bodily injury to another person or serious damage to property of another, the Attorney General is required to release the person to appropriate State officials for the institution of State civil commitment proceedings. If the appropriate State will not assume responsibility, and so informs the Attorney General, the person must be released. (See S. Rept. No. 97-307, pp. 1209-1212.)

18 U.S.C. 4247, General Provisions for Chapter 313, contains a definition of terms used in chapter 313, as well as other provisions generally applicable to sections 4241-4246. Subsection (a) defines the terms "rehabilitation program" and "suitable facility." Subsections (b) and (c), respectively, set forth requirements for court-ordered psychiatric or psychological examinations and reports. Subsection (d) enumerates the rights a person has at a hearing to determine his mental condition. Subsection (e) pertains to reports by mental facilities, and contains a requirement that a hospitalized person be informed of the availability of rehabilitation programs. Subsection (f) permits the court to order and examine a videotape record of a defendant's testimony or interview which forms a basis of a periodic report of his mental condition. Subsection (g) concerns the admissibility in evidence of statements made by a defendant during the course of a psychiatric or psychological examination. Subsections (h) and (i), respectively, preserve the availability of the writ of habeas corpus, and permit a hospitalized person to move for a hearing to determine whether he should be released. Subsection (j) sets forth the authority and responsibility of the Attorney General under chapter 313. Subsection (k) provides that chapter 313 does not apply to a prosecution under an Act of Congress applicable exclusively to the District of Columbia or the Uniform Code of Military Justice. (See S. Rept. No. 97-307, pp. 1212-1213.)

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, the bill we introduce today to delimit the insanity defense in Federal criminal cases merits prompt attention. Although late in the session, this Congress can, by acting expeditiously to enact this legislation, not only improve the Federal criminal justice system but can do much to restore the public's respect for law and our system of government.

I commend the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary for his leadership on this issue. On June 22, 1982, the morning after John W. Hinckley, Jr., was acquitted, the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. THURMOND) focused our attention on the challenge presented by that verdict and the public outrage it engendered. I joined with him on the Senate floor to speak out against current Federal law which allows potential for such abuse in the Federal criminal justice system, and I introduced legislation on that day to define the proper boundaries of the insanity defense and to place upon a Federal defendant seeking to avoid criminal responsibility for his actions the burden of proving by clear and convincing evidence the affirmative defense of insanity.

The chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary was urging prompt hearings on proposals to reform the law of insanity and I was honored to have chaired a series of expedited hearings before the Subcommittee on Criminal Law, with the cooperation and support of the Senator from Maryland (Mr. MATHIAS). Thereafter I was pleased to participate in an additional set of hearings on these issues before the Committee on the Judiciary itself. Throughout the 12 weeks that have intervened, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary and I have consulted and met with our colleagues, and others, in a conserted effort to fashion a legislative response to the problems we had noted in the Federal criminal justice system's treatment of the defense of insanity.

I am gratified to be able to lend my assistance to this effort and that our final product incorporates my sense that the fundamental change we must enact is to shift to the defendant the burden of proof. I do disagree with the statement of the defense included in the bill, however. After numerous hearings, much thought and discussion, I suggest we modify the prevailing test with part of a suggestion made by Prof. Alan Stone of the Harvard Law School. I urge that the law should require that the defendant be required to prove that at the time of the conduct charged "as a result of severe mental disease or defect he lacked substantive capacity either to appreciate the wrongfulness of his conduct or to conform his conduct to the requirements of the law." In this way, we can tighten down the test of the American Law Institute's Model Penal Code.

After another controversial acquittal almost 140 years ago in the famous case of Daniel M'Naghten, Lord Chief Justice Tindal responded to the questions propounded by the House of Lords by suggesting:

> (J)urors ought to be told in all cases that every man is to be presumed to be sane, and to possess a sufficient degree of reason to be responsible for his crimes, until the contrary be proved to their satisfaction; and that to establish a defence on the ground of insanity, It must be clearly proved that, at the time of the committing of the act, the party accused was labouring under such a defect of reason, from disease of the mind, as not to know the nature and quality of the act he was doing; or, if he did know it, that he did not know he was doing what was wrong.

Daniel M'Naghten's case, 8 Eng. Rep. 718, 722 (1834) (emphasis added).

By establishing insanity as an affirmative defense excusing the defendant of criminal responsibility, we can constitutionally place upon the defendant the burden not only of going forward but of persuasion. Although the federal courts have since the 1895 decision of Justice Harlan in Davis v.

United States, 160 U.S. 469 (1895), imposed upon the Government the burden of proof once the issue of the defendant's sanity is raised, they have done so not as a matter of constitutional law, but as a supervisory rule applicable only in the Federal courts. This is apparent from two subsequent Supreme Court decisions upholding State law from constitutional attack.

In 1952, the Supreme Court upheld an Oregon statute that not only placed the burden of proving his insanity defense on the defendant but required the defendant to provide his insanity beyond a reasonable doubt, a much more exacting standard than the one we propose. Leland v. Oregon, 343 U.S. 790 (1952). Notwithstanding the doubts entertained by commentators, this case has never been overruled. Cf. Rivera v. Delaware, 429 U.S. 877 (1979) (dismissal of case in which appeallant challenged continuing validity of Leland against Oregon for not raising substantial Federal question).

More recently, in 1977 the Supreme Court held in Patterson v. New York, 432 U.S. 197 (1977), that New York laws placing the burden on the defendant to establish the analogous affirmative defense of extreme emotional disturbance in order to reduce a crime from murder to manslaughter did not offend the Constitution's guarantee of due process. Justice White, writing for the majority, expressly declined to adopt "as a constitutional imperative, operative countrywide, that a State must disprove beyond a reasonable doubt every fact constituting any and all affirmative defenses related to the culpability of an accused." 432 U.S. at 210.

I suggest that the time has come for Congress to change Federal law and legislatively allocate the burden of proof on the insanity defense to the defendant. The Oregon and New York cases to which I referred lend support to this approach as do the statutes of approximately half the States. See Note, Constitutional Limitations on Allocating the Burden of Proof of Insanity to the Defendant in Murder Cases, 56 B.U.L. Rev. 499, 503-505 (1976).

This legislation goes on to require the defendant to establish his affirmative defense of insanity by clear and convincing evidence. I submit that the prosecution in a criminal case is entitled to proceed as if the traditional rules governing the inference of intent from conduct and the inference that a person ordinarily intends the natural and probable consequences of his actions apply. As Chief Justice Burger observed:

> The function of the standard of proof, as that concept is embodied in the Due Process Clause and in the realm of factfinding, is to "instruct the fact finder concerning the degree of confidence our society thinks he should have in the correctness of factual conclusions for a particular type of adjudication." In re Winship, 397 U.S. 358, 370 (1970) (Harlan, J., concurring). The standard serves to allocate the risk of error between the litigants and to indicate the relative importance attached to the ultimate decision.

Addington v. Texas, slip op. 4 (U.S. April 30, 1979). We believe it is appropriate to require the defendant to prove in an after-the-fact presentation of such an abstract and obtuse defense as insanity that a high probability exists that he was insane at the time of his conduct in order for him to escape responsibility for his crime. Accordingly, we would place on the defendant the burden of meeting a standard of proof by "clear and convincing evidence." This standard is the middle ground between the traditional standard of proof "by a preponderance" used in civil cases and the more exacting standard of proof "beyond a reasonable doubt," which the prosecution must meet in criminal cases.

In the course of our hearings we also focused on the need for Federal authority to fulfill the Federal Government's responsibility to the public in the wake of an acquittal by reason of insanity. The current absence of Federal commitment authority makes it possible for a Federal defendant acquitted of a violent crime on account of insanity to walk out of the courtroom and threaten the public safety, again. The Department of Justice informs me that this is more than a theoretical possibility and that in 1981 a Federal defendant acquitted of murder by reason of insanity escaped not only criminal punishment but civil commitment, as well. By providing Federal commitment authority we remedy a serious failing of our Federal criminal justice system.

Our chief concern in this regard is that we insure a long-term continuation of court jurisdiction over the Federal defendant acquitted by reason of insanity in order to insure his treatment, incapacitation while a threat to society beyond the reach of the criminal laws, and his carefully monitored and staged reintegration into society under the necessary medical care and treatment.

I suggest that post-acquittal authority is most readily justifiable constitutionally when the jury returns a special verdict of not guilty by reason of insanity after trial in which defendant bore the burden of proof on this issue. Such a finding can then serve post-trial to justify the inference that the defendant continues to suffer from a mental disability requiring care and, most importantly, following acquittal for a violent crime, when he may continue to present a threat to the safety of others beyond the reach of the criminal law. In this setting the Federal defendant excused from criminal responsibility on the basis of insanity can be required to submit to examination and conditions designed to control his violent behavior.

The legislation we propose today includes a new section 4243 that will protect the public from dangerous Federal defendants acquitted only by reason of insanity by establishing procedures to insure their commitment to care and treatment so long as they continue to create a substantial risk to the community.

Finally, I wish to emphasize a final point of concern to me—the influence of the psychiatric testimony that has come to dominate insanity cases. The reallocation of the burden of proof and exacting standard of proof we recommend will go a long way toward remedying the current problem in Federal law governing the insanity defense because a defendant will no longer be able to escape just punishment by creating confusion or concocting a conflict between teams of expert witnesses. It is precisely because the question of legal insanity is not a scientific or a clinical conclusion that it is propounded to the jury. For this reason, it must be more clearly enunciated as an issue for the jury and reserved to the jury.

I encourage our Federal judges to make full use of Federal Rules of Evidence 701 and 702 to confine both expert and other opinion testimony to matters helpful to the jury and to utilize Federal Rule of Evidence 403 to exclude evidence that is confusing, cummulative or a source of undue delay. The role of expert and opinion testimony at trial must be better controlled.

To a great extent, the various modern reformulations of the insanity defense are each attempts to confine medical testimony while preserving to the jury its province as final arbiter. From Durham to McDonald to Washington to Brawner to Hinckley even in this, one of the leading Federal circuits, the courts have not been successful in restraining the influence of psychiatric speculation. I am hopeful that our statutory definition of insanity, the first in our 200-year history, will go a long way toward limiting the role of the batteries of expert witnesses that have come to dominate insanity trials and have led to the perception that it is a rich man's defense.

This legislation presents us with a challenge to correct several current failings of our criminal laws. It is most unfortunate that it takes the wounding of a President and the acquittal of his attacker in a verdict that the overwhelming majority of Americans viewed as unjust, to present this opportunity for action. We should not accentuate the tragedy by failing to seize this historic moment.

I was honored to appear before the House Committee on Criminal Justice on July 21 as it began its hearings on these matters. Those hearings were concluded last week and their distinguished chairman (Mr. CONYERS) has scheduled a markup on insanity defense legislation for next week. I am encouraged to note that the subcommittee chairman has himself introduced a bill, H.R. 6783, that includes each of the components of the joint legislation we introduce this morning. I, therefore, have every confidence that prompt Senate action will be mirrored in the other body and suggest that this is a matter on which good faith, bipartisan legislative efforts can succeed in the enactment of much needed changes in the Federal criminal justice system. The public deserves no less than our conscientious attention to this important legislation.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent that the record remain open for the purpose of adding further original cosponsors until the close of business today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WARNER). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, will the distinguished Senator from South Carolina add me as a cosponsor to the bill he is introducing this morning?

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to add the distinguished Senator from Florida as a cosponsor of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I send a bill to the desk and ask unanimous consent that it be read twice after which I shall object to the further consideration of the bill and ask that it be placed directly on the calendar.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unanimous-consent request is pending.

The minority leader is recognized.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I call attention to the fact that bills are not supposed to be introduced until the period for morning business.

So for that reason I could object to the introduction of the bill at this point or even during this calendar day. I will not do that.

I will not object to the first and second readings of the measure if I may have the same privilege accorded on behalf of two bills which I want to introduce on behalf of two other Senators, one by Mr. KENNEDY which deals with funding for public works infrastructure employment, and one which is by Mr. METZENBAUM which deals with extended supplemental unemployment benefits.

So, if we can work out an arrangement whereby both the measure which Mr. THURMOND and the measures which I have referred to can be given first and second readings and objected to and go on the calendar on the next legislative date or if he wishes to ask unanimous consent that the measures be put directly on the calendar, I would have no objection with that provided the same courtesy could be shown in regard to the measures I have referred to.

Could we work the thing out along that line?

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I understand the majority leader wanted to be present and maybe we should have a quick quorum to give him time to get here.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending request will be withheld until such time as we resolve the matter, and I believe the majority leader will be here momentarily.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I will be pleased to withhold that request until after this matter is settled then.

Mr. President, I shall suggest the absence of a quorum to give the majority leader time to get here.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I wonder if the distinguished Senator from South Carolina would defer on his request for the suggestion of the absence of a quorum also so that we might proceed while we await the majority leader's arrival.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The parliamentary situation is as follows:

There are pending unanimous-consent requests to ask that those not be passed upon until such time as the majority leader arrives. Also under the previous order there is a 15-minute allocation of time to the Senator from Florida. The Chair understands that the Senator from Florida has deferred the order of priority to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR SPECTER

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unless there is objection, the Senator from Pennsylvania may proceed with his special order until such time as the arrival of the majority leader.

Mr. SPECTER. I thank you, Mr. President.

THE MIDDLE EAST

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, observations and discussions during a 3-day visit to Lebanon and Israel on behalf of the Foreign Operations Subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee suggest that prospects are good for peace in the Middle East and U.S. political leadership is more important than financial assistance.

Some conclusions, although they are preliminary, on some key issues are:

First, President Reagan and Prime Minister Begin should meet at the earliest practical moment—in any event no later than November when Mr. Begin has plans to be in Los Angeles—to reestablish their personal diplomacy which could bridge some apparent but unreal differences and set the stage for further negotiations on the positive aspects of Mr. Reagan's proposals and some valid issues raised by Mr. Begin's objections.

Second, there is significant support for President Reagan's proposal in Israel, but additional attention must be given by the United States to legitimate Israeli security concerns, and appropriate assurances must be given that Jerusalem will not be divided and that there will not be a new, separate Palestinian State.

Third, the United States should not appropriate further aid for Lebanon until a comprehensive plan is formulated, and we see the precise participation by others in the financial community including the Arab nations, the European Community and, most importantly, what the Lebanese Government plans to do for itself.

Fourth, the United States should assist Lebanon's President-elect Bashir Gemayel in achieving national unity in Lebanon between the Christian and Moslem factions including our closely monitoring the discussions on an Israeli-Lebanese peace treaty to strike the proper balance between leaving Mr. Gemayel sufficient time for unifying Lebanon and not losing the opportunity for that important treaty.

Mr. James Bond, staff director of the Foreign Operations Subcommittee of the Senate Appropriations Committee, Paul Michel, Esq., of my staff and I arrived in Beirut in the afternoon on Friday, September 10, on the last helicopter flight provided from Cyprus a few hours after the last of the U.S. Marines had left Lebanon. Before our flight from Ben Gurion Airport on Monday, September 13, we had visited Beirut—both East and West—driven down the coastal highway to Tel Aviv with brief stops in Damur, Sidon, and Tyre and met with:

In Lebanon: President-elect Bashir Gemayel; President Ilyas Sarkis; Foreign Minister Fouad Butros; and Dr. Muhammad Atallah, President, Council of Development and Reconstruction.

In Israel: Prime Minister Menachem Begin; Labor Party leader Shimon Peres; Yehuda Ben-Meir, Deputy Foreign Minister; and Hanon Baron, Deputy Director General, Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

Prior to these meetings we were briefed and received excellent assistance from Ambassadors and staff:

Lebanon Embassy briefings by: Chargé d'Affaires Robert Barrett; Deputy Chief of Mission Robert Pugh; Political Section Chief Ryan Crocker; Defense Attaché Col. Winchell Craig; Habib Mission Representative Jock Covey; Control Officer Douglas Greene; AID Director William McIntyre; and Economic/Commercial Section Chief Hunt Janin.

In Cyprus, Ambassador Dillon.

Israel Embassy briefings by: Ambassador Samuel Lewis.

On the day before yesterday, I had the opportunity to meet with Prime Minister Begin for more than an hour. After observing the intensity of Mr. Begin's feelings and noting the escalating rhetoric in the international media, I believe President Reagan and Prime Minister Begin should meet face-to-face. Like the nations they lead, these men have been allies and good friends. There is merit in some of the President's proposal; there is merit in some of the Prime Minister's objections. But if the public argument continues at long distance, the alliance may continue to deteriorate.

The new issue of Time magazine pictures a stern Menachem Begin with a caption "Begin Digs In—A Defiant No To Reagan's Peace Plan". It describes the Prime Minister as being in a rage. Sitting with Mr. Begin for more than an hour on Sunday evening, I found him to be reasoned and calm, but quite firm. His attitude reflected the special kind of hurt, rather than anger, which arises from a relationship between friends.

While it is clear that Mr. Begin intends to stand by his principles, it was obvious to me that he has been deeply saddened by the controversy with his good friend, Ronald Reagan. It is well known that these men are on a first name basis with the President calling Mr. Begin "Menachem" and insisting that the Prime Minister call him "Ron." An unusual, special and friendly relationship has developed between these leaders, as between the nations they lead.

It is no secret that Mr. Begin was offended by Mr. Reagan's reference to the Israeli action in Lebanon as a holocaust. The word holocaust has an historic meaning for Mr. Begin. During the middle of our conversation, Mr. Begin left the room to bring in a newly acquired book with pictures of the real Holocaust. For several minutes he turned page after page pointing to the faces of children, women and the elderly who were led to the gas chambers by the Nazis.

It is also no secret that Mr. Begin deeply resented the advance notice given to King Hussein of Jordan. He was also offended by the President's refusal to delay his September 1 speech which came only 1 day after Mr. Begin was notified.

In our conversation, Mr. Begin's major point of emphasis, and there were many points of emphasis, was that Israel would not yield to threats or intimidation. I responded that I was sure that President Reagan has not intended to threaten or intimidate, but had outlined a position to guide negotiations.

As I see it, there are major misunderstandings which could be resolved or, at least, clarified by personal diplomacy between these two men of good will. When the President calls for the Arabs in Jerusalem to vote in a West Bank election, Prime Minister Begin draws an inference of a divided Jerusalem. Similarly, Mr. Begin expressed grave concern abut the implications of Arab control over internal security on the West Bank. The Prime Minister dwelt on the President's assertion that there should not be a single new settlement on the West Bank, which Mr. Begin viewed as an extraordinary restriction.

If a face-to-face meeting does not occur reasonably soon, personal relations are likely to sour. Efforts to apply public pressure by the Reagan administration may prove counterproductive. While Secretary of State Shultz has every right to seek support at the high-level UJA dinner 2 days ago, such action may intensify resistance in Israel.

By the same token, a face-to-face meeting between the President and the Prime Minister would be most useful before the debate within Israel proceeds. Public opinion polls are interpreted to say that a majority of Israelis favor giving up West Bank territories for negotiated guarantees of peace and security. The President's proposal has taken key aspects of the Israel Labor Party's plan. It is likely that there would be greater flexibility with a meeting between President Reagan and Prime Minister Begin at an early date before the debate hardens positions within Israel itself.

When I asked Mr. Begin when he next planned to be in the United States, he stated that he would be in Los Angeles in November for a bond dinner. While he said that he thought it inappropriate to invite himself to the White House, it was clear that the Prime Minister would welcome such an invitation.

It is true that Mr. Begin has said that he would not discuss President Reagan's proposal. However, if the two men sit down to talk it would be inevitable that the discussion would include all aspects and differences of opinion.

Much of President Reagan's proposal would be of great benefit to the State of Israel. Recognition of Israel by the Arab States is long overdue. Mr. Begin has raised legitimate concerns on security issues, and the future of Jerusalem. Little should be lost by a face-to-face meeting, but much could be gained.

The most encouraging aspect of our meeting was Prime Minister Begin's statement that he anticipated a long period of peace in the Middle East. As he did on a number of matters, Mr. Begin spoke in biblical terms of 40 years of peace, adding that it could be as long as 60 years or as short as 10 years. His optimism arose from the demonstrated superiority of Israeli military power, the crushing of the PLO, the solidity of the peace treaty with Egypt and the absence of any other formidable military power in the Arab world. And, he expressly discounted the likelihood of any Soviet military initiative in the area. Succinctly stated, Mr. Begin said Israel would attack no one, and no one would attack Israel.

Mr. Begin restated Israel's intention to leave Lebanon as soon as Syria withdrew its military forces. Discounting Syrian goodwill, Mr. Begin stated that Syria would leave without provoking further fighting because it was well known that Damascus lay within range of Israeli artillery embankments in the mountains of Lebanon overlooking that city.

Mr. Begin reviewed the troubled history of Lebanon, detailing the rival religious factions. He expressed hope and confidence that President-elect Bashir Gemayel would be able to unify the country. When I told him of Mr. Bashir Gemayel's statement to me on the previous day concerning his deep concern that pressure from Israel for an immediate peace treaty with Lebanon would undermine Gemayel's ability to achieve national unity between Christians and Moslems, Mr. Begin said he would like the peace treaty concluded, but would put no pressure on Lebanon. Mr. Begin repeated this statement at a news interview immediately following our meeting.

On the subject of President Reagan's initiative on the Palestinian issue, Prime Minister Begin raised four contentions that Mr. Reagan's proposals were outside the Camp David Accord:

First, there had been no mention of Jerusalem, whereas Mr. Reagan's proposal called for the Arabs in Jerusalem to vote in the West Bank elections which implied a partition of Jerusalem;

Second, internal and external security were lumped together in the Camp David Accord whereas Mr. Reagan's plan gave the Arabs increasing control over internal security;

Third, the Camp David Accord did not ban new settlements on the West Bank after a 3-month moratorium, whereas Mr. Reagan called for not a single new settlement; and Fourth, the Camp David Accord did not stipulate a final disposition of the West Bank whereas Mr. Reagan called for some jurisdiction in Jordan.

Although not mentioned by Mr. Begin, others commented that Mr. Begin probably reacted angrily to Mr. Reagan's initiative because it came virtually simultaneously with Israel's success in ousting the PLO, leaving Mr. Begin no opportunity to savor the victory or enjoy a brief respite before facing a new crisis.

During our discussion, Mr. Begin stressed the danger to Israeli security if the Arabs controlled any of the West Bank. When I asked Mr. Begin about the issue of aid to Israel which was pending before the Foreign Operations Subcommittee, Mr. Begin responded that this was not the time for Israel to make requests and that the subcommittee knew the details of Israel's needs.

Later on Sunday evening, we met with Mr. Shimon Peres, leader of the Labor Party, who forcefully disagreed with Mr. Begin on the security issue. Mr. Peres insisted that there could be a demilitarized zone on the West Bank just as there was under the agreement with Egypt on the Sinai. Pointing out that Mr. Reagan's proposals were fashioned largely from the Labor Party's earlier proposals, Mr. Peres noted that public opinion polls showed that a majority of Israelis favored territorial concessions as a means of solving the West Bank controversy.

Our meeting with President-elect Bashir Gemayel took place at the Presidential residence in Beirut, Lebanon, on a hilltop overlooking East and West Beirut where earlier in the morning we had met with outgoing Lebanese President Ilyas Sarkis. With inauguration on September 24, Mr. Gemayel's attention was concentrated almost exclusively on the vital task of integrating the Moslem factions with his own Christian factions and ending the 8 years of civil war between them. We met Mr. Gemayel only moments before his first and fateful official meeting with Saheb Salem, the most prominent Moslem leader. A young man of only 34 years of age, Mr. Gemayel appeared apprehensive, although very determined and acutely aware of the overriding importance of his being President of all the Lebanese. Trained as a lawyer and educated partly in the United States, he spoke with clarity, directness and candor.

My very first question was what financial assistance he felt he needed to succeed. He brushed aside the issue, saying he was much more concerned with the political assistance from the United States to gain time. He asserted that the Israeli Government was pressuring him for an immediate peace treaty between the two countries even while Israeli forces occupied the southern part of Lebanon and Israeli, Syrian and PLO forces faced each other in the central part. He said signing a peace treaty now would undermine his credibility as an independent leader and his efforts to form a national coalition with Moslem factions. I promised to convey his plea to United States and Israeli officials which I did.

Mr. Gemayel stressed that next to time to build Lebanese unity, he needed U.S. assistance to secure the withdrawal of all foreign forces. Northern Lebanon is effectively under the control of PLO forces in many areas. In central Lebanon and the Bekaa Valley which lies between mountain ranges near the border with Syria, large concentrations of PLO forces are behind Syrian lines which face Israeli lines. In the south, the Israeli Army is in complete control. Mr. Gemayel suggested that while the parties seemed to accept the principle of essentially simultaneous withdrawal, each seemed to expect the other to go first. Agreement on phased withdrawal of portions of each force seeded logical, but was not forthcoming. U.S. diplomatic efforts were needed, he indicated, to advance and assure this process. Ambassador Morris Draper with whom I met before leaving Washington was due the next day in Lebanon to continue the Habib mission and specifically to negotiate simultaneous withdrawal.

Mr. Gemayel did not cite physical damage or destruction as a critical problem. He was concerned with strengthening and upgrading the 23,000-man Lebanese Army to enable it to assume control of parts of Lebanon as foreign forces withdraw. Some U.S. advice or technical assistance might be needed. He did, however, note that general economic assistance to rebuild the country would also be welcome. He said that in addition to the destruction from the fighting this summer, much damage remained unrepaired from the 1975–76 civil war and sporadic fighting since then. Moreover, because no maintenance of the infrastructure had been carried out, equipment was deteriorating, broken or missing. But this need was secondary to the need for political unity. Mr. Gemayel said that "if the Government of Lebanon fails now to reunify and reunite the country," economic progress will not suffice. Without a national consensus among all Lebanese, "everything will be destroyed."

As to economic needs, Mr. Gemayel reported he expected most of the necessary financing from abroad to be provided by Saudi Arabia and Kuwait. But a premature or forced peace treaty with Israel would preclude this assistance.

Eighteen hours after concluding the meeting with Mr. Gemayel and after traveling southward on the coastal highway viewing war damage, we met in Jerusalem with Prime Minister Begin. I conveyed my impressions of Mr. Gemayel and his fear of a treaty ending any chance for national reconciliation. Initially, Mr. Begin indicated irritation that an immediate peace treaty was not forthcoming. The issue was discussed extensively as Mr. Begin and I exchanged views and impressions on Mr. Gemayel and the difficulty of the task he and Lebanon faced. Mr. Begin acknowledged the toll of years of fighting, saying "people are tired in Lebanon; Lebanon is tired of civil war." Mr. Begin saw some hope of Lebanese unification and agreed on its importance to Israel as well as Lebanon.

Mr. Begin, however, stressed that "a peace treaty was very important to Israel now". He said he wondered if the Gemayel was just using Moslem objections as an excuse. But finally Mr. Begin said, regarding the peace treaty, "we are not going to press him on that."

In Lebanon, we also met with outgoing President Sarkis in the large ornate marble-floored office that Mr. Gemayel will soon use. President Sarkis seemed exhausted by the years of fighting and foreign occupation and despondent about the war damage in Beirut and throughout Lebanon. He talked very slowly and softly. He stressed the suffering because of the "dead end in which Lebanon had found itself for the last 8 years." He said "the country had been destroyed materially, physically, and morally." In his view, "no other country has ever been so destroyed."

As to a peace treaty with Israel, he said there should be no treaty now and no separate peace. "There must be an overall peace settlement", he said. A separate peace between Israel and Lebanon would "only push neighboring countries to extremism" and lead to the isolation of Labanon from the Arab world.

President Sarkis called the presence of Palestinian refugees in Lebanon not satisfactory. He said, "we received them not happily." A home for them must be found somewhere else if Lebanon with its multiplicity of Moslem and Christian factions is to achieve political equilibrium. On a more hopeful note, he thought Lebanon could rid itself of foreign forces and revive its economy if the major powers, especially the United States, provided leadership and assistance.

We also went to the Foreign Ministry to meet Minister Fouad Butrus. He stressed the view at Fez that for a normalization of relations between Israel and its neighbors, Soviet involvement in the peace process was essential; otherwise, Syria and such nations as South Yemen, Algeria, and the PLO would not cooperate. When I advised him that this involvement would never come to pass and inquired as to why he thought it was so important to Arab States, he alluded to the power of the Soviet Union to veto resolutions in the U.N. Security Council as well as to dissuade certain Arab States from cooperating. Only a joint effort could succeed in establishing a general and durable peace. As to the possibilities of bilateral peace treaties he predicted that neither Jordan nor Lebanon would feel free to proceed alone.

In Beirut we also met at length with Muhammad Atallah, President, Council of Development and Reconstruction. He estimated the total need to finance full reconstruction of public facilities damaged in the past 8 years at $12 billion. Another $12 billion would be needed for privately owned facilities, he thought. He noted that following earlier fighting, the Arab nations in 1979 had pledged $2 billion although only about $300 million has been transferred to date. But all estimates on needs beyond emergency relief were highly speculative, as he acknowledged. He stressed that relief needs had already been met by and large. No projection of any further relief could be made until comprehensive surveys not yet begun had been completed. Even the use to which prior U.S. assistance had been put could neither be fully documented nor determined. He did say that the United States had given $15 million of a total of $90 million in relief funds.

The primary need from the United States, he said, was not money, but technical advice and managerial capability. The necessary financing could be obtained, he thought, from private sources in Lebanon and around the world, from the European Economic Community, from international institutions such as the World Bank and especially from major Arab oil states.

During several automobile tours of areas in West and East Beirut where fighting took place, we observed localized areas of severe destruction where PLO forces had been encamped. A number of PLO refugee camps had been reduced to ruble. Heavy damage was also in apartment buildings used by PLO. Yet from the more distant view from the American Ambassador's residence above the city, Beirut appeared to be an enormous city with thousands of medium-sized buildings, the overwhelming number of which were not heavily damaged or damaged at all. The visual impression was supported by casualty figures from Lebanese sources for civilians indicating that between 750 and 800 were killed although earlier accounts in the press included figures up to 10,000.

Along the coastal highway leading south from the city, we also saw certain areas of severe destruction, including parts of Sidon, Tyre and numerous small villages along the roadway which was the route taken by Israeli forces as they advanced northward. The hillside city of Damour, which had once had a population of 30,000 people, was totally unpopulated. It had been the scene of PLO-Christian fighting and recently Israeli bombing. Not a single building in this town seemed to have escaped major damage rendering it unusable.

Along much of the highway, small shopkeepers in cities and rural areas seemed to be doing business briskly in well supplied stores. While the roadbed itself was damaged in a number of areas, it was perfectly usable and had been reopened quickly after the fighting ended with rubble, debris and many burned-out vehicles plowed over to the side. The general sense was that at least for most people, normalization was returning rapidly. On the coastal highway, and even more so in Beirut, traffic was so heavy as to indicate substantial economic activity.

I acknowlege my thanks to the distinguished Senator from Florida (Mr. CHILES) for agreeing that I might precede him on this special order. I thank the Chair and I yield the floor.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR CHILES

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Chair now recognizes the Senator from Florida for a period not to exceed 15 minutes.

THE CRIME CONTROL ACT OF 1982

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, for nearly 4 months now, Senator NUNN and I have been coming to the floor of the Senate to speak out about crime. There are several bills that would help fight crime currently pending on the Senate calendar. All we need to do is to take those bills off the calendar, pass them, and work with the House to get them passed into law. There is little time left in this session, but it is hard to imagine any single issue that is more worthy of the Senate's attention than the need to fight crime and to reform our criminal justice system.

Over the past several weeks, I have talked about the many organizations—both those representing law enforcement officials and those representing persons who are concerned about the alarming crime rate—who have come out in support of the anticrime bills now pending on the Senate Calendar. Just this weekend, another voice was added to those who have been speaking out about the need to pass crime fighting legislation. That voice was a particularly important one. It was the voice of the President of the United States. On Saturday, President Reagan made a nationwide address devoted entirely to the need for action on crime. Those of us who have been pushing for action on crime are rightfully encouraged and delighted with what the President has to say. He reaffirmed his support for the bipartisan crime package, S. 2572, which is now pending on the Senate Calendar. And he went on to propose three other changes in our criminal justice system, changes which are strikingly similar to reforms already pending before the Congress. First, he proposed a modification to the so-called exclusionary rule, which would bring the operation of the rule more in line with the purposes the rule is designed to promote. The exclusionary rule was designed to deter illegal police searches and seizures by preventing any evidence seized during an illegal search from being used against someone at trial. In operation however, the rule has been used mechanically, without regard to its underlying purpose. As a result, crucial evidence is often excluded from trial due to a purely technical violation of the search and seizure rules by the police. The President's proposal would specify that good faith searches conducted by the police which nevertheless violated the search and seizure rules would not be subject to the exclusionary rule.

The second of the President's proposals is a reform of the insanity defense. The verdict in the Hinckly trial emphasized once again the need for a fresh look at the insanity defense. The President's proposal focuses on the mental state needed for a specific crime, and specifies that the insanity defense would apply only if the defendant's mental disease prevented him from having the mental state needed to commit the crime. This is, I believe, a good approach. There are other good approaches before the Congress as well. Senator NUNN and I have introduced an insanity defense reform bill, S. 2678, which also limits the reach of the insanity defense. In addition, Senator THURMOND and other members of the Senate Judiciary Committee have come forward with an insanity reform bill that would also tighten the defense. All of these proposals are good ones, and they all underscore the need for prompt congressional action to reform the insanity defense.

The third reform proposed by the President was one which is particularly pleasing to me. It would limit the Federal habeas corpus statute for State prisoners, thereby creating a greater sense of finality for State court criminal judgments. His proposals appear to be similar to those in title 4 of S. 2543, and to those in S. 2838. Both of these habeas reform bills are presently pending on the Senate Calendar. I introduced one of the proposals, and am a cosponsor of the other one. Needless to say, I welcome the President's proposals, and agree with him that they merit prompt action.

Mr. President, in the final analysis, what is really important about the President's speech is that he believes that the issue of crime merits national attention, and prompt congressional action. He has added his voice and his support to our efforts to fight crime and to make our towns and cities safe once again.

Mr. President. I had the opportunity well over a year ago—almost a year and a half ago—along with 13 other Senators to visit the President of the United States to tell him of what we thought was the pressing need for stringent legislation to fight crime and to seek his support. I am glad that he has heeded that urging that we made and that we now see the President speaking out nationally against this issue.

I urge my colleagues to listen to the President's words, and to act promptly on crime legislation. Time is running short, but there is still time enough to act.

I would now like to discuss for a few moments one of the areas where the President has called for reforms: The Federal habeas corpus laws for State prisoners. Today's habeas laws have created an entirely new system of appeals, appeals which do not even begin until after a person has been convicted and has lost every one of this appeals. There are no time limits on filing habeas petitions, and a person is free to file as many petitions as he wishes to file.

Moreover, there is no real requirement that the person who files a habeas petition allege that he is innocent, or that his original trial was patently unfair. Supreme Court Justice Lewis Powell, in a speech last month to the American Bar Association, brought up an example of one individual who had some 30 separate habeas claims pending before the Supreme Court last year.

Today's system, with its uncontrolled availability of habeas corpus petitions to prisoners, has many bad effects upon the criminal justice system. The single most serious effect, in the eyes of many observers, is the burden habeas petitions places on the system. In 1979, the Justice Department made a statistical study of the use of Federal habeas corpus petitions by State prisoners. One part of that study looked into the resources used in connection with habeas petitions. It concluded that Federal habeas review of State court judgments uses enough resources to make its duplicative and inefficient character a matter of concern.

The study outlined some of the costs to the courts. Each habeas petition, and there are about 7,000 filed each year, must be considered and disposed of by the Federal court. Federal magistrates had to write reports and recommendations for some 45 percent of all petitions filed, and had to draft opinions for the Federal court in over 16 percent of all habeas claims. The courts ended up holding a hearing of some kind in 6 percent of all cases, and had to write a memorandum or an opinion in almost 39 percent of all cases. More than 25 percent of all the Federal district court habeas decisions ended up being appealed, and those appeals added to the already overcrowded dockets of the Federal appeals courts. On the appeals court level, the courts had to write opinions in 42 percent of the cases, and heard legal arguments in 25 percent of the cases. The study went on to observe that the State had to bear significant expenses in a large number of habeas cases. In 53 percent of all cases, the State had to put together a set of records concerning the case. In 61 percent of the cases it had to respond to the factual claims raised in the habeas petitions, and 55 percent of the cases, it had to file a brief in response to the habeas petition. In over 8 percent of the cases, the State or Federal Government also picked up the cost of an appointed lawyer for the habeas petitioner.

Mr. President, these numbers add up to a tremendous drain on our judicial system, especilly when you realize that only 3 percent of the petitions filed are ever successful. Judges, magistrates, State attorneys, defense attorneys, and court personnel end up spending countless hours each year going around and around working on these petitions. And all of that time, and all of that money, is taken away from current cases. Judge Henry Friendly commented on the burden the current habeas corpus system places on our court system. He said:

> Indeed, the most serious single evil with today's proliferation of collateral attack is its drain upon the resources of the community—judges, prosecutors, and attorneys appointed to aid the accused, and even of that often overlooked necessity, courtrooms. Today of all times we should be conscious of the falsity of the bland assumption that these are in endless supply. Everyone concerned with the criminal process, whether his interest is with the prosecution, with the defense, or with neither, agrees that our greatest single problem is the long delay in bringing accused persons to trial. The time of judges, prosecutors, and lawyers now devoted to collateral attacks, most of them frivolous, would be much better spent in trying cases. To say we must provide fully for both has a virtuous sound but ignores the finite amount of funds available in the face of competing demands.

The Senate has a chance to do something about the shortcomings in today's habeas corpus system, to streamline the system, and to make sure that our limited judicial resources are put to their best use. We can do that acting on either one of two habeas corpus reform bills now on the Senate Calendar. The first, title 4 of S. 2543, is similar to a proposal Senator THURMOND and I introduced last year. The second, S. 2838, was introduced by Senator THURMOND and is cosponsored by both Senator NUNN and myself. It is similar to the habeas corpus reforms offered by the administration earlier this year. Either bill would go a long way toward reducing the burdens the current habeas corpus system places on our court system. Furthermore, either bill could be called up at any time. But the opportunity to call up either bill is slipping away. With as few as 14 days left in this session, we still have some time to act, but very little. If we fail to act, the Senate will be letting down all of the people from across the country, including the President, who have called for reform of this part of our judicial system. Mr. President, I urge my colleagues not to stumble at this opportunity, and to move forward on this important reform.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

NO TABLING MOTION ON HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 520, OR AMENDMENTS THERETO IN ORDER TODAY

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, not on the matter at hand but on a separate matter, as we have in the past, in order to facilitate debate on the abortion and prayer issues, I hope, I would like to provide that no tabling motion would be in order against the bill or any amendments to the bill today. I make that request at this time.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that no tabling motion be in order to the bill House Joint Resolution 520 or to any amendment thereto during the remainder of this calendar day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER PLACING CERTAIN MEASURES ON THE CALENDAR

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, the distinguished President pro tempore, the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. THURMOND), has two items that he wishes to try to take to the calendar under the provisions of rule XIV. The distinguished minority leader, I believe, has two bills on other subjects that he may wish to do the same thing to.

In order to facilitate that and to avoid the necessity of tracking the provisions of rule XIV in respect to objections to proceeding to the next stage of their legislative development and the requirement for an intervening legislative day, I am agreeable to putting these four items directly on the calendar.

Mr. President, I am agreeable to putting these four items directly on the calendar as if they had been taken through various stages provided by rule XIV, if the minority leader wishes to proceed in that manner.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, for the record, so that my colleagues on this side will clearly understand, there is no way—no way—that anybody on my side of the aisle can prevent the placing of the President's crime package and the bill which Mr. THURMOND introduced on insanity, from going on the calendar. I can object at this point to their being introduced on this legislative day, but the majority leader has the votes and he can adjourn for a half minute and that cures the first objection. Then the offering of the two measures could be made, the request could also be made that there be a first and second reading, and there could be an objection to the second reading, which would mean that the bill could not be placed on the calendar until the Senate adjourned again.

The majority leader would have used his adjournment weapon once on this legislative day. It could not be used again until tomorrow, but he could use it again tomorrow, after which rule XIV could be used as a mechanism to automatically force the two bills on the calendar.

I hope my colleagues understand that about the only thing we can accomplish is to delay, by a couple of days at most, those bills going on the calendar.

I have been a majority leader and I know how the rules work here. I know what the majority leader can do. He has the votes to adjourn. That is not a debatable motion. If he wants to adjourn this Senate, all he has to do is to have the votes and make a motion. A quorum call can occur before then, but that is all. Then there will be a vote on adjournment.

For any who might wonder why I give unanimous consent to the request of the majority leader, there it is in the record. If any Senators want to check with the Parliamentarian to see if I am correct, they can do so.

I have used this procedure many times and I know whereof I speak. Therefore, I have no objection to the placing of the two bills on the calendar that the majority leader has made reference to, provided the same clearance may likewise be given to a bill by Mr. KENNEDY which deals with funding for public works infrastructure employment, and one by Mr. METZENBAUM dealing with extended supplemental unemployment benefits, so that all four bills would go on the calendar.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I thank the minority leader. As usual, his statement of the procedural situation is absolutely correct. I observed with great interest his efforts to proceed in a similar way during his tenure as majority leader. I must confess what little I know about the rules of the Senate I learned from him. I appreciate his statement, and, in fact, I concur in it. I hope there will not be an objection.

Now, Mr. President, I will make the request as to those two bills to be offered by the Senator from South Carolina, but I will condition it on no objection occurring to the request which I believe will be made by the minority leader.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that two bills to be offered by the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. THURMOND), to wit, S. 2902 and S. 2903, one being the insanity defense and the other being the President's crime package, be placed on the calendar; provided further that such action occur if there is no objection to the request about to be made by the minority leader in respect to the two measures to be offered by him on behalf of other Senators.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished majority leader for his customary courtesy.

I ask unanimous consent that a joint resolution by Mr. KENNEDY, dealing with funding for public works infrastructure employment, and a bill by Mr. METZENBAUM and others dealing with extended and supplemental unemployment benefits, go on the calendar on the same day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the joint unanimous-consent request by the majority and minority leaders?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished President pro tempore, I thank the minority leader, and I thank all others for their cooperation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Chair might interject, the distinguished President pro tempore had three unanimous-consent requests pending at the time we suspended awaiting the arrival of the majority leader. It is my understanding that one has now been covered and there are two others which I presume the President pro tempore wishes to restate.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, as I understand the situation now, the bill (S. 2902) I introduced on the insanity defense a few moments ago has now been ordered placed on the calendar?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. THURMOND. And the crime package of three bills has also been placed on the calendar?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. THURMOND. I ask unanimous consent that the distinguished Senator from Florida (Mr. CHILES) be added as a cosponsor of the insanity bill which I have just introduced and which has been ordered put on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, the other request I had was that a copy of the insanity bill that was just introduced and a section-by-section analysis be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD following my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That has been acted upon.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the record remain open for the purpose of adding further original cosponsors until the close of business today.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I have no objection, but I might make the same request with respect to the bills introduced on behalf of Mr. KENNEDY and Mr. METZENBAUM.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, does anybody else on the floor want to be added as a cosponsor?

The distinguished Senator from North Carolina (Mr. HELMS) wishes to be added as a cosponsor and the distinguished Senator from Virginia (Mr. WARNER) desires to be added as a cosponsor to the bill.

Mr. BAKER. Will the Senator add me as a cosponsor, please?

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that these Senators, including the distinguished majority leader (Mr. BAKER), be added as original cosponsors to the insanity defense bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, may I ask has the Senator concluded his business?

Mr. THURMOND. That concludes it, Mr. President, and I want to express my deep appreciation to our able majority leader, and I also thank the able minority leader for his cooperation.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from South Carolina.

Will the majority leader allow me to make a parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President?

Mr. BAKER. Yes, Mr. President.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, just for the record, is it not true that bills and resolutions may be introduced only during the period for routine morning business if there is an objection?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I thank the Chair.

(The measures placed on the calendar are: S. 2902, S. 2903, S. 2904, and S.J. Res. 245. The text of S. 2902 is printed heretofore in today's RECORD. The text of the remaining three measures follow:)

S. 2903—CRIMINAL JUSTICE REFORM ACT OF 1982

(Introduced by Mr. THURMOND, by request.)

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Criminal Justice Reform Act of 1982."

TITLE I—OFFENDERS WITH MENTAL DISEASE OR DEFECT

SEC. 101. This title may be cited as the "Insanity Defense Reform Act of 1982."

SEC. 102. (a) Chapter 313 of title 18, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"CHAPTER 313—OFFENDERS WITH MENTAL DISEASE OR DEFECT

"Sec.
"4241. Determination of Mental Competency to Stand Trial.
"4242. Determination of the Existence of Insanity at the Time of the Offense.
"4243. Hospitalization of a Person Acquitted by Reason of Insanity.
"4244. Hospitalization of a Convicted Person Suffering from Mental Disease or Defect.
"4245. Hospitalization of an Imprisoned Person Suffering from Mental Disease or Defect.
"4246. Hospitalization of a Person Due for Release but Suffering from Mental Disease or Defect.
"4247. General Provisions for Chapter.

"4241. Determination of Mental Competency to Stand Trial

"(a) MOTION TO DETERMINE COMPETENCY OF DEFENDANT.—At any time after the commencement of a prosecution for an offense and prior to the sentencing of the defendant, the defendant or the attorney for the government may file a motion for a hearing to determine the mental competency of the defendant. The court shall grant the motion, or shall order such a hearing on its own motion, if there is reasonable cause to believe that the defendant may presently be suffering from a mental disease or defect rendering him mentally incompetent to the extent that he is unable to understand the nature and consequences of the proceedings against him or to assist in his defense.

"(b) PSYCHIATRIC OR PSYCHOLOGICAL EXAMINATION AND REPORT.—Prior to the date of the hearing, the court may order that a psychiatric or psychological examination of the defendant be conducted, and that a psychiatric or psychological report be filed with the court, pursuant to the provisions of section 4247(b) and (c).

"(c) HEARING.—The hearing shall be conducted pursuant to the provisions of section 4247(d).

"(d) DETERMINATION AND DISPOSITION.—If, after the hearing, the court finds by a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant is presently suffering from a mental disease or defect rendering him mentally incompetent to the extent that he is unable to understand the nature and consequences of the proceedings against him or to assist properly in his defense, the court shall commit the defendant to the custody of the Attorney General. The Attorney General shall hospitalize the defendant for treatment in a suitable facility—

"(1) for such a reasonable period of time, not to exceed four months, as is necessary to determine whether there is a substantial probability that in the foreseeable future he will attain the capacity to permit the trial to proceed; and

"(2) for an additional reasonable period of time until—

"(A) his mental condition is so improved that trial may proceed, if the court finds that there is a substantial probability that within such additional period of time he will attain the capacity to permit the trial to proceed; or

"(B) the pending charges against him are disposed of according to law;

whichever is earlier.

If, at the end of the time period specified, it is determined that the defendant's mental condition has not so improved as to permit the trial to proceed, the defendant is subject to the provisions of section 4246.

"(e) DISCHARGE.—When the director of the facility in which a defendant is hospitalized pursuant to subsection (d) determines that the defendant has recovered to such an extent that he is able to understand the nature and consequences of the proceedings against him and to assist properly in his defense, he shall promptly file a certificate to that effect with the clerk of the court that ordered the commitment. The clerk shall send a copy of the certificate to the defendant's counsel and to the attorney for the government. The court shall hold a hearing, conducted pursuant to the provisions of section 4247(d), to determine the competency of the defendant. If, after the hearing, the court finds by a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant has recovered to such an extent that he is able to understand the nature and consequences of the proceedings against him and to assist properly in his defense, the court shall order his immediate discharge from the facility in which he is hospitalized and shall set the date for trial. Upon discharge, the defendant is subject to the provisions of chapter 207.

"(f) ADMISSIBILITY OF FINDING OF COMPETENCY.—A finding by the court that the defendant is mentally competent to stand trial shall not prejudice the defendant in raising the issue of his insanity as a defense to the offense charged, and shall not be admissible as evidence in a trial for the offense charged. "4242. Determination of the Existence of Insanity at the Time of the Offense.

"(a) INSANITY DEFENSE.—It is a defense to a prosecution under any Federal statute that the defendant, as a result of mental disease or defect, lacked the state of mind required as an element of the offense charged. Mental disease or defect does not otherwise constitute a defense.

"(b) MOTION FOR PRETRIAL PSYCHIATRIC OR PSYCHOLOGICAL EXAMINATION.—Upon the filing of a notice, as provided in Rule 12.2 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, that the defendant intends to rely on the defense set forth in subsection (a), the court, upon motion of the attorney for the government, may order that a psychiatric or psychological examination of the defendant be conducted, and that a psychiatric or psychological report be filed with the court, pursuant to the provisions of section 4247 (b) and (c).

"(c) SPECIAL VERDICT.—If the issue of insanity is raised by notice as provided in Rule 12.2 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure on motion of the defendant or of the attorney for the government, or on the court's own motion, the jury shall be instructed to find, or, in the event of a nonjury trial, the court shall find, the defendant—

"(1) guilty;

"(2) not guilty;

"(3) not guilty only by reason of insanity.

"4243. Hospitalization of a Person Acquitted by Reason of Insanity

"(a) DETERMINATION OF PRESENT MENTAL CONDITION OF ACQUITTED PERSON.—If a person is found not guilty only by reason of insanity at the time of the offense charged, he shall be committed to a suitable facility until such time as he is eligible for release pursuant to subsection (d).

"(b) PSYCHIATRIC OR PSYCHOLOGICAL EXAMINATION AND REPORT.—Prior to the date of the hearing, pursuant to subsection (c), the court shall order that a psychiatric or psychological examination of the defendant be conducted, and that a psychiatric or psychological report be filed with the court, pursuant to the provisions of section 4247 (b) and (c).

"(c) HEARING.—A hearing shall be conducted pursuant to the provisions of section 4247(d) and shall take place not later than forty days following the special verdict.

"(d) DETERMINATION AND DISPOSITION.—If, after the hearing, the court finds by clear and convincing evidence that the acquitted person is presently suffering from a mental disease or defect as a result of which his release would create a substantial risk of bodily injury to another person or serious damage to property of another, the court shall commit the person to the custody of the Attorney General. The existence of clear and convincing evidence that a person's release would create a substantial risk of bodily injury to another person or serious damage to property of another shall be presumed, subject to rebuttal by the acquitted person, where the person has been found not guilty only by reason of insanity of an offense involving bodily injury or serious damage to property of another, or a substantial risk of such injury or damage. The Attorney General shall release the person to the appropriate official of the State in which the person is domiciled or was tried if such State will assume responsibility for his custody, care, and treatment. The Attorney General shall make all reasonable efforts to cause such a State to assume such responsibility. If, notwithstanding such efforts, neither such State will assume such responsibility, the Attorney General shall hospitalize the person for treatment in a suitable facility until—

"(1) such a State will assume such responsibility; or

"(2) the person's mental condition is such that his release, or his conditional release under a prescribed regimen of medical, psychiatric, or psychological care or treatment, would not create a substantial risk of bodily injury to another person or serious damage to property of another;

whichever is earlier. The Attorney General shall continue periodically to exert all reasonable efforts to cause such a State to assume such responsibility for the person's custody, care, and treatment.

"(e) DISCHARGE.—When the director of the facility in which an acquitted person is hospitalized pursuant to subsection (d) determines that the person has recovered from his mental disease or defect to such an extent that his release, or his conditional release under a prescribed regimen of medical, psychiatric, or psychological care or treatment, would no longer create a substantial risk of bodily injury to another person or serious damage to property of another, he shall promptly file a certificate to that effect with the clerk of the court that ordered the commitment. The clerk shall send a copy of the certificate to the person's counsel and to the attorney for the government. The court shall order the discharge of the acquitted person or, on the motion of the attorney for the government or on its own motion, shall hold a hearing, conducted pursuant to the provisions of section 4247(d), to determine whether he should be released. If, after the hearing, the court finds by a preponderance of the evidence that the person has recovered from this mental disease or defect to such an extent that—

"(1) his release would no longer create a substantial risk of bodily injury to another person or serious damage to property of another, the court shall order that he be immediately discharged; or

"(2) his conditional release under a prescribed regimen of medical, psychiatric, or psychological care or treatment would no longer create a substantial risk of bodily injury to another person or serious damage to property of another, the court shall—

"(A) order that he be conditionally discharged under a prescribed regimen of medical, psychiatric, or psychological care or treatment that has been prepared for him, that has been certified to the court as appropriate by the director of the facility in which he is committed, and that has been found by the court to be appropriate; and

"(B) order, as an explicit condition of release, that he comply with the prescribed regimen of medical, psychiatric, or psychological care or treatment.

The court at any time may, after a hearing employing the same criteria, modify or eliminate the regimen of medical, psychiatric, or psychological care or treatment.

"(f) REVOCATION OF CONDITIONAL DISCHARGE.—The director of a medical facility responsible for administering a regimen imposed on an acquitted person conditionally discharged under subsection (e) shall notify the Attorney General and the court having jurisdiction over the person of any failure of the person to comply with the regimen. Upon such notice, or upon other probable cause to believe that the person has failed to comply with the prescribed regimen of medical, psychiatric, or psychological care or treatment, the person may be arrested, and, upon arrest, shall be taken without unnecessary delay before the court having jurisdiction over him. The court shall, after a hearing, determine whether the person should be remanded to a suitable facility on the ground that, in light of his failure to comply with the prescribed regimen of medical, psychiatric, or psychological care or treatment, his continued release would create a substantial risk of bodily injury to another person or serious damage to property of another.

"4244. Hospitalization of a Convicted Person Suffering From Mental Disease or Defect

"(a) MOTION TO DETERMINE PRESENT MENTAL CONDITION OF CONVICTED DEFENDANT.—A defendant found guilty of an offense, or the attorney for the government, may, within ten days after the defendant is found guilty, and prior to the time the defendant is sentenced, file a motion for a hearing on the present mental condition of the defendant if the motion is supported by substantial information indicating that the defendant may presently be suffering from a mental disease or defect for the treatment of which he is in need of custody for care or treatment in a suitable facility. The court shall grant the motion, or at any time prior to the sentencing of the defendant shall order such a hearing on its own motion, if it is of the opinion that there is reasonable cause to believe that the defendant may presently be suffering from a mental disease or defect for the treatment of which he is in need of custody for care or treatment in a suitable facility.

"(b) PSYCHIATRIC OR PSYCHOLOGICAL EXAMINATION AND REPORT.—Prior to the date of the hearing, the court may order that a psychiatric or psychological examination of the defendant be conducted, and that a psychiatric or psychological report be filed with the court, pursuant to the provisions of section 4247 (b) and (c). In addition to the information required to be included in the psychiatric or psychological report pursuant to the provisions of section 4247(c), if the report includes an opinion by the examiners that the defendant is presently suffering from a mental disease or defect but that it is not such as to require his custody for care or treatment in a suitable facility, the report shall also include an opinion by the examiner concerning the sentencing alternatives that could best accord the defendant the kind of treatment he does need.

"(c) HEARING.—The hearing shall be conducted pursuant to the provisions of section 4247(d).

"(d) DETERMINATION AND DISPOSITION.—If, after the hearing, the court finds by a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant is presently suffering from a mental disease or defect and that he should, in lieu of being sentenced to imprisonment, be committed to a suitable facility for care or treatment, the court shall commit the defendant to the custody of the Attorney General. The Attorney General shall hospitalize the defendant for care or treatment in a suitable facility. Such a commitment constitutes a provisional sentence of imprisonment to the maximum term authorized by law for the offense for which the defendant was found guilty.

"(e) DISCHARGE.—When the director of the facility in which the defendant is hospitalized pursuant to subsection (d) determines that the defendant has recovered from his mental disease or defect to such an extent that he is no longer in need of custody for care or treatment in such a facility, he shall promptly file a certificate to that effect with the clerk of the court that ordered the commitment. The clerk shall send a copy of the certificate to the defendant's counsel and to the attorney for the government. If, at the time of the filing of the certificate, the provisional sentence imposed pursuant to subsection (d) has not expired, the court shall proceed finally to sentencing and may modify the provisional sentence.

"4245. Hospitalization of an Imprisoned Person Suffering from Mental Disease or Defect

"(a) MOTION TO DETERMINE PRESENT MENTAL CONDITION OF IMPRISONED DEFENDANT.—If a defendant serving a sentence of imprisonment objects either in writing or through his attorney to being transferred to a suitable facility for care or treatment, an attorney for the government, at the request of the director of the facility in which the defendant is imprisoned, may file a motion with the court for the district in which the facility is located for a hearing on the present mental condition of the defendant. The court shall grant the motion if there is reasonable cause to believe that the defendant may presently be suffering from a mental disease or defect for the treatment of which he is in need of custody for care or treatment in a suitable facility. A motion filed under this subsection shall stay the release of the defendant pending completion of procedures contained in this section.

"(b) PSYCHIATRIC OR PSYCHOLOGICAL EXAMINATION AND REPORT.—Prior to the date of the hearing, the court may order that a psychiatric or psychological examination of the defendant may be conducted, and that a psychiatric or psychological report be filed with the court, pursuant to the provisions of section 4247 (b) and (c).

"(c) HEARING.—The hearing shall be conducted pursuant to the provisions of section 4247(d).

"(d) DETERMINATION AND DISPOSITION.—If, after the hearing, the court finds by a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant is presently suffering from a mental disease or defect for the treatment of which he is in need of custody for care or treatment in a suitable facility, the court shall commit the defendant to the custody of the Attorney General. The Attorney General shall hospitalize the defendant for treatment in a suitable facility until he is no longer in need of such custody for care of treatment or until the expiration of his sentence of imprisonment, whichever occurs earlier.

"(e) DISCHARGE.—When the director of the facility in which the defendant is hospitalized pursuant to subsection (d) determines that the defendant has recovered from his mental disease or defect to such an extent that he is no longer in need of custody for care or treatment in such a facility, he shall promptly file a certificate to that effect with the clerk of the court that ordered the commitment. The clerk shall send a copy of the certificate to the defendant's counsel and to the attorney for the government. If, at the time of the filing of the certificate, the term of imprisonment imposed upon the defendant has not expired, the court shall order that the defendant be reimprisoned until the expiration of this sentence of imprisonment.

"4246. Hospitalization of a person due for release but suffering from mental disease or defect

"(a) INSTITUTION OF PROCEEDING.—If the director of a facility in which a person is hospitalized certifies that a person whose sentence is about to expire, or who has been committed to the custody of the Attorney General pursuant to section 4241(d), or against whom all criminal charges have been dismissed solely for reasons related to the mental condition of the person, is presently suffering from a mental disease or defect as a result of which his release would create a substantial risk of bodily injury to another person or serious damage to property of another, and that suitable arrangements for State custody and care of the person are not available, he shall transmit the certificate to the clerk of the court for the district in which the person is confined. The clerk shall send a copy of the certificate to the person, and to the attorney for the government, and, if the person was committed pursuant to section 4241(d), to the clerk of the court that ordered the commitment. The court shall order a hearing to determine whether the person is presently suffering from a mental disease or defect as a result of which his release would create a substantial risk of bodily injury to another person or serious damage to property of another. A certificate filed under this subsection shall stay the release of the person pending completion of procedures contained in this section.

"(b) PSYCHIATRIC OR PSYCHOLOGICAL EXAMINATION AND REPORT.—Prior to the date of the hearing, the court may order that a psychiatric or psychological examination of the defendant be conducted, and that a psychiatric or psychological report be filed with the court, pursuant to the provisions of section 4247 (b) and (c).

"(c) HEARING.—The hearing shall be conducted pursuant to the provisions of section 4247(d).

"(d) DETERMINATION AND DISPOSITION.—If, after the hearing, the court finds by clear and convincing evidence that the person is presently suffering from a mental disease or defect as a result of which his release would create a substantial risk of bodily injury to another person or serious damage to property of another, the court shall commit the person to the custody of the Attorney General. The Attorney General shall release the person to the appropriate official of the State in which the person is domiciled or was tried if such State will assume responsibility for his custody, care, and treatment. The Attorney General shall make all reasonable efforts to cause such a State to assume such responsibilty. If, notwithstanding such efforts, neither such State will assume such responsibility, the Attorney General shall hospitalize the person for treatment in a suitable facility, until—

"(1) such a State will assume such responsibility; or

"(2) the person's mental condition is such that his release, or his conditional release under a prescribed regimen of medical, psychiatric, or psychological care or treatment would not create a substantial risk of bodily injury to another person or serious damage to property of another;

whichever is earlier. The Attorney General shall continue periodically to exert all reasonable efforts to cause such a State to assume such responsibility for the person's custody, care, and treatment.

"(e) DISCHARGE.—When the director of the facility in which a person is hospitalized pursuant to subsection (d) determines that the person has recovered from his mental disease or defect to such an extent that his release would no longer create a substantial risk of bodily injury to another person or serious damage to property of another, he shall promptly file a certificate to that effect with the clerk of the court that ordered the commitment. The clerk shall send a copy of the certificate to the person's counsel and to the attorney for the government. The court shall order the discharge of the person or, on the motion of the attorney for the government or on its own motion, shall hold a hearing, conducted pursuant to the provisions of section 4247(d), to determine whether he should be released. If, after the hearing, the court finds by a preponderance of the evidence that the person has recovered from his mental disease or defect to such an extent that—

"(1) his release would no longer create a substantial risk of bodily injury to another person or serious damage to property of another, the court shall order that he be immediately discharged; or

"(2) his conditional release under a prescribed regimen of medical, psychiatric, or psychological care or treatment would no longer create a substantial risk of bodily injury to another person or serious damage to property of another, the court shall—

"(A) order that he be conditionally discharged under a prescribed regimen of medical, psychiatric, or psychological care or treatment that has been prepared for him, that has been certified to the court as appropriate by the director of the facility in which he is committed, and that has been found by the court to be appropriate; and

"(B) order, as a explicit condition of release, that he comply with the prescribed regimen of medical, psychiatric, or psychological care or treatment.

The court at any time may, after a hearing employing the same criteria, modify or eliminate the regimen of medical, psychiatric, or psychological care or treatment.

"(f) REVOCATION OF CONDITIONAL DISCHARGE.—The director of a medical facility responsible for administering a regimen imposed on a person conditionally discharged under subsection (e) shall notify the Attorney General and the court having jurisdiction over the person of any failure of the person to comply with the regimen. Upon such notice, or upon other probable cause to believe that the person has failed to comply with the prescribed regimen of medical, psychiatric, or psychological care or treatment, the person may be arrested, and, upon arrest, shall be taken without unnecessary delay before the court having jurisdiction over him. The court shall, after a hearing, determine whether the person should be remanded to a suitable facility on the ground that, in light of his failure to comply with the prescribed regimen of medical, psychiatric, or psychological care or treatment, his continued release would create a substantial risk of bodily injury to another person or serious damage to property of another.

"(g) RELEASE TO STATE OF CERTAIN OTHER PERSONS.—If the director of a facility in which a person is hospitalized pursuant to this subchapter certifies to the Attorney General that a person, against whom all charges have been dismissed for reasons not related to the mental condition of the person, is presently suffering from a mental disease or defect as a result of which his release would create a substantial risk of bodily injury to another person or serious damage to property of another, the Attorney General shall release the person to the appropriate official of the State in which the person is domiciled or was tried for the purpose of institution of State proceedings for civil commitment. If neither such State will assume such responsibility, the Attorney General shall release the person upon receipt of notice from the State that it will not assume such responsibility, but not later than 10 days after certification by the director of the facility.

"4247. General Provisions for Chapter—

"(a) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this chapter—

"(1) 'rehabilitation program' includes—

"(A) basic educational training that will assist the individual in understanding the society to which he will return and that will assist him in understanding the magnitude of his offense and its impact on society;

"(B) vocational training that will assist the individual in contributing to, and in participating in, the society to which he will return;

"(C) drug, alcohol, and other treatment programs that will assist the individual in overcoming his psychological or physical dependence; and

"(D) organized physical sports and recreation programs; and

"(2) 'suitable facility' means a facility that is suitable to provide care or treatment given the nature of the offense and the characteristics of the defendant.

"(b) PSYCHIATRIC OR PSYCHOLOGICAL EXAMINATION.—A psychiatric or psychological examination ordered pursuant to this title shall be conducted by a licensed or certified psychiatrist or clinical psychologist, or, if the court finds it appropriate, by more than one such examiner. Each examiner shall be designated by the court, except that if the examination is ordered under section 4245 or 4246, upon the request of the defendant an additional examiner may be selected by the defendant. For the purposes of an examination pursuant to an order under section 4241, 4244, or 4245, the court may commit the person to be examined for a reasonable period, but not to exceed thirty days, and under section 4242, 4243, or 4246, for a reasonable period, but not to exceed forty-five days, to the custody of the Attorney General for placement in a suitable facility. Unless impracticable, the psychiatric or psychological examination shall be conducted in the suitable facility closest to the court. The director of the facility may apply for a reasonable extension, but not to exceed fifteen days under section 4241, 4244, or 4245, and not to exceed thirty days under section 4242, 4243, or 4246, upon a showing of good cause that the additional time is necessary to observe and evaluate the defendant.

"(c) PSYCHIATRIC OR PSYCHOLOGICAL REPORTS.—A psychiatric or psychological report ordered pursuant to this chapter shall be prepared by the examiner designated to conduct the psychiatric or psychological examination, shall be filed with the court with copies provided to the counsel for the person examined and to the attorney for the government, and shall include—

"(1) the person's history and present symptoms;

"(2) a description of the psychiatric, psychological, and medical tests that were employed and their results;

"(3) the examiner's findings; and

"(4) the examiner's opinions as to diagnosis, prognosis, and—

"(A) if the examination is ordered under section 4241, whether the person is suffering from a mental disease or defect rendering him mentally incompetent to the extent that he is unable to understand the nature and consequences of the proceedings against him or to assist properly in his defense;

"(B) if the examination is ordered under section 4242, whether the person was insane at the time of the offense charged;

"(C) if the examination is ordered under section 4243 or 4246, whether the person is suffering from a mental disease or defect as a result of which his release would create a substantial risk of bodily injury to another person or serious damage to property of another;

"(D) if the examination is ordered under section 4244 or 4245, whether the person is suffering from a mental disease or defect as a result of which he is in need of custody for care or treatment in a suitable facility; or

"(E) if the examination is ordered as a part of a presentence investigation, any recommendation the examiner may have as to how the mental condition of the defendant should affect the sentence.

"(d) HEARING.—At a hearing ordered pursuant to this chapter the person whose mental condition is the subject of the hearing shall be represented by counsel and, if he is financially unable to obtain adequate representation, counsel shall be appointed for him pursuant to section 3006A. The person shall be afforded an opportunity to testify, to present evidence, to subpoena witnesses on his behalf, and to confront and cross-examine witnesses who appear at the hearing.

"(e) PERIODIC REPORT AND INFORMATION REQUIREMENTS.—(1) The director of the facility in which a person is hospitalized pursuant to—

"(A) section 4241 shall prepare semiannual reports; or

"(B) sections 4243, 4244, 4245, or 4246 shall prepare annual reports; concerning the mental condition of the person and containing recommendations concerning the need for his continued hospitalization. The reports shall be submitted to the court that ordered the person's commitment to the facility and copies of the reports shall be submitted to such other persons as the court may direct.

"(2) The director of the facility in which a person is hospitalized pursuant to sections 4241, 4243, 4244, 4245, or 4246 shall inform such person of any rehabilitation programs that are available for persons hospitalized in that facility.

"(f) VIDEOTAPE RECORD.—Upon written request of defense counsel, the court may order a videotape record made of the defendant's testimony or interview upon which the periodic report is based pursuant to subsection (e). Such videotape record shall be submitted to the court along with the periodic report.

"(g) ADMISSIBILITY OF A DEFENDANT'S STATEMENT AT TRIAL.—A statement made by the defendant during the course of a psychiatric or phychological examination pursuant to sections 4241 or 4242 is not admissible as evidence against the accused on the issue of guilt or punishment in any criminal proceeding, unless the defendant waived his privilege against self incrimination, but is admissible on the issue whether the defendant suffers from a mental disease or defect.

"(h) HABEAS CORPUS UNIMPAIRED.—Nothing contained in sections 4243 or 4246 precludes a person who is committed under either of such sections from establishing by writ of habeas corpus the illegality of his detention.

"(i) DISCHARGE.—Regardless of whether the director of the facility in which a person is hospitalized has filed a certificate pursuant to the provisions of subsection (e) of sections 4241, 4243, 4244, 4245, or 4246, counsel for the person or his legal guardian may, at any time during such person's hospitalization, file with the court that ordered the commitment a motion for a hearing to determine whether the person should be discharged from such facility, but no such motion may be filed within one hundred and eighty days of a court determination that the person should continue to be hospitalized. A copy of the motion shall be sent to the director of the facility in which the person is hospitalized and to the attorney for the government.

"(j) AUTHORITY AND RESPONSIBILITY OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL.—The Attorney General—

"(A) may contract with a State, a locality, or a private agency for the confinement, hospitalization, care, or treatment of, or the provision of services to, a person committed to his custody pursuant to this chapter;

"(B) may apply for the civil commitment, pursuant to State law, of a person committed to his custody pursuant to section 4243 or 4246;

"(C) shall, before placing a person in a facility pursuant to the provisions of section 4241, 4243, 4244, 4245, or 4246, consider the suitability of the facility's rehabilitation programs in meeting the needs of the person; and

"(D) shall consult with the Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services in the general implementation of the provisions of this chapter and in the establishment of standards for facilities used in the implementation of this chapter.

"(k) This chapter does not apply to a prosecution under an Act of Congress applicable exclusively to the District of Columbia or the Uniform Code of Military Justice.".

(b) The item relating to chapter 313 in the chapter analysis of Part III of title 18, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"313. Offenders with mental disease or defect.".

SEC. 103. Rule 12.2 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure is amended—

(a) by deleting "crime" in subdivision (a) and inserting in lieu thereof "offense";

(b) by deleting "mental state" in subdivision (b) and inserting in lieu thereof "state of mind";

(c) by deleting "by a psychiatrist designated for this purpose in the order of the court" in subdivision (c) and inserting in lieu thereof "pursuant to 18 U.S.C. 4242"; and

(b) by deleting "mental state" in subdivision (d) and inserting in lieu thereof "state of mind";

SEC. 104. Section 3006A of title 18, United States Code, is amended—

(a) in subsection (a), by deleting "or, (4)" and substituting "(4) whose mental condition is the subject of a hearing pursuant to chapter 313 of this title, or (5)"; and

(b) in subsection (g), by deleting "or section 4245 of title 18".

TITLE II—APPLICATION OF THE EXCLUSIONARY RULE

SEC. 201. This title may be cited as the "Exclusionary Rule Application Act of 1982."

SEC. 202. (a) Chapter 223 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"3505. Application of the Fourth Amendment Exclusionary Rule

"Except as specifically provided by statute, evidence which is obtained as a result of a search or seizure and which is otherwise admissible shall not be excluded in a proceeding in a court of the United States if the search or seizure was undertaken in a reasonable, good faith belief that it was in conformity with the Fourth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. A showing that evidence was obtained pursuant to and within the scope of a warrant constitutes prima facie evidence of such a reasonable good faith belief, unless the warrant was obtained through intentional and material misrepresentation.".

(b) The table of sections of such chapter is amended by adding at the end thereof the following item:

"3505. Application of the Fourth Amendment Exclusionary Rule.".

TITLE III—FEDERAL INTERVENTION IN STATE CRIMINAL PROCEEDINGS

SEC. 301. This title may be cited as the "Federal Intervention Reform Act of 1982."

SEC. 302. Section 2244 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(d) When a person in custody pursuant to the judgment of a State court fails to raise a claim in State proceedings at the time or in the manner required by State rules or procedure, the claim shall not be entertained in an application for a writ of habeas corpus unless actual prejudice resulted to the applicant from the alleged denial of the Federal right asserted and—

"(1) the failure to raise the claim properly or to have it heard in State proceedings was the result of State action in violation of the Constitution or laws of the United States;

"(2) the Federal right asserted was newly recognized by the Supreme Court subsequent to the procedural default and is retroactively applicable; or

"(3) the factual predicate of the claim could not have been discovered through the exercise of reasonable diligence prior to the procedural default.

"(e) A one-year period of limitation shall apply to an application for a writ of habeas corpus by a person in custody pursuant to the judgment of a State court. The limitation period shall run from the latest of the following times:

"(1) the time at which State remedies are exhausted;

"(2) the time at which the impediment to filing an application created by State action in violation of the Constitution or laws of the United States removed, where the applicant was prevented from filing by such State action;

"(3) the time at which the Federal right asserted was initially recognized by the Supreme Court, where the right has been newly recognized by the Court and is retroactively applicable; or

"(4) the time at which the factual predicate of the claim or claims presented could have been discovered through the exercise of reasonable diligence.".

SEC. 303. Section 2253 of title 28, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"§ 2253. Appeal

"In a habeas corpus proceeding or a proceeding under section 2255 of this title before a circuit or district judge, the final order shall be subject to review, on appeal, by the court of appeals for the circuit where the proceeding is had.

"There shall be no right of appeal from such an order in a proceeding to test the validity of a warrant to remove, to another district or place for commitment or trial, a person charged with a criminal offense against the United States, or to test the validity of his detention pending removal proceedings.

"An appeal may not be taken to the court of appeals from the final order in a habeas corpus proceeding where the detention complained of arises out of process issued by a State court, or from the final order in a proceeding under section 2255 of this title, unless a circuit justice or judge issues a certificate of probable cause.".

SEC. 304. Federal Rule of Appellate Procedure 22 is amended to read as follows:

"Rule 22.

"HABEAS CORPUS AND § 2255 PROCEEDINGS

"(a) Application for an Original Writ of Habeas Corpus. An application for a writ of habeas corpus shall be made to the appropriate district court. If application is made to a circuit judge, the application will ordinarily be transferred to the appropriate district court. If an application is made to or transferred to the district court and denied, renewal of the application before a circuit judge is not favored; the proper remedy is by appeal to the court of appeals from the order of the district court denying the writ.

"(b) Necessity of Certificate of Probable Cause for Appeal. In a habeas corpus proceeding in which the detention complained of arises out of process issued by a State court, and in a motion proceeding pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 2255, an appeal by the applicant or movant may not proceed unless a circuit judge issues a certificate of probable cause. If a request for a certificate of probable cause is addressed to the court of appeals, it shall be deemed addressed to the judges thereof and shall be considered by a circuit judge or judges as the court deems appropriate. If no express request for a certificate is filed, the notice of appeal shall be deemed to constitute a request addressed to the judges of the court of appeals. If an appeal is taken by a State or the government or its representative, a certificate of probable cause is not required.".

SEC. 305. Section 2254 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by redesignating subsections "(e)" and "(f)" as subsections "(f)" and "(g)" respectively, and is further amended—

(a) by amending subsection (b) to read as follows:

"(b) An application for a writ of habeas corpus in behalf of a person in custody pursuant to the judgment of a State court shall not be granted unless it appears that the applicant has exhausted the remedies available in the courts of the State, or that there is either an absence of available State corrective process or the existence of circumstances rendering such process ineffective to protect the rights of the applicant. An application may be denied on the merits notwithstanding the failure of the applicant to exhaust the remedies available in the courts of the States.";

(b) by adding a new subsection (d) reading as follows:

"(d) An application for a writ of habeas corpus in behalf of a person in custody pursuant to the judgment of a State court shall not be granted with respect to any claim that has been fully and fairly adjudicated in State proceedings."; and

(c) by redesignating subsection "(d)" as subsection "(e)", and amending it to read as follows:

"(e) In a proceeding instituted by an application for a writ of habeas corpus by a person in custody pursuant to the judgment of a State court, a full and fair determination of a factual issue made in the case by a State court shall be presumed to be correct. The applicant shall have the burden of rebutting this presumption by clear and convincing evidence.".

SEC. 306. Section 2255 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by deleting the second paragraph and the penultimate paragraph thereof, and by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"When a person fails to raise a claim at the time or in the manner required by Federal rules of procedure, the claim shall not be entertained in a motion under this section unless actual prejudice resulted to the movant from the alleged denial of the right asserted and—

"(1) the failure to raise the claim properly, or to have it heard, was the result of governmental action in violation of the Constitution or laws of the United States;

"(2) the right asserted was newly recognized by the Supreme Court subsequent to the procedural default and is retroactively applicable; or

"(3) the factual predicate of the claim could not have been discovered through the exercise of reasonable diligence prior to the procedural default.

"A two-year period of limitation shall apply to a motion under this section. The limitation period shall run from the latest of the following times:

"(1) the time at which the judgment of conviction becomes final;

"(2) the time at which the impediment to making a motion created by governmental action in violation of the Constitution or laws of the United States is removed, where the movant was prevented from making a motion by such governmental action;

"(3) the time at which the rights asserted was initially recognized by the Supreme Court, where the right has been newly recognized by the Court and is retroactively applicable; or

"(4) the time at which the factual predicate of the claim or claims presented could have been discovered through the exercise of reasonable diligence.".

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

TITLE I—INSANITY DEFENSE REFORM

Title I of the bill amends various provisions of title 18, United States Code, and of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, relating to the procedure to be followed in Federal courts with respect to offenders who are or have been suffering from a mental disease or defect. Among the matters provided for by these amendments are the determination of mental competency to stand trial, the determination of the existence of insanity at the time of the offense, a limitation of the scope of a separate insanity defense, and the post-trial hospitalization of defendants suffering from a mental disease or defect.

Section 102 of the bill provides a comprehensive amendment of current chapter 313 of title 18, United States Code. Proposed section 4241 deals with the determination of mental competency to stand trial. Section 4242 relates to the determination of the existence of insanity at the time of an offense, and limits the separate insanity defense to a "mens rea" test of criminal responsibility. Section 4243 provides for the hospitalization of a person acquitted by reason of insanity. Section 4244 deals with the hospitalization of a convicted person who is suffering from a mental disease or defect. Section 4245 covers the hospitalization of an imprisoned person who suffers from a mental disease or defect. Section 4246 deals with the situation of such a person who is scheduled to be released. Section 4247 contains general provisions for chapter 313.

Section 4241, Determination of Mental Competency to Stand Trial, contains five subsections which deal exclusively with the determination of the mental competency of the defendant to stand trial or to enter a plea. Subsection (a) permits either the defendant or the government to move for a hearing to determine the defendant's mental competency, and requires the court to order a hearing if there is reasonable cause to believe that a mental disease or defect renders the defendant unable to understand the proceedings or to assist in his defense. Subsection (b) permits the court to order a psychiatric or psychological examination of the defendant prior to the hearing. Subsection (c) requires that the hearing be conducted pursuant to the provisions of section 4247 (i.e., the defendant shall be represented by counsel, afforded an opportunity to testify, etc.). Subsection (d) provides that a defendant found by a preponderance of the evidence to be mentally incompetent shall be hospitalized for treatment in a suitable facility for a reasonable period of time to determine whether there is a substantial probability that he will attain the capacity to permit the trial to proceed. If the defendant appears unlikely to improve sufficiently, he is to be treated in accordance with the provisions of section 4246. Subsection (e) provides for the discharge from the hospital of a defendant who has recovered sufficiently to stand trial. Subsection (f) specifies that a court finding of competency to stand trial shall not prejudice the defendant in raising the issue of his insanity as a defense to the crime charged, and shall not be admissible as evidence at trial.

Section 4242, Determination of the Existence of Insanity at the Time of the Offense, specifies the extent to which a defendant's mental disease or defect constitutes a defense to prosecution, provides for an examination of a defendant who intends to rely on such a defense, and sets forth the types of verdicts to be rendered in such cases.

Subsection (a) states that it is a defense to prosecution under any federal statute that the defendant, as a result of mental disease or defect, lacked the state of mind required as an element of the offense charged, and specifies that mental disease or defect does not otherwise constitute a defense. By limiting the separate, judicially-developed, insanity defense, this statutory approach to the issue of the criminal responsibility of a person suffering from a mental disease or defect focuses on two critical questions: did the defendant act with the state of mind required for the offense charged and, if he did so act but was suffering from a mental disease or defect, should he be imprisoned, hospitalized, or otherwise treated.

Subsection (b) provides for the psychiatric or psychological examination of a defendant who files a notice of intent to rely on the defense set forth in subsection (a). Subsection (c) specifies that in a case involving such a defense the trier of fact is to return a verdict of guilty, not guilty, or not guilty only by reason of insanity.

Section 4243, Hospitalization of a Person Acquitted by Reason of Insanity, sets out the procedure to be followed when a person is found not guilty solely by reason of insanity at the time of the offense. Subsection (a) requires that such a person be committed to a suitable facility until he is eligible for release pursuant to subsection (d). Subsection (b) requires that the person undergo a psychiatric or psychological study, while subsection (c) mandates a hearing on his present mental condition within forty days following the verdict. Subsection (d) provides that if, after the hearing, the person is found by clear and convincing evidence to be then suffering from a mental disease or defect as a result of which his release would create a substantial risk of bodily injury to another person or serious damage to property of another, he shall be committed to the custody of the Attorney General for treatment, preferably in a state facility. The fact that the person was found not guilty only by reason of insanity of an offense involving bodily injury or serious damage to property, or an offense involving substantial risk of such injury or damage, is to give rise to a rebuttable presumption that the dangerousness element of subsection (d)'s test for commitment is met. If the person is able to rebut or neutralize this presumption, the government will be required to come forward with other facts to meet its burden of clear and convincing evidence of the person's present dangerousness resulting from a mental disease or defect. Subsection (e) provides for the absolute or conditional release of such a person pursuant to a medical certification and a court finding that such release will no longer create a substantial risk to the person or property of others. Subsection (f) permits revocation of a conditional release order if such a risk is created anew by the person's failure to comply with the conditions of release.

Section 4244, Hospitalization of a Convicted Person Suffering From Mental Disease or Defect, sets forth procedures new to Federal law, to be followed when there is reasonable cause to believe that a recently convicted defendant may be suffering from a mental disease or defect and in need of care or treatment in a suitable facility. Subsection (a) permits the court, shortly after a guilty verdict and before sentencing, on motion of the defendant or the government or on its own motion, to order a hearing on the defendant's present mental condition if there is reasonable cause to believe he is suffering from a mental disease or defect for the treatment of which he is in need of custody for care or treatment in a suitable facility. Under subsection (b), the court may order a psychiatric or psychological examination of the defendant. If, after a hearing provided for by subsection (c), the court determines by a preponderance of the evidence pursuant to subsection (d) that the standard set forth in subsection (a) has been met, the defendant is to be committed to the custody of the Attorney General for hospitalization in a suitable facility, in lieu of being imprisoned. Subsection (e) permits the discharge and final sentencing of a hospitalized defendant when the director of the facility certifies that he is no longer in need of custody for care and treatment.

Section 4245, Hospitalization of an Imprisoned Person Suffering from Mental Disease or Defect, deals with the hospitalization of an imprisoned person who is suffering from a mental disease or defect for which he is in need of custody for care or treatment, if the person objects to being hospitalized. Unlike current federal law, subsection (a) provides that, when a defendant who is imprisoned objects to being transferred to a suitable facility for care and treatment of a mental disease or defect, the court shall, on the government's motion, order a hearing on the defendant's present mental condition if there is reasonable cause to believe that the defendant may be suffering from a mental disease or defect for the treatment of which he is in need of custody or care for treatment in a suitable facility. Subsections (b) and (c), respectively, provide for the psychiatric or psychological examination of the defendant, and for the conduct of the hearing. Subsection (d) provides that a defendant who is found by a preponderance of the evidence to be suffering from a mental disease or defect and in need of custody for care and treatment shall be hospitalized in a suitable facility until he is no longer in need of such care or treatment, or until his prison sentence expires. Subsection (e) provides for the defendant's discharge from the hospital and return to prison upon the certification of the director of the facility that he is no longer in need of custody for care and treatment.

Section 4246, Hospitalization of a Person Due for Release but Suffering From Mental Disease or Defect, covers those circumstances where State authorities will not institute civil commitment proceedings against a hospitalized defendant whose federal sentence is about to expire, who is mentally incompetent to stand trial, or against whom all criminal charges have been dropped solely for reasons related to his mental condition, and who is presently mentally ill. Subsection (a) requires the court to order a hearing if the director of the facility in which the person is hospitalized certifies that he is presently suffering from a mental disease or defect as a result of which his release would create a substantial risk of bodily injury to another person or serious damage to property of another, and that suitable arrangements for State custody and care of the person are not available. Subsections (b) and (c), respectively, provide for the psychiatric or psychological examination of the person and for the conduct of the hearing. Subsection (d) provides that if the facts certified are found by the court by clear and convincing evidence, the person is to be committed to the custody of the Attorney General for treatment, preferably in a State facility. Subsection (e) provides for the absolute or conditional release of such a person pursuant to a medical certification and a court finding that such release will no longer create a substantial risk to the person or property of others. Subsection (f) permits revocation of a conditional release order if such a risk is created anew by the person's failure to comply with the conditions of release. Subsection (g) deals with mentally ill persons who have been hospitalized and against whom all charges have been dismissed for reasons not related to their mental condition. If the director of the hospital certifies that the release of such a person would create a substantial risk of bodily injury to another person or serious damage to property of another, the Attorney General is required to release the person to appropriate State officials for the institution of State civil commitment proceedings. If the appropriate State will not assume responsibility, and so informs the Attorney General, the person must be released.

Section 4247, General Provisions for Chapter 313 contains a definition of terms used in chapter 313, as well as other provisions generally applicable to sections 4241-4246. Subsection (a) defines the terms "rehabilitation program" and "suitable facility". Subsections (b) and (c), respectively, set forth requirements for court ordered psychiatric or psychological examinations and reports. Subsection (d) enumerates the rights a person has at a hearing to determine his mental condition. Subsection (e) pertains to reports by mental facilities, and contains a requirement that a hospitalized person be informed of the availability of rehabilitation programs. Subsection (f) permits the court to order and examine a videotape record of a defendant's testimony or interview which forms a basis of a periodic report of his mental condition. Subsection (g) concerns the admissibility in evidence of statements made by a defendant during the course of a psychiatric or psychological examination. Subsections (h) and (i), respectively, preserve the availability of the writ of habeas corpus, and permit a hospitalized person to move for a hearing to determine whether he should be released. Subsection (j) sets forth the authority and responsibility of the Attorney General under chapter 313. Subsection (k) provides that chapter 313 does not apply to a prosecution under an Act of Congress applicable exclusively to the District of Columbia or the Uniform Code of Military Justice.

Section 103 of the bill amends Rule 12.2 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure to conform with chapter 313 of title 18 as amended by section 102.

Section 104 of the bill amends section 3006A of title 18, United States Code, to conform with chapter 313 of title 18 as amended by section 102.

TITLE II—EXCLUSIONARY RULE REFORM

Title II of the bill would add a new section 3505 to title 18 of the United States Code governing the Fourth Amendment exclusionary rule. It would provide that except as specifically provided by statute, evidence obtained as a result of a search or seizure and which is otherwise admissible shall not be excluded in a proceeding in a federal court if the search or seizure was undertaken in a reasonable and good faith belief that it was in conformity with the Fourth Amendment. It would also provide that a showing that the evidence was obtained pursuant to and within the scope of a warrant constitutes prima facie evidence of such a reasonable good faith belief unless the warrant was obtained through intentional and material misrepresentation.

Initially, although the Fourth Amendment secures the right of persons to be free of "unreasonable" searches or seizures it should be noted that there are no constitutional or statutory provisions which specifically set limits on what is meant by an "unreasonable" search or seizure. Instead, the law in this area is an amalgam of cases dealing with a vast range of issues relating to the undertaking of searches and seizures. The crux of the present problem which would be overcome by the new section 3505 is that as courts have continued to develop the law of search and seizure they have continued to apply the exclusionary rule in situations where it could not possibly deter unlawful police conduct, the foremost rationale for the rule.

The new section 3505 deals with this situation by providing that evidence obtained as a result of a search undertaken in reasonable good faith as to its lawfulness shall not be excluded since actions undertaken in reasonable good faith are not susceptable of being deterred. The often highly probative evidence found during a search undertaken by the officers in reasonable good faith would be admitted and the attention of the court in a criminal case would remain focused on the question of the defendant's guilt or innocence, not diverted to a consideration of possible police error in applying the ever evolving law of search and seisure.

Section 3505 would still allow consideration of police conduct but the issue would be whether the actions of the law enforcement officers were undertaken in a reasonable and good faith belief that they were lawful.

Such good faith is clearly shown when an officer makes an arrest in reliance on a statute that is later found to be unconstitutional or relies on a duly authorized search warrant, a judicial mandate to search which he has a sworn duty to carry out. Hence, the section specifically provides that a showing that evidence was obtained pursuant to and in the scope of a warrant constitutes prima facie evidence of such a reasonable good faith belief. However, a search pursuant to a warrant would not constitute such evidence if the warrant were obtained through intentional and material misrepresentation. This standard is derived from Franks v. Delaware, 438 U.S. 154 (1978) where the Court emphasized the presumption of validity with respect to an affidavit offered in support of a warrant but held that "where the defendant makes a substantial preliminary showing that a false statement knowingly and intentionally, or with reckless disregard for the truth, was included by the affiant in the warrant affidavit, and if the allegedly false statement is necessary to the finding of probable cause, the Fourth Amendment requires that a hearing be held at the defendant's request." 438 U.S. at 155–156. If at the hearing the defendant establishes that perjury or reckless disregard for the truth was present, and with the affidavit's false material set aside the remaining material is insufficient to establish probable cause for the warrant's issuance, it must be voided and the fruits of the search excluded.

The section is not, however, limited to searches executed pursuant to a warrant. An officer may in good faith make a reasonable interpretation of a statute which a court determines to be inconsistent with the legislative intent, or may reasonably and in good faith conclude that a particular set of facts and circumstances gives rise to probable cause to conduct one of the types of judicially sanctioned warrantless searches, or that a warrant is not required. The proposed legislation would cover such situations as well.

Although intended primarily to apply in criminal proceedings brought in federal court, the proposal is drafted so that the same reasonable good faith test would apply to the obtaining of evidence offered in all types of proceedings in federal courts such as applications for federal habeas corpus petitions filed by State prisoners and federal civil cases. Indeed these are the types of cases where the deterrent effect of the rule has already been found to be minimal at best and greatly outweighed by the societal cost of excluding the evidence. In Stone v. Powell, 428 U.S. 465 (1976), the Supreme Court held that where a State has provided a full and fair opportunity for litigation of Fourth Amendment claims, a State prisoner may not be granted federal habeas corpus relief on the grounds that evidence obtained by an unlawful search and seizure was introduced at trial.

In United States v. Janis, 428 U.S. 433 (1976), the Court held that the exclusionary rule should not be applied to forbid the use in federal civil proceedings of evidence seized by State officers in good faith reliance on a search warrant that proved to be defective. While the Janis holding (the scope of which would not be affected by section 3505) related specifically to the use in the courts of one sovereign of evidence obtained by law enforcement agents of another sovereign, the lack of any deterrent effect of applying the rule would be analogous in the case of a search by federal officers who were acting in good faith.

Under section 3505 law enforcement officers would still be required to keep abreast of the complex law of search and seizure because the conduct of an officer will have to be informed to be reasonable. The section would not reward ignorance on the part of the police. It simply restrains the rule to its proper boundaries where it will remain as a "judicially created remedy designed to safeguard Fourth Amendment rights generally through its deterrent effect . . ." United States v. Calandra, 414 U.S. 338, 348 (1974). Thus the proposal would not eliminate the exclusionary rule but rather will eliminate the disrespect for the law that its application often engenders in the minds of the police and the public alike. Moreover, when the rule is applied in the case of a trivial violation or mistake by the police as to whether the requirements of the law have been complied with, and results in the acquittal of a criminal guilty of a serious crime or alters the result in a significant civil proceeding, the lack of proportionality of the sanction applied to the officer's mistake is so great that the confidence of the public in our system of justice cannot help but be eroded. In cases of this nature, where the police have reasonably tried to apply the complex law of search and seizure, the rule has a grossly distorting effect on our system of justice where the central purpose is to search for the truth and, in criminal cases, ensure that the guilty are convicted and the innocent are acquitted.

A suggestion that Congress should act to restrict the scope of the exclusionary rule was made over ten years ago by the Chief Justice in his dissent in Bivens v. Six Unknown Named Agents of the Federal Bureau of Narcotics, 403 U.S. 388, 422–424 (1971). Since section 3505 is grounded primarily on the cases decided since that time in which the Supreme Court has emphasized the deterrence of unlawful conduct as the sole or primary purpose of the rule, the section's modification of the rule is constitutionally permissible. Moreover, the substance of section 3505 is very similar to that already adopted by the Fifth Circuit en banc in United States v. Williams, 622 F. 2d 830 (1980), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 1127 (1981) in a decision based on a thorough analysis of relevant Supreme Court cases, and it basically follows the recommendation of the Attorney General's Task Force on Violent Crime which conducted hearings on the issue around the country and received the opinions of distinguished citizens and jurists of all points of view.

TITLE III—FEDERAL INTERVENTION IN STATE CRIMINAL PROCEEDINGS

Title III of the bill would amend various provisions of title 28, United States Code, and a related Rule of Appellate Procedure, concerning the availability of collateral relief in the federal courts of State and federal prisoners. Among the matters addressed by these amendments are the standard of review in habeas corpus proceedings, the effect of procedural defaults on the subsequent availability of collateral relief, the time within which collateral relief may be sought, the requirement of exhaustion of state remedies, and the procedure on appeal in collateral proceedings.

Section 302 of the bill would add two new subsections to section 2244 of title 28, United States Code. Proposed section 2244(d) relates to the effect of a State prisoner's failure to raise a claim properly in State proceedings on the subsequent availability of federal habeas corpus. Proposed subsection (d)(1) of section 2244 sets out a general standard under which such a procedural default would bar access to federal habeas corpus unless it was the result of State action in violation of federal law. The main practical significance of this standard is that attorney error or misjudgement in failing to raise a claim properly would excuse a procedural default if it amounted to constitutionally ineffective assistance of counsel, since in such a case the default would be the result of the State's failure, in violation of the Sixth Amendment, to afford the defendant effective assistance of counsel, See Cuyler v. Sullivan, 446 U.S. 335, 342–45 (1980). But lesser degrees of attorney error or misjudgement would not excuse a default. This would adopt as the uniform rule the approach of the Second Circuit Court of Appeals in the case of Indiviglio v. United States, 612 F.2d 624, 631 (1979), eliminating the great uncertainties that currently exist in this area. Proposed section 2244(d)(2)–(3) further provides for excuse of a procedural default where a claim raised in a habeas corpus proceeding asserts a new, retroactive right subsequently recognized by the Supreme Court, or where the factual predicate of the claim could not have been discovered prior to the default through the exercise of reasonable diligence.

Proposed new section 2244(e) in section 302 of the bill would establish a one year time limit on application for federal habeas corpus, normally commencing at the time State remedies are exhausted. This would provide State defendants with ample time to seek federal review following the conclusion of State proceedings, but would avoid the acute difficulties of proof that currently arise when federal habeas corpus is sought by a prisoner years or decades after the State trial. The proposed limitation rule may be compared to various existing time limits on seeking reveiw or re-opening of criminal judgments in the federal courts, such as the normal ten day limit on appeal by federal defendants under Fed. R. App. P. (4(b); the normal ninety day limit on a State defendant's application for direct review in the Supreme Court under Sup. Ct. R. 11, 22; and the two year limit on motions for new trials based on newly discovered evidence under Fed. R. Crim. P. 33. Proposed section 2244(e) further provides for deferral of the start of the limitation period in appropriate cases, such as assertion of newly recognized rights or newly discovered claims.

Section 303 of the bill would amend section 2253 of title 28, United States Code, so as to vest in the judges of the courts of appeals exclusive authority to issue certificates of probable cause for appeal in habeas corpus proceedings. It would also create an identical certificate requirement for appeals by federal prisoners in collateral relief proceedings pursuant of section 2255 of title 28, United States Code. This would implement recommendations of Judge Henry Friendly of the Second Circuit Court of Appeals. See Friendly, Is Innocence Irrelevant? Collateral Attack on Criminal Judgments, 38 U. Chi. L. Rev. 142, 144 n.9 (1970). The reform would correct inefficiencies of the current system under which an appellate court is obliged to hear an appeal on a district court's cerification, though it may believe that the certificate was improvidently granted, and under which a prisoner is afforded duplicative opportunities to persuade first a district judge and then an appellate judge that an appeal is warranted. Section 304 of the bill would amend Fed. R. App. P. 22 to conform it to the amendments of section 303.

Section 305 of the bill would make various changes in section 2254 of title 28, United States Code. Section 305(a) would amend current section 2254(b) to clarify that a habeas corpus petition can be denied on the merits notwithstanding the petitioner's failure to exhaust State remedies. This would implement a recommendation of Professor David Shapiro. See Shapiro, Federal Habeas Corpus: A Study in Massachusetts, 87 Harv. L. Rev. 321, 358-59 (1973). It would avoid the waste of State and federal resources that presently results when a prisoner presenting a hopeless petition is sent back to the State courts to exhaust State remedies.

Section 305(b) of the bill would add a new subsection (d) to section 2254, United States Code. Proposed subjection (d) would accord deference to the result of full and fair State adjudications. This would establish a standard similar to that stated by the Supreme Court in the case of Ex Parte Hawk, 321 U.S. 114, 118 (1944), prior to the unexplained substitution of the current rules of mandatory re-adjudication by the decision in Brown v. Allen, 344 U.S. 443 (1953). To be full and fair in the intended sense the State court determination must be reasonable, and must be arrived at by procedures consistent with applicable federal law, including the constitutional requirement of due process. In addition, re-adjudication by the federal habeas court would be allowed in cases in which new evidence of substantial importance came to light or a retroactive change of law of substantial importance occurred after the State proceedings. The general sense of the proposed reform is that reversal of a State conviction after a lapse of years and affirmance by the appellate courts of the State should rest on a finding by the habeas court of a significant error or deficiency in the State proceedings. A mere reasonable difference of opinion in a case in which the proper disposition is unclear should not be grounds for disturbing a State judgment in a habeas corpus proceeding.

Section 305(c) of the bill would simplify current section 2254(d), which is verbose, confusing, and obscure, redesignate it as section 2254(e), and bring its formulation into conformity with that of proposed new section 2254(d). This provision would be of minor practical significance, coming into play only when the general standard governing deference to State determinations in proposed new section 2254(d) was found by the habeas court to be unsatisfied.

Section 306 of the bill would amend section 2255, 28 United States Code. It would carry out reforms in the collateral remedy for federal prisoners comparable to the rules proposed in section 302 of the bill governing excuse of procedural defaults and time limitation in habeas corpus proceedings.

S. 2904—A BILL TO MAKE MORE EQUITABLE CERTAIN PROVISIONS RELATING TO UNEMPLOYMENT COMPENSATION

(Introduced by Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD for Mr. METZENBAUM, for himself, and Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD, Mr. DIXON, Mr. HEINZ, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. MATHIAS, Mr. RIEGLE, Mr. DURENBERGER, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. EAGLETON, Mr. SARBANES, Mr. DECONCINI, Mr. CANNON, and Mr. SASSER.)

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) notwithstanding any other provision of law, the provisions of subtitle A of title VI of the Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act of 1982, establishing a Federal supplemental benefits program of unemployment compensation benefits shall remain in effect, and an individual's period of eligibility shall continue, without regard to any provision in such Act relating to termination of such Federal supplemental benefit program, or to the end of such period of eligibility, until the national seasonally adjusted total rate of unemployment is less than 8.7 percent.

(b)(1) Notwithstanding the provisions of section 2402(b) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1981 the amendments made by subsection (a) of section 2402 of such Act shall not be effective for determining whether there are State "on" or "off" indicators for weeks beginning on or after June 1, 1982, and before the month following the first month thereafter for which the national seasonally adjusted total rate of unemployment is less than 8.7 percent.

(2) For purposes of making such determinations described in paragraph (1), the rate of insured unemployment for all weeks shall be calculated in the same manner as it is calculated for the particular week with respect to which the determination of an "on" or "off" indicator is being made.

(c) Section 2403(b) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1981 is amended by striking out "September 25, 1982" and inserting in lieu thereof "the national seasonally adjusted total rate of unemployment is less than 8.7 percent for at least one month occurring after September 1982".

(d) For purposes of determining whether there are State "on" or "off" indicators for weeks beginning on or after June 1, 1982, and before the month following the first month thereafter for which the national seasonally adjusted total rate of unemployment is less than 8.7 percent, paragraph (1) of section 203(d) of the Federal-State Extended Unemployment Compensation Act of 1970 shall be applied as if such paragraph did not contain subparagraph (A) thereof.

(e) In the case of any State with respect to which the Secretary of Labor has determined that State legislation is required in order to amend its State unemployment compensation law so as to include any requirements imposed by this section with respect to extended compensation, such State's unemployment compensation law shall not be determined to be out of compliance under section 3304(c) of the Internal Revenue Code by reason of a failure to contain any such requirement for any period prior to the end of the first session of the State legislature which begins after the date of the enactment of this Act, or which began prior to the date of the enactment of this Act and remained in session for at least twenty-five calendar days after such date of enactment. For purposes of the preceding sentence, the term "session" means a regular, special, budget, or other session of a State legislature.

S.J. RES. 245—MAKING AN URGENT SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATION FOR THE DEPARTMENT OF LABOR FOR THE FISCAL YEAR ENDING SEPTEMBER 30, 1982

(Introduced by Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD, for Mr. KENNEDY for himself, Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD, Mr. RANDOLPH, Mr. METZENBAUM and Mr. RIEGLE.)

Whereas unemployment has increased to 9.8 per centum on a national basis, varying from a high of 14.3 per centum in the State of Michigan to a low of 4.7 per centum in the State of North Dakota;

Whereas unemployment compensation payments have reached an annual rate of over $20,000,000,000;

Whereas hundreds of thousands of workers have exhausted the period of time for which they are entitled to draw unemployment compensation;

Whereas legislation is now pending to extend that period, which will increase the cost; and

Whereas it is deemed to be to the best interest of the unemployed and the Nation that productive and essential work replace unemployment and the resulting payment of unemployment compensation: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, in an effort to reduce unemployment cost and the cost of public assistance, to increase the benefit of expenditures, and to put people back to productive work, where the benefits of the efforts will be of value, there is hereby appropriated to the Department of Labor a sum equal to 5 per centum of the latest estimated cost to the Federal Government of unemployment compensation for the current fiscal year, to remain available until December 31, 1982, of which—

(1) 85 per centum shall be available to provide productive jobs for those unemployed in accordance with section 2, and

(2) 15 per centum shall be available for the youth employment and training programs of the Department of Labor (92 Stat. 1982).

SEC. 2. (a) No individual assisted with funds available in accordance with this section—

(1) shall be eligible for unemployment compensation during the period of productive job employment under this section; or

(2) shall be paid except upon certification in writing by the supervising official that such job was performed.

(b) Individuals assisted with funds available in accordance with this section—

(1) shall be certified as unemployed for at least two weeks in accordance with criteria established by the Secretary of Labor, with priority given those individuals who are not currently eligible for unemployment compensation and who have prior work experience;

(2) shall be paid at a rate which shall not be less than the highest of (A) the minimum wage under section 6(a)(1) of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1968, (B) the minimum wage under the applicable State or local minimum wage law, or (C) the prevailing rates of pay for individuals employed in similar occupations by the same employer, but in no case shall the annual rate of such wage exceed $10,000; and

(3) subject to subsection (a)(1), shall be provided benefits and employment conditions comparable to the benefits and conditions provided to others employed in similar occupations by the same employer.

(c)(1) No currently employed worker shall be displaced by any individual employed with funds under this section, including partial displacement such as a reduction in the hours of nonovertime work, wages, or employment benefits.

(2) Not more than 15 percent of the funds provided to any eligible entity under this section may be used for the cost of administration and not more than 20 percent of such funds may be used for the acquisition of supplies, tools, and equipment.

(d) Funds available in accordance with this section may be used for the purpose of providing unemployed individuals with temporary employment for not more than six months in repair, maintenance, and rehabilitation of public facilities and the conservation, rehabilitation, and improvement of public lands, such employment to include (but not be limited to) employment in—

(1) road and street repair,

(2) bridge painting and repair,

(3) repair and rehabilitation of public buildings,

(4) repair and rehabilitation of water systems,

(5) erosion, flood, drought, and storm damage assistance and control,

(6) removal of refuse from drainage ditches, illegal dumping sites, and other public areas,

(7) park and playground rehabilitation,

(8) installation and repair of drainage pipes and catch basins in areas subject to flooding,

(9) stream, lake, and waterfront harbor and port improvement and pollution control,

(10) forestry, nursery, and silviculture operations,

(11) fish culture and habitat maintenance and improvement,

(12) rangeland conservation, rehabilitation, and improvement,

(13) installation of graded ramps for the handicapped, and

(14) energy conservation.

(e) Funds available in accordance with this section shall be allocated as follows:

(1)(A) Eighty-three per centum of the funds available in accordance with this section shall be allocated among eligible entities which, during the three months preceding the date of allocation for which satisfactory data are available, had an average rate of unemployment in excess of the national average rate of unemployment for such three months.

(B) In making such allocation, the Secretary shall allocate 50 per centum of the funds under this paragraph on the basis of the relative number of unemployed persons, 25 per centum of such funds on the basis of the relative number of unemployed persons residing in areas of substantial unemployment, and 25 per centum of such funds on the basis of the relative excess number of unemployed persons (in excess of 4.5 per centum of the labor force).

(2) Two per centum of the funds available in accordance with this section shall be allocated among Native American tribes, bands, and groups for use in meeting the need for employment and training and related services of such tribes, bands, and groups.

(3)(A) The remainder of the funds available in accordance with this section shall be allocated, in the manner described in paragraph (1)(B), among eligible entities which are not eligible for an allocation under paragraph (1) for the purpose of serving a locality—

(i) which has had a large scale loss of jobs caused by the closing of a facility, mass layoffs, natural disasters, or similar circumstances, or

(ii) which has experienced a sudden or severe economic dislocation.

(B) In expending funds from such allocation in the case of an eligible entity serving two or more such localities, the eligible entity shall take into consideration the severity of unemployment in each such locality.

(f) (1) For purposes of this section, an eligible entity is—

(A) a unit or consortium of units of general local government with a population of less than one hundred thousand persons which has demonstrated the capacity to operate employment and training programs, or a concentrated employment program grantee (serving a rural area);

(B) a unit of general local government with a population equaling or exceeding one hundred thousand persons or a consortium including such a unit and other units of general local governments; and

(C) a State.

(2) A State shall not qualify as an eligible entity with respect to an area served by another eligible entity. A larger unit of general local government shall not qualify as an eligible entity with respect to an area served by a smaller such unit.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of Labor shall notify recipients within thirty days after the date of enactment of this Act of the allocation of funds appropriated herein.

SEC. 4. The Secretary of Labor shall promulgate such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions and the purposes of this joint resolution not later than thirty days after the date of enactment of this joint resolution.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I was about to inquire, has the Senate yet gone into routine morning business under the order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader is advised that under the previous order, there was a period set, but it has not yet been reached.

Mr. BAKER. There was no objection to the introduction of the bills by the distinguished Senator from South Carolina and I assume that, in any event, the unanimous-consent order already entered into would abrogate any right to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, have the special orders been executed?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All special orders have been executed, with the exception of item No. 6, that there be a period for the transaction of routine morning business, which has not been reached yet.

Mr. BAKER. There is also an order to recess at 12 noon.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair now exercise that portion of the order providing for a time for the transaction of routine morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will now read the order and the proposal:

Under the previous order, there will now be a period for the transaction of routine morning business for not to extend beyond the hour of 11:30, with statements therein limited to 3 minutes each.

We are now beyond the hour of 11:30.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that that time be extended to 12 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE CALENDAR

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, there are two items on the calendar that are available for action at this time. I invite the attention of the minority leader to Calendar Order No. 745, S. 349, and Calendar Order No. 744, H.R. 5228, and ask if he is prepared to consider those items.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Yes, Mr. President.

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION ADJUDICATION PROCEDURE AND JUDICIAL REVIEW ACT

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar Order No. 745, S. 349.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state it.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 349) to amend title 38, United States Code, to establish certain procedures for the adjudication of claims for benefits under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration; to apply the provisions of section 553 of title 5, United States Code, to rulemaking procedures of the Veterans' Administration; to provide for judicial review of certain final decisions of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs; to provide for the payment of reasonable fees to attorneys for rendering legal representation to individuals claiming benefits under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration; and for other purposes.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Veterans' Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert the following:

That (a) this Act may be cited as the "Veterans' Administration Adjudication Procedure and Judicial Review Act".

(b) Except as otherwise expressly provided, whenever in this Act an amendment or repeal is expressed in terms of an amendment to, or repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of title 38, United States Code.

TITLE I—ADJUDICATION PROCEDURES

SEC. 101. (a) Chapter 51 is amended by adding at the end of subchapter I the following new section:

"§ 3007. Burden of proof; benefit of the doubt

"(a) Except when otherwise provided by the Administrator in accordance with the provisions of this title, a claimant for benefits under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration shall have the burden of submitting evidence sufficient to justify a belief by a fair and impartial individual that the claim is well grounded. The Administrator shall assist a claimant in developing the facts pertinent to his or her claim.

"(b) When, after consideration of all evidence and material of record in any proceeding before the Veterans' Administration involving a claim for benefits under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration, there is an approximate balance of positive and negative evidence regarding the merits of an issue material to the determination of such claim, the benefit of the doubt in resolving each such issue will be given to the claimant, but nothing in this section shall be construed as shifting from a claimant to the Administrator the burden described in subsection (a) of this section.".

(b)(1) The table of chapters at the beginning of title 38, United States Code, and the table of chapters at the beginning of part IV of such title are each amended by striking out in the item relating to chapter 51 "Applications" and inserting in lieu thereof "Claims".

(2) The heading of such chapter is amended to read as follows:

"CHAPTER 51—CLAIMS, EFFECTIVE DATES, AND PAYMENTS".

(c)(1) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by striking out in the item relating to subchapter I "APPLICATIONS" and inserting in lieu thereof "CLAIMS".

(2) The heading of subchapter I of such chapter is amended to read as follows:

"Subchapter I—Claims".

(d) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by adding after the item relating to section 3006 the following new item:

"3007. Burden of proof; benefit of the doubt.".

SEC. 102. Section 3311 is amended by adding at the end the following new sentence: "Subpenas authorized under this section shall be served by any individual authorized by the Administrator by (1) delivering a copy thereof to the individual named therein, or (2) mailing by registered or certified mail addressed to such individual at such individual's last dwelling place or principal place of business. A verified return by the individual so serving the subpena setting forth the manner of service, or, in the case of service by registered or certified mail, the return post office receipt therefor signed by the individual so served shall be proof of service.".

SEC. 103. Section 4001 is amended—

(1) by amending subsection (a)—

(A) by striking out "(not more than fifty)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(not more than sixty-five)";

(B) by striking out "associate"; and

(C) by inserting before the period at the end of the second sentence "in a timely manner"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(c) The Chairman shall submit a report to the appropriate committees of the Congress, not later than October 1, 1983, and annually thereafter, on the experience of the Board during the prior fiscal year together with projections for the fiscal year in which the report is submitted and the subsequent fiscal year. Such report shall contain, as a minimum, information specifying the number of cases appealed to the Board during the prior fiscal year, the number of cases pending before the Board at the beginning and end of such fiscal year, the number of such cases which were filed during each of the twenty-four months preceding the prior fiscal year and the then current fiscal year, respectively, the average length of time a case was before the Board between the time of the filing of an appeal and the disposition during the prior fiscal year, and the number of members and other professional, administrative, clerical, stenographic, and other personnel employed by the Board at the end of the prior fiscal year. The projections for the current fiscal year and subsequent fiscal year shall include, for each such year, estimates of the number of cases to be appealed to the Board and an evaluation of the Board's ability, based on existing and projected personnel levels, to ensure timely disposition of such appeals as provided for by subsection (a) of this section.".

SEC. 104. Section 4002 is amended by striking out "associate" wherever it appears.

SEC. 105. Subsections (a) and (b) of section 4003 are amended by inserting a comma and "after notice to the claimant of such additional information together with an opportunity to be heard in connection with such information," after "concerned" both places it appears.

SEC. 106. Section 4004 is amended—

(1) by amending subsection (a)—

(A) by striking out "involving" and inserting in lieu thereof "for"; and

(B) by inserting before the period at the end of the second sentence "after affording the claimant an opportunity for a hearing and shall be based exclusively on evidence and material of record in the proceeding and on applicable provision of law";

(2) by amending subsection (b) to read as follows:

"(b)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection, when a claim is disallowed by the Board, it may not thereafter be reopened and allowed and no claim based upon the same factual basis shall be considered.

"(2) Following such a disallowance, the Board (directly or through the agency of original jurisdiction, as described in section 4005(b)(1) of this title)—

"(A) when new and material evidence is secured, shall, and

"(B) for good cause shown, may authorize the reopening of a claim and review of the Board's former decision.

"(3) A judicial decision under subchapter II of chapter 71 of this title, upholding, in whole or in part, the disallowance of a claim shall not diminish the Board's authorities set forth in paragraph (2) of this subsection to authorize the reopening of a claim and review of the former decision."; and

(3) by amending subsection (d) to read as follows:

"(d) After reaching a decision in each case, the Board shall promptly mail notice of its decision to the claimant and the claimant's authorized representatives, if any, at the last known address of the claimant and at the last known address of the claimant's authorized representative, if any. Each decision of the Board shall include—

"(1) a written statement of the Board's findings and conclusions, and reasons or bases therefor, on all material issues of fact, law, and matters of discretion presented on the record; and

"(2) an order granting appropriate relief or denying relief.".

SEC. 107. Section 4005(d)(5) is amended by striking out "will base its decision on the entire record and".

SEC. 108. Section 4009 is amended by adding after subsection (b) the following new subsection:

"(c) Whenever there exists in the evidence of record in an appeal case a substantial disagreement between the substantial findings or opinions of two physicians with respect to an issue material to the outcome of the case, the Board shall, upon the request of the claimant and, after taking appropriate action to attempt to resolve the disagreement, arrange for an advisory medical opinion in accordance with the procedure prescribed in subsection (b) of this section. If the Board denies the request of such claimant for such an opinion, the Board shall prepare and provide to the claimant and the claimant's authorized representative, if any, a statement setting forth the basis for its determination. Actions of the Board under this subsection, including any such denial, shall be final and conclusive, and no other official or any court of the United States shall have the power or jurisdiction to review any aspect of any such decision by an action in the nature of mandamus or otherwise, subchapter II of chapter 71 of this title to the contrary notwithstanding.".

SEC. 109. (a) Chapter 71 is further amended by adding at the end the following new sections:

"§ 4010. Adjudication procedures

"(a) For purposes of conducting any hearing, investigation, or other proceeding in connection with the consideration of a claim for benefits under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration, the Administrator may administer oaths and affirmations, examine witnesses, and receive evidence.

"(b) Any oral, documentary, or other evidence, even though inadmissible under the rules of evidence applicable to judicial proceedings, may be admitted in a hearing, investigation, or other proceeding in connection with the consideration of a claim for benefits under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration, but the Administrator, under regulations which the Administrator shall prescribe, may provide for the exclusion of irrelevant, immaterial, or unduly repetitious evidence.

"(c)(1) In the course of any proceeding before the Board, any party to such proceeding or such party's authorized representative shall be afforded opportunity—

"(A) at a reasonable time prior thereto as well as during such proceeding, to examine and, on payment of a fee prescribed pursuant to section 3302(b) of this title (not to exceed the direct cost of duplication), obtain copies of the contents of the case files and all documents and records to be used by the Veterans' Administration at such proceeding;

"(B) to present witnesses and evidence, subject only to such restrictions as may be set forth in regulations which the Administrator shall prescribe, pursuant to subsection (b) of this section, as to materiality, relevance, and undue repetition;

"(C) to make oral argument and submit written contentions, in the form of a brief or similar document, on substantive and procedural issues;

"(D) to submit rebuttal evidence;

"(E) to present medical opinions and request an independent advisory medical opinion pursuant to section 4009(c) of this title; and

"(F) to serve written interrogatories on any person, including any employee of the Veterans' Administration, which interrogatories shall be answered separately and fully in writing and under oath unless written objection thereto, in whole or in part, is filed with the Administrator by the person to whom the interrogatories are directed or such person's representative.

"(2) The fee provided for in paragraph (1)(A) of this subsection may be waived by the Administrator, pursuant to regulations which the Administrator shall prescribe, on the basis of the party's inability to pay or for other good cause shown.

"(3) In the event of any objection filed under paragraph (1)(F) of this subsection, the Administrator shall, pursuant to regulations which the Administrator shall prescribe establishing standards consistent with standards for protective orders applicable in the United States District Courts, evaluate such objection and issue an order (A) directing that, within such period as the Administrator shall specify, the interrogatory or interogatories objected to be answered as served or answered after modification, or (B) indicating that the interrogatory or interrogatories are no longer required to be answered.

"(4) If any person upon whom interogatories are served under paragraph (1)(F) of this section fails to answer or fails to provide responsive answers to any such interrogatories within thirty days after service or such additional time as the Administrator may allow, the Administrator shall, upon a statement or showing by the party who served such interrogatories of general relevance and reasonable scope of the evidence sought, issue a subpena under section 3311 of this title (with enforcement of such subpena to be available under section 3313 of this title) for such person's appearance and testimony on such interrogatories at a deposition on written questions, at a location within one hundred miles of where such person resides, is employed, or transacts business.

"(d) In the course of any hearing, investigation, or other proceeding in connection with the consideration of a claim for benefits under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration, an employee of the Veterans' Administration may at any time disqualify himself or herself, on the basis of personal bias or other cause, from adjudicating the claim. On the filing by a party in good faith of a timely and sufficient affidavit averring personal bias or other cause for disqualification on the part of such an employee, the Administrator shall determine the matter as a part of the record and decision in the case.

"(e) The transcript or recording of testimony and the exhibits, together with all papers and requests filed in the proceeding, and the decision of the Board (1) shall constitute the exclusive record for decision in accordance with section 4004(a) of this title, (2) shall be available for inspection by any party to such proceeding, or such party's authorized representative, at reasonable times and places, and (3) on the payment of a fee prescribed under section 3302(b) of this title (not to exceed the direct cost of duplication), shall be copied for the claimant or such claimant's authorized representative within a reasonable time. Such fee may be waived by the Administrator, pursuant to regulations which the Administrator shall prescribe, on the basis of the party's inability to pay or for other good cause shown.

"(f) Notwithstanding section 4004(a) of this title, section 554(a) of title 5, or any other provision of law, adjudication and hearing procedures prescribed in this title and in regulations prescribed by the Administrator under this title for the purpose of administering veterans' benefits shall be exclusive with respect to hearings, investigations, and other proceedings in connection with the consideration of a claim for benefits under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration.

"§ 4011. Notice of procedural rights

"In the case of any disallowance, in whole or in part, of a claim for benefits under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration, the Administrator shall, at each procedural stage relating to the disposition of such a claim, beginning with disallowance after an initial review or determination, and including the furnishing of a statement of the case and the making of a final determination by the Board, provide to the claimant and such claimant's authorized representative, if any, written notice of the procedural rights of the claimant. Such notice shall be on such forms as the Administrator shall prescribe by regulation and shall include, in easily understandable language, with respect to proceedings before the Veterans' Administration, (1) descriptions of all subsequent procedural stages provided for by statute, regulations, or Veterans' Administration policy, (2) descriptions of all rights of the claimant expressly provided for in or pursuant to this chapter, of the claimant's rights to a hearing, to reconsideration, to appeal, and to representation, and of any specific procedures necessary to obtain the various forms of review available for consideration of the claim, and (3) such other information as the Administrator, as a matter of discretion, determines would be useful and practical to assist the claimant in obtaining full consideration of the claim.".

(b) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by adding after the item relating to section 4009 the following new items:

"4010. Adjudication procedures.
"4011. Notice of procedural rights.".

SEC. 110. (a) In order to evaluate the feasibility and desirability of alternative methods of (1) assuring the resolution of claims before the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs for benefits under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration as promptly and efficiently as feasible following the filing of a notice of disagreement pursuant to section 4005 (as amended by section 107 of this Act) or 4005A of title 38, United States Code, and (2) affording claimants the opportunity for a hearing before or review by a disinterested authority at a location as convenient and on as timely basis as possible for each claimant, the Administrator is authorized to conduct a study, commencing not more than one year after the date of the enactment of this Act, for a period of twenty-four months, involving either or both of the alternative methods described in subsection (b) of this section for resolution of claims.

(b)(1) In not more than three geographic areas, the Administrator is authorized to provide an intermediate-level adjudication process whereby each claimant may, within the time afforded such claimant under paragraph (3) of such section 4005(d) or 4005A(b) to file an appeal, request a de novo hearing at the agency of original jurisdiction (as decribed in section 4005(b)(1) of such title 38) before a panel of three Veterans' Administration employees, each of whose primary responsibilities include adjudicative functions but none of whom shall have previously considered the merits of the claim at issue. Following such hearing, such panel shall render a decision and prepare a new statement of the case in accordance with the requirements of paragraphs (1) and (2) of such section 4005(d). Such new statement of the case shall, for all purposes relating to appeals under chapter 71 of such title 38, be considered to be a statement of the case as required by paragraph (1) of such section 4005(d).

(2) In not more than three other geographic areas, the Administrator is authorized to provide for an enhanced schedule of visits, on at least a quarterly basis each year, by a panel or panels, of the Board of Veterans' Appeals to conduct formal recorded hearings pursuant to such section 4002 in such areas.

(c) Not later than six months after the completion of such study, the Administrator shall report to the Congress on the results thereof, including an evaluation of the cost factors associated with each alternative studied and with any appropriate further implementation thereof, the impact on the workload of each regional office involved in such study, and the impact on the annual caseload of the Board of Veterans' Appeals resulting from each alternative studied, together with any recommendations for administrative or legislative action, or both, as may be indicated by such results.

TITLE II—VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION RULEMAKING

SEC. 201. (a) Subchapter II of chapter 3 is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"§221. Rulemaking

"Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (a)(2) of section 553 of title 5, the promulgation of rules and regulations by the Administrator shall be subject to the requirements of section 553 of title 5.".

(b) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by adding after the item relating to section 220 the following new item:

"221. Rulemaking.".

TITLE III—JUDICIAL REVIEW

SEC. 301. Section 211(a) is amended by striking out "sections 775, 784" and inserting in lieu thereof "sections 775 and 784 and subchapter II of chapter 71 of this title".

SEC. 302. (a) Chapter 71 is further amended by adding at the end the following new subchapter:

"Subchapter II—Judicial Review

"§ 4025. Right of review; commencement of action.

"(a) For the purposes of this chapter and section 3404 of this title—

"(1) 'final decision of the Administrator' means—

"(A) a final determination of the Board of Veterans' Appeals pursuant to section 4004 (a) or (b) of this title; or

"(B) a dismissal of an appeal by the Board of Veterans' Appeals purusant to section 4005 or 4008 of this title; and

"(2) 'Claim for benefits' means—

"(A) an initial claim filed under section 3001 of this title;

"(B) a challenge to a decision of the Administrator reducing, suspending or terminating benefits; or

"(C) any request by or on behalf of the claimant for reopening, reconsideration, or further consideration in a matter described in clause (A) or (B) of this paragraph.

"(b) Except as provided in subsection (f) of this section, after any final decision of the Administrator adverse to a claimant in a matter involving a claim for benfits under any law administered by the Veterans' Administration, such claimant may obtain a review of such decision in a civil action commenced within 180 days after the mailing to the claimant of notice of such decision pursuant to section 4004 of this title. Such action shall be brought against the Administrator in the district court of the United States for the judicial district in which the plaintiff resides or the plaintiff's principal place of business is located, or in the district court of the United States for the judicial district where the principal offices of the Board of Veterans' Appeals (established under section 4001 of this title) are located.

"(c) The complaint initiating an action under subsection (a) of this section shall contain sufficient information to permit the Administrator to identify and locate the plaintiff's records in the custody or control of the Veterans' Administration.

"(d) The Administrator shall file, together with the answer to a complaint filed pursuant to subsection (a) of this section, a certified copy of the records upon which the decision complained of is based or, if the Administrator determines that the cost of filing copies of all such records is unduly expensive, the Administrator shall file a complete index of all documents, transcripts, or other materials comprising such records. After such index is filed and after considering requests from all parties, the court shall require the Administrator to file certified copies of such indexed items as the court deems relevant to its consideration of the case.

"(e) In an action brought pursuant to subsection (b) of this section, the court shall have the power, upon the pleadings and the records specified in subsection (d) of this section, to enter judgment in accordance with section 4026 of this title or remand the cause in accordance with section 4026 or 4027 of this title.

"(f) No action may be brought under this section—

"(1) where the initial claim for benefits is filed pursuant to section 3001 of this title after the last day of the fifth fiscal year beginning after the effective date of this section; or

"(2) with respect to matters arising under chapters 19 and 37 of this title.

"§ 4026. Scope of review

"(a) In any action brought under section 4025 of this title, the court to the extent necessary to its decision and when presented, shall—

"(1) decide all relevant questions of law, interpret constitutional and statutory provisions, and determine the meaning or applicability of the terms of an action of the Administrator;

"(2) compel action of the Administrator unlawfully withheld;

"(3) hold unlawful and set aside decisions, findings (other than those described in clause (4) of this subsection), and conclusions of the Administrator found to be—

"(A) arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise not in accordance with law;

"(B) contrary to constitutional right, power, privilege, or immunity;

"(C) in excess of statutory jurisdiction, authority, or limitations, or in violation of a statutory right; or

"(D) without observance of procedure required by law; and

"(4) in the case of a finding of material fact made in reaching a decision on a claim for benefits under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration, hold unlawful and set aside such finding when it is so utterly lacking in a rational basis in the evidence that a manifest and grievous injustice would result if such finding were not set aside. Before setting aside under this clause any finding of fact, the court shall specify the deficiencies in the record upon which the court would set aside such finding, and shall remand the case one time to the Administrator for further action not inconsistent with the order of the court in remanding the case. In so remanding a case, the court shall specify a reasonable period of time within which the Administrator shall complete the ordered action. If the Administrator does not complete action on the case within the specified period of time, the case shall be returned to the court for its further action.

"(b) In making the determinations under subsection (a) of this section, the whole record before the court pursuant to section 4025(d) of this title shall be subject to review, and the court shall review those parts of such record cited by a party, and due account shall be taken of the rule of prejudicial error.

"In no event shall findings of fact made by the Administrator be subject to trial de novo by the court.

"(d) When a final decision of the Administrator is adverse to a party and the sole stated basis for such decision is the failure of such party to comply with any applicable regulation of the Veterans' Administration, the court shall review only questions raised as to compliance with and the validity of the regulation.

"§ 4027. Remands

"(a)(1) In any action brought under section 4025 of this title, the court shall, on motion of the Administrator made before the expiration of the time specified for the filing of an answer to a complaint filed pursuant to subsection (b) of such section, allow a single remand of a case to the Administrator for further review by the Administrator. If such review is not completed within ninety days after the date of such remand, the matter shall be returned to the court for its action.

"(2)(A) At any time after the Administrator files an answer, the court may, in the exercise of its discretion, remand the case to the Administrator for further action by the Administrator.

"(B) If either party shall apply to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence and shall show to the satisfaction of the court that such additional evidence is material and that there is good cause for granting such leave, the court shall remand the case to the Administrator and order such additional evidence to be taken by the Administrator.

"(C) In the case of a remand under subparagraph (A) or (B) of this paragraph, the court may specify a reasonable period of time within which the Administrator shall complete the required action.

"(b) After a case is remanded to the Administrator under subsection (a) of this section, and after further action by the Administrator, including consideration of any additional evidence, the Administrator shall modify, supplement, affirm, or reverse the findings of fact or decision, or both, and shall file with the court any such modification, supplementation, affirmation, or reversal of the findings of fact or decision or both, as the case may be, and certified copies of any additional records and evidence upon which such modification, supplementation, affirmation, or reversal was based. Any such modification, supplementation, affirmation, or reversal of the findings of fact or decision shall be reviewable by the court only to the extent provided in section 4026 of this title.

"§ 4028. Survival of actions

"Any action brought under section 4025 of this title shall survive, notwithstanding any change in the person occupying the office of Administrator or any vacancy in such office.

"§ 4029. Appellate review

"The decisions of a district court pursuant to this chapter shall be subject to appellate review by the courts of appeals and the Supreme Court of the United States in the same manner as judgments in other civil actions.".

(b) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended—

(1) by inserting before the item relating to section 4001 the following new item:

"SUBCHAPTER I—GENERAL";

and

(2) by adding after the item (added by section 109(b) of this Act) relating to section 4011 the following new items:

"SUBCHAPTER II—JUDICIAL REVIEW

"Sec.
"4025. Right of review; commencement of action.
"4026. Scope of review.
"4027. Remands.
"4028. Survival of actions.
"4029. Appellate review.".

SEC. 303. Section 1346(d) of title 28, United States Code, is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof "except as provided for in subchapter II of chapter 71 of title 38".

TITLE IV—ATTORNEYS' FEES

SEC. 401. Section 3404 is amended—

(1) by amending subsection (c) to read as follows:

"(c) The Administrator shall approve reasonable attorneys' fees to be paid by the claimant, to attorneys recognized under this section, for representation before the Veterans' Administration in connection with a claim for benefits under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration, but in no event shall such attorneys' fees exceed—

"(1) for any claim resolved prior to or at the time that a final decision of the Administrator is first rendered, $10; or

"(2) for any claim resolved after such time, an amount in excess of—

"(A) if the claimant and an attorney have entered into an agreement under which no fee is payable to such attorney unless the claim is resolved in a manner favorable to the claimant, 25 per centum of the total amount of any past-due benefits awarded on the basis of the claim; or

"(B) if the claimant and an attorney have not entered into such an agreement, the lesser of—

"(i) the fee agreed upon by the claimant and the attorney; or

"(ii) $500, or such greater amount as may be specified from time to time in regulations which the Administrator shall prescribe based on changed national economic conditions subsequent to the date of enactment of this subsection, except that the Administrator may, in the Administrator's discretion, determine and approve a fee in excess of $500, or such greater amount if so specified, in an individual case involving extraordinary circumstances warranting a higher fee."; and

(2) by adding at the end of such section the following new subsections:

"(d)(1) If, in an action brought under section 4025 of this title, the matter is resolved in a manner favorable to a claimant who was represented by an attorney, the court shall determine and allow a reasonable fee for such representation to be paid to the attorney by the claimant. When the claimant and an attorney have entered into an agreement under which the amount of the fee payable to such attorney is to be paid from any past-due benefits awarded on the basis of the claim and the amount of the fee is contingent on whether or not the matter is resolved in a manner favorable to the claimant, the fee so determined and allowed shall not exceed 25 per centum of the total amount of any past-due benefits awarded on the basis of the claim.

"(2) If, in an action brought under section 4025 of this title, the matter is not resolved in a manner favorable to the claimant, the court, taking into consideration the likelihood at the time such action was field that the claimant would prevail, may determine and allow a reasonable fee not in excess of $750 to be paid to the attorney by the claimant for the representation of such claimant.

"(e) To the extent that past-due benefits are awarded in proceedings before the Administrator or a court, the Administrator shall direct that payment of any attorneys' fee that has been determined and allowed under this section be made out of such past-due benefits, but in no event shall the Administrator withhold for the purpose of such payment any portion of benefits payable for a period subsequent to the date of the decision of the Administrator or court making such award.

"(f) The provisions of this section shall apply only to cases involving claims for benefits under the laws administered by the Veterans' Administration, and such provisions shall not apply in cases in which the Veterans' Administration is the plaintiff or in which other attorneys' fee statutes are applicable.

"(g) For the purposes of subsections (c) and (d) of this section, claims shall be considered as resolved in a manner favorable to the claimant when all or any part of the relief sought is granted.

"(h) In an action brought under section 4025 of this title, the court may award to a prevailing party, other than the Administrator, reasonable attorneys' fees and costs where the court finds that the position of the Administrator was not substantially justified or that special circumstances make an award just.".

SEC. 402. Section 3405 is amended—

(1) by striking out "or" after "title,"; and

(2) by striking out "him" and inserting in lieu thereof "such claimant or beneficiary, or (3) with intent to defraud, in any manner willfully and knowingly deceives, misleads, or threatens a claimant or beneficiary or prospective claimant or beneficiary under this title with reference to any matter covered by this title".

TITLE V—MERIT PAY SYSTEM EXCLUSION FOR BOARD OF VETERANS' APPEALS MEMBERS

SEC. 501. Section 4001(b) is amended by adding at the end the following new sentence: "The provisions of section 5402 of title 5 shall not be applied to any member of the Board.".

TITLE VI—EFFECTIVE DATES

SEC. 601. The provisions of this Act shall become effective on the first day of the first month beginning 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 602. A civil action authorized in subchapter II of chapter 71 of title 38, United States Code (as added by section 302(a) of this Act) may be instituted to review decisions of the Board of Veterans' Appeals rendered on or after April 1, 1982.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, it is my pleasure to present to the Senate for its approval S. 349, the proposed "Veterans' Administration Adjudication Procedure and Judicial Review Act." This legislation is designed to improve the adjudicative rights of individuals pursuing claims for Veterans' Administration benefits in order to make them more nearly comparable to the rights of claimants for other Federal benefits.

The improvements made by this bill would take the following forms: most importantly, the bill would lift the present near-total preclusion of judicial review of VA claims, to permit—for the first time—persons whose claims for benefits are denied at the agency level to appeal that denial in the Federal courts. It would codify certain adjudication procedures which are presently in use in the VA and which are generally favorable to claimants. It would authorize the VA to test two alternative methods of improving the appeals process within the VA. It would subject the VA to the formal rulemaking requirements of the Administrative Procedure Act. It would lift the present $10 limitation on the amount of fees that may be paid by a claimant for attorney representation in connection with a claim for VA benefits, to permit the payment of reasonable fees, not only at the Federal court level, but also in the final stage of the agency adjudication. And finally, it would exempt members of the Board of Veterans Appeals from certain performance review requirements generally applicable to other administrative personnel, in order to safeguard the quasi-judicial autonomy of the BVA.

Mr. President, the need for this legislation is clear. Under present law as set forth in section 211(a) of title 38 of the United States Code, all VA benefits decisions are final and not subject to judicial review. Although, as discussed more fully in the Veterans' Affairs Committee report, Federal courts have held that section 211(a) does not preclude judicial review of constitutional questions, certain procedural matters, and challenges to the Administrator's authority to issue particular regulations, the vast majority of VA benefits determinations remains unappealable to any court. Present law also provides, as set forth in section 3404(c)(2), that no attorney representing a claimant for VA benefits may be paid more than $10 for that representation—a provision which effectively precludes all but pro bono representation. Both of these limitations are at odds with the adjudicative rights afforded, primarily by virtue of the Administrative Procedure Act, to claimants for other Federal benefits.

In most other respects, however, the VA claims adjudication process has grown to serve VA claimants quite well. It contains a number of unique and valuable features which are worth preserving: most notably, the use of informal rules for the admission of evidence, the practice of giving the claimant the benefit of the doubt on disputed factual matters, reliance on free representation before the VA by skilled representatives of the national veterans' organizations, and the impressive and well-established expertise of the Board of Veterans' Appeals in deciding the specific military and medical-related factual issues that arise in the context of claims for VA benefits.

Our task, then, in formulating this legislation was to preserve these positive aspects of the present system, and to enhance them through the addition of other important adjudicative rights and safeguards. Our purpose was to insure that veterans and other claimants before the VA receive all benefits to which they are entitled. And we trust that the expansion of these important and almost universal rights of judicial review and meaningful attorney representation will appreciably further that goal.

HISTORY OF S. 349

Mr. President, legislation concerning judicial review of VA benefits determinations has been before Congress in one form or another for many years. The issues contained in present legislation were first addressed in a measure which was introduced in the 94th Congress—S. 3392—by the distinguished Senator from my neighboring State of Colorado (Mr. HART), and which was reintroduced as S. 364 in the 95th Congress. On the basis of extensive hearings held on S. 364, the bill was reintroduced in significantly modified form as S. 330, in the 96th Congress, and was passed in the Senate by voice vote on September 17, 1979. The bill before us today, S. 349, was identical, when introduced on January 30, 1981, to the Senate-passed version of S. 330. On July 15, 1981, the Senate Veterans' Affairs Committee held a hearing to consider S. 349 and related issues, and on June 8, 1982, S. 349 was reported favorably by a unanimous vote of the committee. Subsequently, the bill was referred to the Judiciary Committee, under the original referral order, for a period of 45 days, at the expiration of which, the committee having taken no action, the bill was discharged from the committee and placed on the Senate Calendar.

A total of eight hearings have been held on this legislation: Five during the 95th Congress, two during the 96th Congress, and one in the present Congress. The present form of the bill reflects what I feel to be a painstaking and conscientious effort to gather together the many points of view and recommendations that were presented at these hearings by the many interested witnesses. Truly, this legislation is a group effort, arrived at in an excellent spirit of bipartisan cooperation and consensus.

The notion of judicial review has received strong support from the major veterans' organizations. The VFW, at its national convention in 1979, adopted a resolution specifically endorsing the substance of S. 349, and general support for the need for judicial review has been voiced by representatives of the Disabled American Veterans, AMVETS, Paralyzed Veterans of America, COMVETS, and most energetically and outspokenly, by the National Veterans' Law Center. The American Legion has expressed opposition to the bill, and the VA this year abandoned its previous position of support for the legislation—the basic rationale in both instances being that the present system is adequate and needs no revision.

DISCUSSION OF JUDICIAL REVIEW PROVISIONS

This legislation is not centrally based on a belief that the current system of VA claims adjudication is unjust; to the contrary, there is no evidence that most claimants are not satisfied with the resolution of their claims for VA benefits. Rather this legislation reflects the view that the primary original rationale behind the statutory preclusion of judicial review contained in section 211(a) is now obsolete. The preclusion first appeared in the Economy Act of 1933, Public Law 73-2, and reflected the view that vererans' benefits are mere gratuities and that veterans have no intrerest in or right to such benefits so compelling as to warrant the protection afforded by access to court review. Clearly, this position is untenable and offensive, especially in light of the significant case law that has emerged in the last decade concerning the legal status of Federal entitlements, beginning with the seminal case of Goldberg against Kelly in 1970, in which the Supreme Court held that welfare benefits are more in the nature of a right than a privilege for purposes of due process protections.

This legislation also reflects the view that, inasmuch as administrative determinations concerning virtually all other Federal benefits are subject to judicial review (the only significant exception being determinations concerning benefits under the Federal Employees Compensation Act), it is both unjustifiable and fundamentally unfair to deny to veteran claimants such a common and highly valued right. In addition, although there is cause to have great confidence in the competence and good faith of the individual adjudicators and adjudicative bodies within the VA, there is and will inevitable continue to be some proportion of cases, however small, that are wrongly decided by the Board of Veterans' Appeals, where the only hope of correcting the resulting injustice then lies in judicial review. In this sense, this legislation reflects a faith in the system of checks and balances embodied in Federal court review, a system which can only enhance the likelihood that the truth will be found and a correct and just decision reached. It might also help overcome the perception, in some claimants' minds, that the combination of no judicial review and the $10 limit on attorneys' fees is responsible for a system which is unfair in denying veterans their "day in court." To continue to inform claimants before the VA that benefits to which they are entitled by law could be wrongfully denied, and that there is no remedy for such a wrongful denial, no longer seems to be an acceptable position. Although the VA has a unique and vital mission of providing service to our Nation's veterans and their survivors, it is, at the same moment, a large and complex Federal agency, responsible for dispensing some $14 billion in benefits each year—so the passage of legislation which would involve the judiciary as a "check" on VA action should prove beneficial to claimants before the VA.

Mr. President, although this legislation will permit judicial review of questions of fact as well as questions of law, it is important to note that the factual review provisions have been framed very narrowly. A VA finding of fact may be set aside by a reviewing court only when it is "so utterly lacking in a rational basis in the evidence that a manifest and grievous injustice would result if it were not set aside."

This provision is intended to permit a reviewing court to reject an agency factual finding only when the court is certain that the finding was wrong. It is intended to be a substantially narrower standard than the "substantial evidence" test used in social security cases—a test which has often been criticized as being too broad, and under which reviewing courts have felt too free to substitute their judgment for that of the administrative tribunal, without having seen or heard the witnesses and without the expertise of the administrative decisionmakers. It is intended to afford the maximum possible deference to the BVA's expertise as an arbiter of the specialized types of factual issues that arise in the context of claims for VA benefits—and to minimize the burden imposed on the Federal courts), while still recognizing and providing for the possibility of error in BVA factual determinations, and the need, however seldom it may arise, for some avenue of redress against the most glaring errors. But despite the various considerations that counsel in favor of restricting the scope of factual review, there can be no doubt that some form of meaningful factual review is essential; obviously, any scheme of judicial review which would guarantee that a manifest and grievous injustice, resulting from a factual finding that is utterly lacking in a rational basis in the evidence could go unremedied would be absurd indeed.

Mr. President, I note that on August 17—some 8 days after S. 349 had been discharged from the Committee on the Judiciary—the Department of Justice submitted to that committee its views on S. 349 as reported by the Veterans' Affairs Committee. Concern was expressed that the new standard of factual review contained in proposed section 4026 might present significant problems of judicial construction, by requiring reviewing courts to engage in what the Department of Justice perceives to be a complicated three-part test. As they put it:

> A court will be required to determine what degree of evidence constitutes a "rational basis" for a finding, how far removed from a "rational basis" a finding may be before it is deemed to cause "a manifest and grievous injustice," and what degree of hardship must be present before a finding causes "a manifest and grievous injustice."

The end result of this process, it was stated, could in effect approximate a substantial evidence standard. The Justice Department views concludes with a recommendation that factual review be limited to cases where there is no evidence in the record to support the finding in question. I ask unanimous consent that the document referred to be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. SIMPSON. This expression of concern disregards several of the points that the Veterans' Affairs Committee took great pains to clearly state in discussing the new standard of factual review in its report on S. 349. Please recall that the judicial review provisions of S. 349 were specifically designed to provide for a far more restrictive scope of review than is available under the "substantial evidence" test—in order to preclude reviewing courts from simply substituting their judgment for that of the agency—and to do so by means of a standard so strongly worded as to leave no question as to the intent of the Congress. This standard should be viewed as a unit, not dissected into three or more disparate parts. If the committee had intended that a reviewing court make separate findings as to whether there is a "rational basis" and whether "a manifest and grievous injustice would result," we would certainly have been artful enough to craft separate clauses for each such element. As it is, however, the language used is intended to represent a straightforward, one-step inquiry into whether the reviewing court is absolutely certain that the agency was wrong. To the extent that the reviewing court has any uncertainty as to the meaning of this standard, it is expected that clarification will be sought from the legislative history first and foremost, rather than through independent judicial construction.

As for the suggested "no evidence" standard, it is clear that such a standard would preclude any meaningful factual review, by precluding all review of findings supported by the merest scintilla of evidence, no matter how patently insubstantial or uncompelling. In practical effect, only questions of law would be reviewable, thus making crucial the distinction between questions of law and questions of fact. The problems associated with this approach are discussed in the committee's report on S. 349, numbered 97-466, in the section dealing with the scope of review provisions of the committee bill.

Essentially, the problem is that most claims determinations before the VA devolve about mixed questions of law and fact, which are often extremely difficult to separate. Indeed, it is quite possible that a specialized veterans' bar could spring up, whose members would have developed great skill and artifice in sorting out the elements of each issue and presenting every question as a legal one, thus creating a likely spate of work for attorneys and the courts—contrary to the Justice Department's central desire to minimize the burden on the courts—but without providing any greater benefit for the veteran community or the broader interests of justice than is provided under the present version of the bill.

One additional point made in the Justice Department views, however, is well taken. The Department recommends a clarification of the language relating to punitive awards of attorney's fees against the United States, in order to reflect more accurately the committee's express intention of track the relevant provisions of the Equal Access to Justice Act. I do very much appreciate these recommendations and will be pleased to give them my full and careful attention at the next appropriate stage in the consideration of this legislation.

It should be noted that this legislation does not repeal the judicial review prohibition contained in section 211(a). Rather, it is retained in substantially modified form, in order that there will be no ambiguity as to whether judicial review of VA benefits determinations is governed by the Administrative Procedure Act or by the provisions of this legislation (the Administrative Procedure Act does not apply, by virtue of section 701 thereof, where there is a statute precluding judicial review).

DISCUSSION OF ATTORNEY'S FEES PROVISIONS

The limitation on attorney's fees dates back to the post-Civil-War period and was established at its present $10 level in 1924. It was grounded in a desire to protect helpless pensioners from unscrupulous lawyers fabricating claims and harassing veterans. It does not appear to have been considered in relation to any potential right of court review, but seems to have been directed only at attorney participation in the uncomplicated initial claims filing process. But no matter how well grounded may have been the concerns expressed in Congress in 1918 about lawyers and claims agents as "mercenary leeches sapping the blood" of financial benefits for veterans, it is clear that such a view of today's organized bar, particularly in light of the widespread network of local bar associations that now generally monitor attorney behavior, is no longer tenable.

Although this $10 limitation is not directly linked to preclusion of judicial review, it seems that the bar to judicial review may have contributed to nonparticipation of attorneys in VA claims matters. In recent years, only approximately 2 percent of all claimants before the Board of Veterans' Appeals were represented by attorneys, a phenomenon that is undoubtedly heavily attibutable to the limit on the fee that an attorney may receive. Thus, the newly created right to judicial review proposed in this legislation would be a hollow right indeed without some easing of the limitation on attorneys' fees. Without the assistance of an attorney, a claimant would effectively be precluded from filing a proper appeal of an adverse VA decision in Federal court and, without amending the $10 limitation, there would continue to be little or no attorney representation in VA claims cases.

Yet extreme care must be taken in making any change in the attorneys' fees limitation so that we do not induce unnecessary retention of attorneys by VA claimants and not disrupt unnecessarily the very effective network of nonattorney resources that has evolved in the absence of significant attorney involvement in VA claims matters. The mainstays of that network are veterans' service officers, usually employees of the national veterans' service organizations, who provide representation without charge to veterans and other claimants before the VA, without regard to whether the individual claimant is a member of the service officer's organization.

The attorneys' fees provision in this legislation are designed to balance these important, competing considerations. The basic purpose is to authorize attorney involvement in the judicial review process, while preserving the present system of low-cost, generally nonattorney representation before the VA as much as is possible. The $10 limit would be retained throughout the proceedings before the agency, except that it would be lifted where an attorney who has been retained to appeal a case to district court determines that the existing administrative record is inadequate and in need of further development or supplementation for appeal purposes. This reopened-case provision should be regarded as incidental to the provisions relating to attorneys' fees for representation in court, and is designed not to interfere with present agency adjudication practice, but to insure that no attorney who accepts a case for court appeal shall be saddled with an administrative record which is inadequate and which he or she had no opportunity to develop.

SUMMARY OF PROVISIONS

Mr. President, I should like to share with my colleagues a brief review of the various provisions of this legislation. The bill's six titles cover the following subjects: Adjudication procedures, Veterans' Administration rulemaking, judicial review, attorneys' fees, merit pay system exclusion for Board of Veterans' Appeals members, and effective dates, as follows:

Title I: Adjudication procedures.—This title would codify and establish various internal procedures of the VA applicable in adjudications of claims for benefits under laws administered by the VA. Included in title I of the Committee bill are provisions that would:

Codify the burden of proof and reasonable doubt standards in VA claims adjudication proceedings, currently provided for by regulation (38 CFR 3.102 and 3.103), in order to assure that the VA's present practices of providing claimants all reasonable assistance in the development of claims and construing the evidence liberally in favor of the claimant are not lost in reaction to the provision, in title III of the Committee bill, authorizing judicial review of final decisions denying claims.

Specify procedures for the service of subpenas authorized under section 3311 of title 38, United States Code, including procedures for personal service or service by mail.

Increase the statutory limitation on the size of the BVA from 50 to 65 in order both to ease existing strains on the BVA's docket and to enhance the Board's ability to deal with workload increases that may be generated by judicial review of VA decisions.

Encourage the BVA to dispose of appeals before it in a timely manner.

Require the Chairman to report to the appropriate committees of the Congress annually on the Board's current and future workload and its ability, based on then current and projected staffing, to dispose of appeals in a timely manner.

Require the BVA to provide a claimant with notice and an opportunity for a hearing before making a decision based on additional official information received after the BVA had previously decided the case.

Codify a claimant's right to an opportunity for a hearing before the BVA.

Require expressly that BVA decisions must be exclusively on evidence and material of record and on applicable provisions of law.

Make a technical correction in the description of the BVA's authority to reopen a claim by deleting (as inconsistent with present practice) the present requirement that new and material evidence sufficient to reopen a claim be in the form of official reports from the proper service department.

Specify that a court decision upholding denial of a claim under title III of the Committee bill, shall not diminish the Board's discretionary authority to reopen a claim.

Require the BVA to mail a detailed statement of its decision to the claimant and the claimant's authorized representative, if any, at the last known address of the claimant and such representative.

Expand the present requirement that BVA decisions be in writing and contain findings of fact and conclusions of law separately stated, to require that such decisions include findings and conclusions and reasons and bases therefor, on all material issues of fact, law, and matters of discretion, as well as an order granting or denying relief.

Expressly provide a claimant before the BVA with the right, upon request, to have the Board acquire an independent medical opinion when there is a substantial disagreement between the substantiated findings or opinions of two physicians on an issue material to the outcome of the case. Any Board decision to deny such a request, and the basis for such denial, would have to be provided to the claimant but such decision would not be subject to judicial review.

Authorize the Administrator to administer oaths and affirmations, examine witnesses and receive evidence in VA claims adjudication proceedings.

Provide for the admission, even if inadmissible under the rules of evidence applicable in court, of all evidence submitted in VA claims adjudication proceedings subject only to such provisions as the Administrator may impose through regulations for the exclusion of irrelevant, immaterial, or unduly repetitious evidence.

Provide that, in the course of hearings on a claim for VA benefits following initial denial of the claim, the claimant (or other party) shall have the right to review and, on the payment of a fee (waivable, pursuant to regulations that the Administrator must prescribe, on the basis of inability to pay or for other good cause shown) limited to the costs of duplication, to obtain copies of the case files and all materials to be used by the VA at the hearing, to present witnesses and evidence including medical opinions and rebuttal evidence, to make argument and to submit written contentions, and to submit to any person written interrogatories which must be answered unless written objections thereto are filed. If the person served with interrogatories files an objection thereto, the Administrator must, pursuant to regulations that the Administrator must prescribe, evaluate the objection and issue an order directing that answers be given or stating that they need not be given. If the person served with interrogatories fails to comply with such an order or, in the absence of an objection, to answer the interrogatories, the party who served the interrogatories would have the right, upon a statement or showing of good cause, to have the Administrator issue a subpena (enforceable in Federal district court) for the witness' attendance at a deposition at which the unanswered interrogatories would be asked.

Allow, in the course of any claims proceeding, any VA employee to disqualify himself or herself on the basis of personal bias or other cause and a party to challenge such an employee on such basis.

Specify the materials that must be included in the record of VA claims adjudication proceedings and provide that the record shall be available for the claimant's inspection and shall be copied for the claimant upon the payment of a fee (waivable, pursuant to regulations that the Administrator must prescribe, on the basis of claimant's inability to pay or for other good cause shown) limited to the costs of duplication.

Specify that the adjudication rights contained in title 38 and prescribed thereunder by the Administrator are exclusive.

Require the Administrator, at each stage of claims adjudication proceedings before the VA, to provide the claimant with detailed notice, in easily understandable language, of the claimant's procedural rights.

Authorize a VA study of alternative methods of ensuring the prompt and efficient resolution of claims and affording claimants the opportunity for a timely and convenient hearing or review by a disinterested authority. Under this provision, the Administrator could study the following two alternative methods of speeding claims resolution at locations convenient to claimants: (A) intermediate review panels which would conduct de novo reviews at VA regional offices prior to appeal to the BVA, and (B) an enhanced schedule of BVA traveling board visits (at least four per year). The report on the study, including the Administrator's recommendations for administrative or legislative actions, or both, would be due to be submitted to the Congress within 6 months after completion of the study.

Title II: Veterans' Administration rule making.—This title would require application of the Administrative Procedure Act (APA) provisions applicable to rule making, including requirements of notice to the public of proposed regulations and opportunity for comment on such proposed regulations notwithstanding the exclusion from such provisions in section 553(a)(2) of title 5, United States Code, of matters involving loans, grants, benefits, or contracts.

Title III: Judicial review.—This title would permit access to the United States Federal court system for review of decisions of the Administrator on claims for benefits. Included in title III of the Committee bill are provisions that would:

Expand the present category of exceptions to the general preclusion of judicial review contained in present section 211(a) of title 38, United States Code.

Authorize review of a final decision of the Administrator adverse to a VA benefits claimant in Federal district court (in either the plaintiff's home district or the judicial district where the Board of Veterans' Appeals is located, presently the District of Columbia) instituted by a civil action brought within 180 days of the mailing by the VA of notice of such decision.

Define a "final decision of the Administration", which may be appealed to Federal court, to include a Board of Veterans' Appeals (BVA) final decision on the merits, refused to reopen a claim, and dismissal of an appeal.

Define "claim for benefits" to include not just initial claims, but also subsequent action taken on a claim such as reduction or termination of benefits.

Require that a complaint instituting a civil action for court review of a decision relating to a claim for benefits include sufficient information to permit the VA to identify and locate the plaintiff's VA records.

Require the VA to file, together with its answer to a complaint, a certified copy of all of the materials that constitute the record or, if the cost of filing all such materials would be unduly expensive, a complete index of all of the materials. In the latter case, the court would, after considering the requests of the parties, order the Administrator to file certified copies of such indexed items as it deemed relevant to its consideration of the case.

Authorize a court, in an action for review of a VA denial of a claim for benefits, to enter a judgment on the pleadings and the records.

Preclude judicial review, under the provisions added by this title of the Committee bill, which the initial claim is filed with the Administrator on or after the last day of the fifth fiscal year beginning after the effective date of such provisions, and with respect to matters arising under chapters 19 (insurance) and 37 (home, condominium, and mobile home loans) of title 38, United States Code.

Authorize the reviewing court to decide all relevant questions of law; to interpret constitutional, and statutory provisions as well as other actions of the Administrator, compel action of the Administrator unlawfully withheld; and to hold unlawful and set aside decisions, finding, and conclusions of the Administrator found to be (A) arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or not in accordance with law, (B) contrary to constitutional right, power, privilege, or immunity, (C) in excess of statutory, jurisdiction, authority, or limitation, or in violation of a statutory right, or (D) without observance of procedure required by law, or (E) in the case of a finding of material fact, so utterly lacking in a rational evidentiary basis that a manifest and grievous injustice would result if the finding were not set aside.

Require a reviewing court, before reversing an Administrator's decision on the basis of the court's finding that a factual determination of the Administrator is utterly lacking in a rational evidentiary basis, to specify where it finds the record deficient and remand the matter a single time to the Administrator for further action within a reasonable, specified period of time.

Require a court, in making determinations, to review those parts of the administrator record cited by a party and to take due account of the rule of prejudicial error.

Preclude a reviewing court from conducting a trial de novo on the Administrator's findings of fact.

Provide that, in a matter resolved by the VA solely on the basis of a party's failure to comply with a VA regulation, the reviewing court may consider only issues raised as to the validity of or a party's compliance with the regulation.

Authorize three different types of remands from the reviewing court to the Administrator: First, a single remand for not more than 90 days, at the Administrator's request before the Administrator files an answer, for the Administrator to reconsider the case; second, a remand in the court's descretion after the Administrator has filed an answer; and third, a remand if either party applies for leave to adduce further evidence and the moving party shows "good cause" for the requested remand.

Provide that any actions brought under the judicial review provisions added by this title of the Committee bill will survive the tenure of any individual as Administrator.

Provide that decisions of the district court pursuant to the judicial review provisions added by this title shall be subject to review in higher Federal courts in the same manner as judgments in other civil actions.

Specify that the current-law limitation on the jurisdiction of Federal district courts in matters involving pensions shall not apply to VA pension matters.

Title IV: Attorneys' fees.—This title would revise the present title 38 limitation of $10 for claimants' attorneys' fees by authorizing reasonable attorneys' fees, within certain limits, for representation of individuals before the VA and for representation in a case appealed to court under the judicial review provisions added to title 38 by this title of the Committee bill, with a specified limitation in cases in which the matter is resolved in a manner unfavorable to the claimant. Included in title IV are provisions that would:

Retain the $10 limitation on the amount an attorney may receive for services rendered prior to a final BVA decision.

Permit the Administrator to approve a reasonable attorneys' fee for representation within the VA after a final BVA decision (where, for example, a case remains before the VA for reconsideration or for reopening on the basis of "new and material evidence" offered under section 4004(b) of title 38, United States Code, as amended by title I of the Committee bill), up to a maximum of $500 or, if the claimant and attorney have entered into a contingency-fee agreement, no more than 25 percent of any past-due benefits awarded the claimant.

Authorize the Administrator to increase the $500 maximum limitation in future years to reflect changed economic conditions.

Authorize the Administrator to disregard the $500 limitation in an individual case involving extraordinary circumstances warranting a higher fee.

Allow a reviewing court, in a case appealed from the VA, to approve a reasonable attorneys' fee. For cases not resolved in a manner favorable to a claimant, the maximum a court could approve would be $750. For cases resolved in a manner favorable to a claimant, the only limitation on the amount of the fee that a court could approve would be that it must be reasonable, or that, if a claimant and an attorney had entered into a contingent-fee agreement, the fee approved by the court could not exceed 25 percent of the total amount of past-due benefits.

Authorize the VA to make payment to an attorney from past-due benefits, but preclude the VA from making payments from benefits received subsequent to the date of the decision entitling the veteran to benefits.

Limit the applicability of the attorneys' fee provisions to cases involving claims of benefits.

Define, for the purpose of attorneys' fees provisions, a claim as being "resolved in a manner favorable to the claimant" when any or all of the relief sought is granted.

Authorize a court to award to a prevailing party, other than the Administrator, reasonable attorneys' fees and costs where the court finds that the position of the Administrator was not substantially justified or that special circumstances make an award unjust.

Provide criminal penalties for willfully and intentionally defrauding a VA claimant.

Title V: Merit pay system exclusion for Board of Veterans' Appeals members.—This title would exempt members of the BVA other than the Chairman and the Vice Chairman from the merit pay provisions of the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978.

Title VI: Effective dates.—This title provides for an effective date and authorizes the institution of civil actions, under the judicial review provisions added by title III of the Committee bill, for the review of certain Board of Veterans' Appeals (BVA) decisions prior to such effective date. Included in this title are provisions that would:

Provide that the provisions added by the Committee bill would become effective 180 days after the date of enactment.

Allow for court review of a BVA decision rendered on or after April 1, 1982.

Mr. President, in conclusion, I do wish to take this opportunity to express my great appreciation for the efforts and contributions of my good friend from California (Mr. CRANSTON), the ranking minority member of the Veterans' Affairs Committee. He has indeed been a tireless champion of this legislation, and I applaud his deep and heartfelt concern for the quality of justice that is afforded to veterans and their dependents. I also wish to thank the distinguished Senator from Colorado (Mr. HART), who has been an original sponsor of this legislation since its inception, for his continued interest and involvement. In addition, Senator STROM THURMOND has given outstanding service in resolving this matter—as a member of the Veterans Affairs Committee and as chairman of the Judiciary Committee. I richly commend him and sincerely thank that extraordinary gentleman.

The bill that is before you today is the product, as I have already indicated, of years of effort and careful weighing of equities by the Veterans' Affairs Committee staff. As far as the excellent modifications reflected in the committee amendment to S. 349 are concerned, I wish to acknowledge the fine work of committee staffers Scott Wallace, Tom Harvey and Harold Carter, ably assisted by Kay Eckhardt, Laurie Altemose, and Jim MacRae. My thanks also to minority staffers Bill Brew and Jon Steinberg, as well as to Joe Buzhardt with Senator THURMOND, and Bill Holen of Senator HART's staff. I also wish to extend my thanks for valuable technical assistance to Ed Lukey and Don Zeglin of the VA's Office of the General Counsel, to Jän Donsback, special assistant to the Chairman of the Board of Veterans Appeals, and to Ron Simon and Lewis Milford of the National Veterans' Law Center.

Mr. President, I believe that this legislation is fully responsive to all of the many and varied concerns that have been brought to the attention of the committee with regard to improving the VA claims adjudication process. It is now time to grant to claimants before the VA adjudicative rights that are comparable to those afforded to claimants for virtually all other Federal benefits. I urge my colleagues to support this important legislation.

EXHIBIT 1

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF LEGISLATIVE AFFAIRS,
Washington, D.C., August 17, 1982.

Hon. STROM THURMOND,
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary, U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: This responds to your request for the views of the Department of Justice on S. 349, a bill to amend title 38 of the United States Code to establish procedures for the adjudication of claims for benefits under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration. The Department of Justice previously provided in-depth comments on S. 349 to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs (reprinted in S. Rep. No. 97-466, 97th Cong., 2d Sess. 141 (1982)) and we will not belabor your Committee with a repetition of those comments. However, S. 349 was amended in part subsequent to the submission of our comments and we welcome this opportunity to express the views of the Department of Justice on the amendments.

Most of our comments are unaffected by the amendments to S. 349. For example, we expressed our view that the enactment of S. 349 would greatly increase the volume of litigation handled by the Department of Justice. We pointed out that this increase is a natural consequence of a bill which provides access to the courts to a large class of claims not previously subject to judicial review. None of the changes to S. 349 effected by the amendments alters our position. We remain of the view that this legislation will represent a departure from existing practice with concomitant substantial costs to the Government. However, we defer to the Veterans' Administration as to whether such changes should be effected at this time.

We do wish to supplement our comments concerning the attorney's fees provisions of S. 349. We originally expressed concern that the provisions did not clearly indicate the situations in which a court is empowered to award attorney's fees against the United States. The amendments to S. 349 address this concern and provide a clear indication of the standards for the award of attorney's fees. Nonetheless, we remain concerned about the language used to amend that portion of Section 401 dealing with the punitive award of attorney's fees against the United States. As amended, this section permits the award of attorney's fees to a prevailing party "where the court finds that the position of the Administrator was not substantially justified or that special circumstances make an award just." 38 U.S.C. § 3404(h) (proposed language). The Report of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs indicates that this language was intended to provide an attorney's fees standard similar to that contained in the Equal Access to Justice Act, Public Law 96-481. S. Rep. No. 97-466, 97th Cong., 2d Sess. 79 (1982).

The amended language appears to provide an attorney's fee standard that is broader than the standard set forth in the Equal Access to Justice Act. The difference in standards is found in two cases. First, unlike the standard contained in the Equal Access to Justice Act, which permits the denial of an attorney's fee award where "special circumstances make an award unjust" (28 U.S.C. § 2412 (d)(1)(A)), the standard contained in S. 349 would arguably limit a court's power to deny the award of attorney's fees where special circumstances make an award of attorney's fees unjust to situations where the court also finds that the position of the Administrator is justified. Even where the position the Administrator is unjustified, however, the court may feel that the conduct of the prevailing party in the course of litigation, such as abusing discovery procedures, unduly prolonging litigation to generate increased attorney's fees, or generally acting in bad faith, justifies the denial of an attorney's fees award.

Second, the standard in S. 349 would permit a Court to award attorney's fees, even if the position of the administrator is substantially justified, where special circumstances make an award just. However, the Equal Access to Justice Act precludes an award in any case where "the court finds that the position of the Untied States was substantially justified." 28 U.S.C. § 2412(d)-(1)(A). Thus, S. 349 once again goes further than the Equal Access to Justice Act in exposing the United States to liability for attorney's fees.

To insure that S. 349 more closely follows the Equal Access to Justice Act in providing for the award of attorney's fees, we suggest that the language of Section 401 be amended to provide:

(h) In an action brought under section 4025 of this title, the court may award to a prevailing party other than the administrator, reasonable attorney's fees and costs where the court finds that the position of the administrator was not substantially justified and special circumstances do not make an award unjust.

We also wish to supplement our views concerning the scope of review for factual determinations made by the Administrator in Board of Veterans' Appeals proceedings. We expressed concern that extensive review of such factual determinations would greatly exacerbate the significant caseload problems which will naturally result from judicial review of a new class of claims. The Committee on Veterans' Affairs responded to these concerns by amending section 4026 to allow a court to overturn the Administrator's factual findings only where a finding "is so utterly lacking in a rational basis in the evidence that a manifest and grievous injustice would result if such finding was not set aside." 38 U.S.C. § 4026 (proposed language). While this language is a good first step in limiting the scope of judicial review of factual determinations, we feel that it might still permit extensive review of factual determinations. The proposed language provides a new standard which likely will require extensive judicial construction prior to application. A court will be required to determine what degree of evidence constitutes a "rational basis" for a finding, how far removed from a "rational basis" a finding may be before it is deemed to cause "a manifest and grievous injustice", and what degree of hardship must be present before a finding causes "a manifest and grievous injustice." If a court construes these terms broadly, it is possible that the standard of review could in effect approximate an "arbitrary and capricious" or even "substantial evidence" standard. The standard offers little guarantee against a recurrence of the enormous problems attendant to the factual review in Social Security cases which we discussed in our comments to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

The best approach to this problem is to provide review only of the legal basis for the Administrator's decision while reposing sole responsibility for factual determinations with the Boards of Veterans' Appeals, which have the expertise necessary to weigh and interpret properly complex medical evidence. Experience dictates that many litigants advance any available arguments, even if the chances of success of the arguments are restricted. Therefore, a mere tightening of the standard of factual review is likely to reduce only the number of cases that successfully raise factual challenges, not the absolute number of factual challenges. A preclusion of factual review will protect the integrity of the Administrator's factual findings and assure control over the caseload resulting from S. 349. However, should the Committee wish to retain some degree of factual review, we suggest that section 4026 be amended to provide in pertinent part:

(a) In any action brought under section 4025 of this title, the reviewing court to the extent necessary to its decision and when presented, shall—

(4) in the case of a finding of material fact made in reaching a decision for a claim for benefits under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration, hold unlawful and set aside such finding where there is no evidence in the record to support it.

This standard should decrease the likelihood of a judicial expansion of factual review.

The Office of Management and Budget has advised this Department that there is no objection to the submission of this report from the standpoint of the Administration's program.

Sincerely,

ROBERT A. MCCONNELL,
Assistant Attorney General.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I would like to take this opportunity to raise an important issue with respect to this legislation. As the distinguished chairman of the Senate Veterans' Affairs Committee knows, my major concern about this legislation, as chairman of the Judiciary Committee, is that section 4026(A)(4) of the bill, which permits limited judicial review of factual findings of the Administrator, might impose an unnecessarily heavy burden on the Federal court system, both in terms of added case load and lack of judicial familiarity with the particular types of factual questions involved in VA claims determinations. This concern could be addressed by limiting the scope of judicial review available under this bill to questions of law only. This is an issue which I raised in the 96th Congress, by offering an amendment to that effect at the committee markup of S. 330, the predecessor of S. 349. I again raised the scope of review issue in our markup this year, although I did not offer an amendment at that time. I would appreciate any comments which the Senator from Wyoming would care to make on this important issue, particularly with regard to the scope of review provision presently found in S. 349.

Mr. SIMPSON. I am well aware of the concerns of the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee on this issue. Indeed, I find his concerns compelling, and I would agree that it is appropriate to phrase the scope-of-review provisions as restrictively as is practicable. As the Senator knows, the factual review provisions in this legislation have been made increasingly restrictive over the years. In S. 364—this bill's predecessor in the 95th Congress—the "substantial evidence" test was used. This was narrowed in S. 330—the bill that passed the Senate in the 96th Congress—to an "arbitrary and capricious" test. In the present bill, the standard has been further refined to provide that a factual finding of the VA may be reversed by a reviewing court only when it is "so utterly lacking in a rational basis in the evidence that a manifest and grievious injustice would result if such finding were not set aside." As is stated in the committee's report, and as I have emphasized in my opening remarks today, this standard is intended to be substantially narrower than the "substantial evidence" test. A reviewing court may not conduct a trial de novo of the facts, and every effort has been made in framing the legislation to insure that the court will not simply substitute its judgment for that of the administrative tribunal, as is so often the case in the area of social security matters. I believe that the Board of Veterans' Appeals has, over the years, demonstrated great competence as an expert adjudicator of the particular types of factual issues that arise in connection with claims for VA benefits, and that we should defer to that expertise. Nevertheless, after a painstakingly thorough examination of considerations such as these, the committee found that the fact/law distinction was likely to prove unworkable in the VA context. Accordingly, the committee settled upon the very restrictive standard of factual review now contained in the bill, in an attempt to satisfactorily address these same considerations—easing the burden on the Federal courts, and deferring to the expertise of the BVA—that led to the recommendation of a "law-only" scope of review.

Mr. THURMOND. I appreciate the chairman's understanding of this problem and his substantial efforts to structure a very narrow review provision. I recognize that it is difficult to say with any certainty what effect the limited factual review of VA determinations will have on the caseload of the Federal court system. Thus, in light of that uncertainty and of the Senator's very helpful explanation of the factual review provision found in S. 349, I shall defer for now to the present language of the bill, which refects the chairman's sincere and very conscientious effort to address these concerns constructively. I suggest, however, that both the Veterans' Affairs Committee and the Judiciary Committee carefully monitor experience under this legislation and that, after expiration of the 5-year sunset provision contained in section 4025(f)(1) of the bill, we conduct a thorough analysis of the results of judicial review of VA determinations. Of particular importance will be the impact of the factual review provision, through means such as an examination of the percentage of appeals on factual grounds that ultimately prove unsuccessful, on matters such as Federal court caseload and the decisionmaking role of the BVA.

Mr. SIMPSON. I think that the distinguished Senator's suggestion is an excellent one. Without a doubt, the scope-of-review issue has been the most difficult one to resolve in the context of this bill, and I would certainly expect it to be the most significant subject of study in considering whether this legislation ought to be extended beyond the original 5-year authorization. As a member of the Judiciary Committee myself, I wish to express my great appreciation for the chairman's sensitivity to issues concerning the ability of the Federal courts to continue to handle their ever-increasing caseloads effectively and responsibly, without any diminution in the quality of justice available to litigants in all Federal cases.

Mr. THURMOND. I thank the Senator for his assurances and his cooperation on this important issue.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, as the ranking minority member on the Veterans' Affairs Committee, I am delighted to join with my good friend from Wyoming, the committee chairman (Mr. SIMPSON), in urging our colleagues to give their wholehearted, unanimous approval to S. 349, the proposed Veterans' Administration Adjudication Procedure and Judicial Review Act. If the Senate acts as we urge, this will be the second time—the first coming during the last Congress on September 17, 1979, when a predecessor measure, S. 330, was passed—that the Senate has gone on record in support of legislation to eliminate provisions in current law that accord veterans a second-class citizenship in the very fundamental area of their relationship with the Federal Government regarding questions related to statutorily provided benefits and services. I am convinced that the Senate's position on this issue is correct, and I hope that our colleagues in the other body will take notice of our actions and, once this measure reaches that body, will given it the full and favorable consideration it deserves.

Mr. President, the basic purpose of S. 349, which the Veterans' Affairs Committee reported on June 8, 1982, is to insure that veterans and other claimants before the VA receive all benefits to which they are entitled under law by providing them with the opportunity for judicial review of final decisions of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs denying claims for benefits, by codifying certain internal procedures of the VA relating to the adjudication of benefit claims, by requiring that VA rulemaking processes comply with provisions of the Administrative Procedure Act relating to notice and comment, and by allowing claimants to pay attorneys reasonable fees for representation before the VA after a decision by the Board of Veterans' Appeals and for representation in judicial proceedings.

BACKGROUND

Mr. President, in January of last year, at the time Senators HART, DECONCINI, and I introduced S. 349—which was identical to S. 330 as passed by the Senate during the 96th Congress—I made an extended statement in which I discussed the history of consideration of judicial review legislation in the Senate over the prior three Congresses and the reasons supporting the bill we were then introducing. I refer my colleagues and others with an interest in this background to my remarks at the time of introduction which begin on page 1354 of the RECORD for January 30, 1981.

It is sufficient to note at this point that the measure as it comes before the Senate has been through an extended period of development which began in the 94th Congress. During this period, the Committee on Veterans' Affairs has held eight hearings on judicial review legislation, and the Judiciary Committee has held one such hearing. Judicial review legislation has been before both the Veterans' Affairs Committee and the Judiciary Committee, with the Veterans' Affairs Committee twice voting to report such legislation, and the Judiciary Committee twice, after referral of the reported bill for a period of time, taking no action to amend the reported measures before being discharged from their consideration.

Finally, as I just noted, the Senate, during the last Congress, passed legislation quite similar to the pending measure.

In short, it is clear that the Senate has given a great deal of consideration to the issue of providing for judicial review of VA decisions and has indicated its support for providing an opportunity for a veteran aggrieved by a VA decision on a claim for benefits to obtain a carefully limited review of such a decision. I have every expectation that the Senate will go on record again today in support of such a result, and I strongly urge that action.

Mr. President, because, as I noted earlier, I have previously described in some detail the background of this legislation and the general reasons for my support for it, I will limit my remarks today to a brief discussion of the more significant changes made by the Veterans' Affairs Committee to the measure as introduced. In addition, I will mention some current activity that further reinforces my support for this legislation.

COMMITTEE AMENDMENTS

Mr. President, the committee made a number of changes to S. 349 as introduced. The two principal changes were to the provisions relating to a court's scope of review and to the provisions relating to the fee a VA claimant can pay an attorney.

On the scope-of-review issue, S. 349 as introduced—and S. 330 as passed by the Senate during the last Congress—included an "arbitrary and capricious" test for a court to use in evaluating a VA decision on a question of fact. As was described in the committee report on S. 330 (S. Rept. No. 96-178) it was the committee's intent in adopting this standard in that legislation that a reviewing court would have less latitude to review, and thus possibly reverse, a VA decision on a question of fact than a court utilizing the "substantial evidence" test which is generally used by courts under the Administrative Procedure Act in conjunction with the review of factual decisions made by other Federal agencies.

In S. 349 as reported and now pending before the Senate, the "arbitrary and capricious" standard has been replaced by an even more restrictive scope-of-review standard—a court can set aside a VA finding on a material fact only when the VA finding "is so utterly lacking in a rational basis in the evidence that a manifest and grievious injustice would result if such finding were not set aside." Thus, a veteran seeking court review of a VA decision on a factual issue would have to show, first, that the factual issue was "material" to the claim; second, that the VA's finding was "utterly lacking in a rational basis"; and finally, that "a manifest and grievious injustice" would result if the VA decision were allowed to stand. This is a very narrow scope-of-review provision which clearly demonstrates the committee's view that the Board of Veterans' Appeals is and should remain the expert arbiter of factual issues in VA claims matters and that a reviewing court's role in examining decisions of the Board on factual matters should be sharply circumscribed. I believe that this standard strikes the appropriate balance of allowing some opportunity for court review of VA decisions on factual issues, so as to avoid the result of allowing plainly incorrect decisions to go uncorrected, while sharply limiting that review so that courts are prevented from second guessing the VA decisionmakers on factual issues.

Mr. President, as is discussed in the committee report accompanying S. 349 (S. Rept. No. 97-466) the committee considered various formulations for the scope-of-review provisions including, as suggested by the VA, allowing court review only of questions of law and precluding review of questions of fact. This latter formulation was considered during the development of S. 330 during the last Congress and, both on that occasion and in our committee's deliberation on S. 349 this year, our committee decided against establishing such a fact/law dichotomy. Instead, on each occasion the committee adopted scope-of-review provisions permitting specific, limited review of factual questions.

Two major reasons support the committee's decision not to preclude court review of factual issues in VA claims cases. First, denying claimants before the VA any opportunity to have a court review issues of fact would continue to relegate these claimants to second-class citizenship before the courts. I cannot think of any adequate way to explain to a veteran or other claimant before the VA that his or her benefit could be denied on the basis of a clear factual error.

Second, a law/fact dichotomy in the scope-of-review provisions would be extremely difficult to apply, and, ironically, could actually increase the amount of judicial time and energy expended on the review of VA cases. Few questions that come before the VA are pure fact or pure law questions. Rather, they are usually a mix of fact and law. If a court were permitted to review only questions of law, it might apply the law/fact distinction in a very strict fashion and refuse to hear many cases in which there is a significant legal question. Or, a court might stretch the concept of a "legal" question almost to the breaking point so as to assume jurisdiction over cases with compelling factual issues. In any event, it is not clear that the spirit of the law/fact distinction would be respected, and it seems likely that there would be a wide divergence in various courts' handling of VA cases.

Further, if a law/fact distinction were enacted, attorneys appealing VA decisions to court would find it necessary, in order to fulfill their responsibilities to their clients, to do their utmost to characterize each issue in their cases as involving a question of law. This would mean that reviewing courts frequently would be called upon first to address difficult threshold questions as to which of the issues presented, if any, it may consider. Where the court decided not to consider a case or issue on the grounds that it involved only questions of fact, those decisions could often be appealed to a higher court. Thus, a law/fact distinction could result in a very substantial, wasteful demand on judicial resources for the resolution of issues unrelated to a review of the merits of the VA claims being appealed. There is a reasonable likelihood that such expenditure of judicial resources on deciding jurisdictional questions could exceed the utilization of those resources needed to decide certain factual issues under the strict, very limited scope-of-review provision in the committee bill.

For these reasons, Mr. President, I believe that the specific but limited opportunity provided for in the bill for court review of factual decisions in VA claims decisions is the most appropriate course to take.

With reference to the change to the provisions relating to attorneys' fees, S. 349 as introduced would have amended current law, which precludes an attorney from receiving more than $10 for representing a veteran or other claimant before the VA, so as to allow a veteran to hire an attorney and pay more than $10 when the claim was at the regional office level and the veteran had received a "statement of the case"—the document provided to a veteran following the initial rejection of a claim and before the first substantive appeal. Under S. 349 as reported by the committee, the lifting of the $10 limitation is delayed until after the Board of Veterans' Appeals has rendered a decision on a claim. The committee made this change to demonstrate more clearly its view that a veteran claimant's first choice for representation before the VA should generally be a veterans' service officer. These service officers—generally employees of veterans' organizations—do a fine job representing veteran claimants, without charge, before the VA. There is a real need for them to continue to serve veterans in this way. At the same time, there is a need to provide a basis for some attorney participation in the context of providing access to judicial review.

So that an attorney entering a case after a decision by the Board could have the opportunity to have an impact on the administrative record before seeking court review and also to create the greatest likelihood that claims will be resolved before the VA rather than in court, S. 349 as it is before the Senate would further amend current law in two ways: First, it would mandate by law that a claim before the VA be reopened upon the presentation of new and material evidence following a Board decision, rather than leaving it discretionary as it is under current law; and second, it would add a new discretionary basis—"for good cause shown"—for the Board to reopen a claim. Thus, an attorney entering a case after a Board decision would be able, upon the presentation of new evidence, to have the case reopened by the VA and could, for good cause shown, petition the VA to reopen such a case.

Mr. President, as I noted earlier, there are a number of other changes that the committee made to S. 349. These changes are fully described in the committee report, so I will not go into them at this time. It is enough to note that I believe that these changes which were developed in committee should enhance the likelihood that the bill will achieve the committee's goal of providing specific limited access to court for review of individual benefit decisions and of causing the least disruption possible to the current claims adjudication system and to the Federal judiciary.

CONTINUING NEED FOR LEGISLATION

Mr. President, in the statement that I made in January 1981 when S. 349 was introduced which I referred to earlier, I discussed in detail the reasons that I believe that judicial review legislation is needed. I continue to believe in this need, because of the reasons I mentioned then as well because of events since then.

As I noted in my earlier statement, one compelling reason for providing for judicial review is to attempt to insure fairness to individual claimants before the VA. In saying this, I do not mean to indicate a belief that the Board of Veterans' Appeals in any way intends to deny such fairness or that, despite the Board's best efforts, there is a routine denial of fairness. To the contrary, I believe that the members of the Board are fairminded, conscientious individuals who make a concerted effort to carry out their adjudicatory responsibilities in an evenhanded fashion and that, by and large, most claimants before the VA are treated fairly. However, I have long been concerned that the tremendous volume of claims handled by the Board provides a significant opportunity for some injustices to occur. On the basis of current trends, the number of claims handled by the Board will continue to increase, thereby increasing the possibility of some unintended injustices. At an oversight hearing on the Board's activities before a House Veterans' Affairs Subcommittee earlier this year, the Board Chairman, Kenneth Eaton, in testimony prepared for the hearing, stated:

> For the past 5 or 6 years the number of appeals has outstripped our ability to handle them. At this time we see no letup in new appeals. In fiscal year 1981 veterans and other claimants filed a record number—68,183—notices of disagreement. For the first half of fiscal year 1982, NOD's came in at a rate more than 3-percent greater than a year earlier.

It seems difficult to believe that with this great volume of claims and the pressure to reach decisions on them in a timely fashion, injustices will not occur that could be remedied by judicial review.

Mr. President, the other principal support for judicial review legislation is the need to establish a basis for the review of questionable agency actions restricting, withholding, or withdrawing VA benefits, actions that can only increase as there is greater pressure within the executive branch to realize cost savings in current programs. There are many examples of such actions, such as efforts by the VA to collect for the cost of health care provided to veterans who happen to be VA employees; attempts by the agency, at the direction of the Office of Management and Budget, to restrict beneficiary travel reimbursement for eligible veterans; allegations that some VA stations are applying very stringent standards in cases in which Vietnam veterans are seeking to be granted service connection for post-traumatic stress disorder; and the VA's drawing overly restrictive regulations to implement the targeted GI bill delimiting-date extension enacted in Public Law 97-72.

In each of these cases and in other similar cases, the lack of access to court review has serious implications. If the veterans affected by the various VA actions had access to court to challenge the particular actions, the individuals most directly affected by these actions would be able to be heard by an entity outside of the VA. In a similar way, the VA's handling of claims based on exposure to agent orange or to radiation from the detonation of a nuclear weapon would benefit from outside review by allowing those who believe they have been harmed to have their claims tested in an independent forum.

Mr. President, in making this point, I do not want to be understood as suggesting that the VA is wrong on all or any of these issues. Rather, I am suggesting that outside review by the independent branch of Government established in our constitutional framework to carry out the role of determining whether action is legal would benefit all parties involved. The VA would have its processes subjected to appropriate scrutiny and, to the extent the agency's actions were upheld, would be vindicated. Likewise, to the extent the agency's actions were struck down, steps could be taken to improve the process so as to insure that the agency is fulfilling its mission to serve veterans in the best possible fashion. I am concerned that agency action that does not have the benefit of outside scrutiny may fail to address fully the legitimate needs of those the agency exists to serve, and I believe that providing for judicial review would correct this shortcoming.

A final need for judicial review legislation is to help clarify the state of the law on the scope of the current law provision that bars judicial review, section 211(a) of title 38. At present, there are some important differences between the various U.S. Courts of Appeals regarding the sweep of this prohibition, and I am concerned that the VA contributes to this confusion by raising the 211(a) bar in cases in which it is not appropriate. Thus, the place where a veteran seeks to bring an action may well determine the outcome of the case, a result that should be avoided.

Some courts have held, correctly I believe, that the 211(a) bar applies only to claims for benefits by individual veterans. The VA has not accepted this view. Hence, on the issue of the VA's raising section 211(a) in cases involving other than individual benefit decisions, earlier this year I wrote the VA Administrator regarding my concerns about what I saw as an inappropriate reliance on 211(a) in the context of a case—Gott against Nimmo, presently pending in the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit—involving a challenge to the way in which various guidelines were issued relating to the VA's handling of claims for benefits based on exposure to nuclear-detonation radiation. It is clear that no individual claims for benefits are involved in this case, and yet attorneys representing the VA have raised the bar of 211(a) in both the trial court—unsuccessfully—and presently in the court of appeals. The most appropriate way to clarify the situation, in my view, is to remove the 211(a) bar and thereby provide specified, limited access to court for veterans and others with claims before the VA.

Mr. President, I ask that my letter to Administrator Nimmo that I mentioned dated March 10, 1982, and his reply, dated March 24, 1982, be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The letters referred to follow:

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON VETERANS' AFFAIRS,
Washington, D.C., March 10, 1982.

Hon. ROBERT P. NIMMO,
Administrator of Veterans' Affairs,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR BOB, I have been following the case of Gott v. Nimmo (formerly, Gott v. Cleland) in which the Veterans' Administration's use of certain documents in the resolution of claims for benefits based on exposure to nuclear radiation is challenged. Most recently, I reviewed the District Court's Supplemental Memorandum Opinion of February 17, 1982, and I am writing to request an update on the agency's plans in response to that opinion. Specifically, I am interested in knowing whether the agency plans to comply with Judge Green's order that, within ninety days, the VA (and, in the case of the VA/Defense Nuclear Agency Memorandum of Understanding, the VA and the DNA) publish notice of proposed rulemaking to replace the documents invalidated by the Court's September 30, 1981, order. Aside from the legalities involved, I believe that taking the action directed would reflect good public policy, and I would urge full and timely compliance with the Court's order.

There can be little question that the agency should have a uniform, written policy to deal with claims based on exposure to radiation, and inviting public participation in the development of that policy can help both to ensure that the policy is as well-informed as possible and to create a greater sense of public confidence in whatever policy is ultimately developed and adopted.

Regarding the Memorandum of Understanding, clearly the VA has a genuine need for the type of information provided by DNA, and I believe that public participation in the development of a new memorandum of understanding between VA and DNA should help reduce some of the current mistrust that is felt by veterans who were exposed to radiation and by the survivors of veterans who were exposed, who are seeking redress from the Government.

Should you disagree with my views on this matter and ask the Justice Department to appeal Judge Green's ruling, I strongly urge that you insist that section 211(a) of title 38 not be raised as a bar to the consideration of the merits of this litigation because this case clearly does not involve individual claims for benefits. In testimony that the VA submitted in conjunction with the Committee's July 15, 1981, hearing on judicial review, it was noted that the agency continues "to believe that there should be access to the courts for challenges to the constitutionality of veterans' benefits legislation, regulations, and procedures" and that the agency was "cognizant of an emerging trend . . . toward permitting judicial review of allegations that a regulation was promulgated in excess of the Administrator's authority or is otherwise contrary to law." As to the latter point, the VA's testimony was that "[t]his growing body of case law would seem to provide a sufficient basis for review of substantive agency actions of broad, binding application. . ." and that only "judicial review of individual benefit decisions" should continue to be precluded. You made this same point in your written response to a question I asked at your confirmation hearing when you stated:

"Basically, I agree that the regulations of the VA, which constitute the Agency's interpretation and implementation of laws enacted by Congress, should be reviewable by a court for consistency with the statutory mandate, on the same basis as other Federal agencies. This is in fact occurring now."

Further, in a follow-up written response to a question I asked at the Committee's July 15 hearing on this issue, Robert Coy, then Acting General Counsel, responded

"I have asked that the section [211(a)] not be raised in response to a clear allegation that a statute, regulation, or procedure is unconstitutional, or that a regulation or procedure exceeds the statutory authority of the Administrator."

Given what I thought, therefore, was agency policy on raising section 211(a) as a bar to court review, I was surprised to note in the Supplemental Memorandum Opinion that attorneys appearing representing the VA apparently were still seeking to raise that bar to judicial review in this case, and I would hope that, should this case be appealed, no further attempt to raise it will be made.

I look forward to your providing me with your views on this matter at your earliest convenience. Thank you for your continuing cooperation.

With warm regards,
Cordially,

ALAN CRANSTON,
Ranking Minority Member.

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, D.C., March 24, 1982.

Hon. ALAN CRANSTON,
Ranking Minority Member,
Committee on Veterans' Affairs,
U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR CRANSTON: I am pleased to respond to your letter of March 10, 1982, in which you requested an update on, and offered several recommendations regarding, the Veterans Administration's position in Gott v. Nimmo, No. 80-0906 (D.D.C., Supplemental Memorandum Opinion and Order, February 17, 1982).

Initially, I would advise you that our counsel at the Department of Justice filed a protective notice of appeal on February 16, 1982, and that we plan to pursue further consideration of this case before the Court of Appeals. Also, in response to the district court's February 17 Order, to which you referred in your letter, the Government filed a motion on March 4 seeking, in the alternative, clarification of the order or a stay pending appeal. Finally, with regard to the non-reviewability statute at 38 U.S.C. § 211(a), the General Counsel advises me that its use in defending this lawsuit is appropriate and is consistent with Agency policy as expressed to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs last year. A brief explanation of these positions follows.

Reduced to its bare essentials, this case began as a challenge to the validity of three Government documents. They are a Memorandum of Understanding by which the Department of Veterans Benefits (DVB) and the Defense Nuclear Agency (DNA) agreed on exchanges of information in development of ionizing radiation exposure data for veterans claiming disability resulting from participation in nuclear weapon tests; a section of DVB Program Guide 21-1 which contains information relating to such claims; and a section of DVB Manual 21-1 which sets forth internal VA procedures for development of information from claimants as to any possible in-service exposure to radiation from nuclear weapon detonations. Counsel alleged, on behalf of several plaintiffs, that the three documents constitute rules or regulations and therefore should have been promulgated via the notice-and-comment rulemaking procedures by which other VA regulations are issued, in accordance with the provisions of the Administrative Procedure Act at 5 U.S.C. § 553, as implemented by VA at 38 C.F.R. § 1.12. An additional contention was that two of the three documents were issued in violation of the Freedom of Information Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552, since they were not published for public information in the Federal Register (the program guide provision was so published). The court, however, has not reached that issue in the litigation.

Our defense of this litigation has been based on two major points. First, we believe the challenged documents are not rules or regulations, and contain no criteria which affect the substantive rights of individual claimants. Second, section 211(a) precludes the court from reviewing the merits of VA's handling of radiation cases because such a review would involve intervention of the court in the adjudication of individual claims.

These positions were not formulated without careful analysis, nor have we been unmindful of the Committee's concerns about the scope of section 211(a), particularly in the context of your current consideration of judicial review legislation. I continue to believe, as I stated in a written response to your question at my confirmation hearing, that VA regulations should be, and are, reviewable in the Federal courts. This principle was further explained by the Acting General Counsel last summer, when he indicated to the Committee that "legislation, regulations, and procedures" are judicially reviewable, as are "substantive Agency actions of broad, binding application."

Section 211(a) has been properly limited by the courts so that it does not protect every decision, policy, or action of the VA from judicial scrutiny. Those Agency rules and procedures of broad and binding application which affect the rights of a number of claimants to VA benefits are not protected by section 211(a). The way the VA processes and decides an individual benefit claim is clearly beyond the reach of the Federal courts, however. Because the three written provisions challenged in Gott do not, in our opinion, provide criteria for decision-making, and are merely procedural and instructional, they do not dictate the substantive decision in any individual case. In other words, while they tell the VA adjudicative employee what to do before he decides a claim, and give him some background about the state of the scientific knowledge of effects of ionizing radiation, they clearly do not tell him how to decide the claim. Similarly, they do not provide set criteria against which the adjudicator must judge the merits of the claim, nor do they impose additional duties on claimants. Since no VA regulatory criteria are involved, the conclusions of the VA as to the casual connection between radiation and any given disability are embodied only in its individual claim decisions, and review of those individual claims decisions is precluded by section 211(a).

The General Counsel has not changed the Agency's position on the use of section 211(a) as articulated to the Committee last summer. Section 211(a) will not be raised by the Veterans Administration, nor by Department of Justice at our recommendation, when there is either a clear challenge to the constitutionality of a statute, regulation or procedure or an allegation that a regulation or procedure is inconsistent with law. This is the general policy you cite in your letter, which was enunciated by the Acting General Counsel in his written response following the hearing of July 15, 1981, on S. 349. However, that response goes on to acknowledge that there are many cases where the allegations are not so clear. We stated that there existed "gray areas" of VA administrative issuances not clearly identifiable as binding regulations or procedures and that cases challenging these materials might be defended on the basis of section 211(a). We also cited the case of Carter v. Cleland, 643 F.2d 1 (D.C. Cir. 1980), as an example of this type of case.

The Carter case is significant because it recognizes that section 211(a) prohibits court review of administrative guidelines issued under the authority of the Administrator of Veterans Affairs, where such guidelines do not have binding effect on claimants for benefits. The Court of Appeals held that such matters are within the Administrator's discretion in handling individual benefit decisions, particularly where, as is true in Gott, the guidelines are not binding on the BVA. That rationale is clearly applicable to the Gott case, in which the documents in issue are DVB issuances not binding on BVA, are concerned merely with the develoment, exchange, and dissemination of information related to radiation claims, and do not establish criteria for entitlement to benefits.

I enclose copies of the challenged documents, for your ready reference. They were initially shared with the Committee at the time of their issuance. See Veterans Claims for Disabilities from Nuclear Weapons Testing: Hearing before the Comm. on Veterans' Affairs, U.S. Senate, 96th Cong., 1st Sess. 160-168, 183-187, 188-189 (1979). As we have endeavored to demonstrate to the court, none establishes binding standards for claim adjudication.

When the district court held the challenged documents invalid for failure to have been promulgated under APA procedure (Memorandum Opinion and Order, September 30, 1981), VA complied by rescinding the program guide and manual provisions, which had been distributed to the regional offices, and by ceasing use of the procedures set forth in the memorandum of understanding, in cooperation with DNA. We did not, however, cease carrying out our responsibility to render decisions on claims, based upon all available evidence. The court's ultimate response was the February 17 Order, requiring VA and/or DNA to promulgate rules on "methodologies and standards to calculate radiation exposure and harm." As noted above, we have asked the court to clarify exactly what we should do to be in compliance. If conducting rulemaking on the three challenged documents would suffice, we would do so, pending appeal, even though we believe the court is mistaken. However, if the court is ordering VA to publish hard standards for radiation-claim adjudication, such as set levels of radiation exposure which would be required to establish entitlement to disability benefits, we believe it is exceeding its authority in this case. Not only do we believe the scientific uncertainties as to what levels of radiation attribute to particular adverse health effects preclude such rulemaking at this time, but we also believe an order, without a statutory basis, to issue regulations violates the discretion delegated by the Congress to the Administrator, in 38 U.S.C. § 210(c), to determine what regulations are necessary or appropriate.

As the litigation has progressed, it has become apparent that plaintiffs' counsel is primarily seeking court review of the methodology by which DNA researches or reconstructs radiation exposure data on individuals when VA requests it. Both agencies involved and the Justice Department agree that any such methodologies are beyond the scope of this litigation. Contrary to plaintiffs' and the court's impression, the VA-DNA memorandum did not establish or introduce methodologies for calculation of radiation exposure. It merely mentioned that they existed and would be used, modified, or replaced as necessary to accomplish the goals of DNA's research. See Memorandum of Understanding, paragraphs 2, 5b(2), 7b. Because the memorandum contained no such substantive matter, public participation was not sought in its development.

My principal concern in this matter is that veterans and their survivors receive the fairest and most sympathetic consideration of their claims for VA disability benefits. The purpose of the documents at issue in Gott was to increase the efficiency of our efforts to secure from DNA the most accurate radiation exposure data possible, for consideration along with all other evidence on file in each individual case. With or without the documents, VA decision-making on claims can proceed, under the statutory and regulatory criteria governing claims for "service connection," at 38 U.S.C. chapters 11 and 71, 38 C.F.R. parts 3 and 19.

At such time as the scientific community may reach a consensus as to the health effects of ionizing radiation at certain levels of exposure, I would consider it wise to promulgate uniform standards based upon those biomedical principles. At present, I believe the discretion of VA adjudication personnel should not be hampered by strict numerical considerations. For example, several claims have been allowed with no hard evidence of a particular level of radiation exposure, because the decision-making personnel believed that the record as a whole, considered in light of the doctrine of reasonable doubt, warranted allowance. I am concerned that attempts to introduce any dose/response tables into VA regulations at present could well lead to the denial of claims which our decision makers, within the broader discretion they now possess, might allow.

I appreciate your interest in this litigation, and am committed to resolving the many questions remaining in the area of ionizing radiation's health effects on veterans.

Sincerely,

ROBERT P. NIMMO, Administrator.

CONCLUSION

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, approval of S. 349 by the Senate today will, I believe, mark this as an important day for all our Nation's veterans. This legislation promises to those who served their country the same right of independent review of the fairness with which their Government treats them that is available to virtually all other citizens.

In closing, I want to express my gratitude to my good friend from Wyoming (Mr. SIMPSON) for moving forward on this legislation of such fundamental importance. He and his staff—especially associate counsel H. Scott Wallace, chief counsel Tom Harvey, and legislative director Julie Susman—have been fair, thorough, and most constructive in approaching S. 349. The chairman is owed a great vote of thanks by all veterans for his leadership on the legislation before the Senate today.

In addition, I want to thank the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, our colleague from South Carolina (Mr. THURMOND), for his cooperation in making it possible for this bill to come before the Senate today.

Mr. President, I also congratulate my good friend from Colorado, Senator GARY HART, for his long commitment to the cause of judicial review. He has been well and ably assisted on this issue by Bill Holen, a member of his staff who has taken a strong interest in this legislation. I also want to express my gratitude to my colleagues on the Veterans' Affairs Committee who are cosponsors of the measure, Senator DECONCINI, an original cosponsor, and Senators SIMPSON, RANDOLPH, MATSUNAGA, MITCHELL, STAFFORD, KASTEN, DENTON, MURKOWSKI, and SPECTER, as well as Senators BURDICK, RIEGLE, and COHEN who are also cosponsors.

I also note the very hard work on this legislation by members of the minority staff on the committee, including Bill Brew, who has been the principal committee resource on this legislation for the last 4 years, as well as Ed Scott, Jon Steinberg, Ingrid Post, and Charlotte Hughes.

Mr. President, S. 349 as it comes before the Senate today is a measure worthy of my colleagues' support, and I urge that they give it their unanimous backing.

Mr. HART. Mr. President, today Senator SIMPSON, chairman of the Senate Veterans' Affairs Committee, has brought to the floor a measure which will grant veterans the earned right of judicial review of final Veterans' Administration determinations and will significantly reform the administrative procedures of that agency.

The Veterans' Administration Adjudication Procedure and Judicial Review Act, S. 349, as amended by the Veterans Affairs' Committee, reflects several years of hard work by individuals and organizations which are interested in the rights of the American veteran. I first introduced legislation to open the Veterans' Administration to the scrutiny of the Federal court in May of 1976. Since then I have persisted in my efforts to insure that veterans be afforded all their constitutional rights to due process of law in dealings with the Veterans' Administration. Joining me in that effort has been Senator CRANSTON, whose leadership in the 96th Congress led to the successful consideration by this body of S. 330, a bill similar to the amended measure we are considering today.

Mr. President, the purpose of S. 349, which Senator CRANSTON and I introduced on Juanuary 30, 1981, as amended by the committee, is to provide Veterans' Administration claimants the right to judicial review of final decisions of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs claims for benefits, the codification of certain VA adjudication procedures, to apply certain provisions of the Administrative Procedures Act to the rulemaking procedures of the VA, and to provide for payment of reasonable fees to attorneys for rendering legal services for representing claimants before the VA after a final denial of the claim by the Board of Veterans' Appeals and representing claimants in judicial proceedings.

Mr. President, since I first introduced legislation to reform the administrative procedures within the Veterans' Administration nearly 6 years ago, the Senate Veterans' Affairs Committee under the leadership of Senator CRANSTON and Senator SIMPSON have held eight hearings on the concept of judicial review of VA decisions. Legal scholars, veteran organizations, the Veterans' Administration, the Department of Justice and individual veterans have all provided a wealth of substantive evidence to support the compelling need for the enactment of S. 349.

When I first introduced legislation to provide for judicial review of final VA determinations in the 94th Congress, it was at the urging of Colorado veterans who felt that the denial of that right relegates veterans to the status of second-class citizens. The veterans of Colorado could not understand why they were denied the right to court review of their claims, if denied by the VA, when almost every other Federal bureaucratic action affecting any corporation, welfare recipient, social security recipient and prisoner is afforded judicial review by the Federal courts.

Mr. President, the central issue in the debate on this bill is whether we are going to afford the American veteran the same constitutional rights we grant other citizens in this country. Judicial review is important in granting the veteran adequate protection of his rights as a citizen, and it will provide improved oversight of VA procedures and activities by an independent body.

American veterans have been denied for too long their fundamental right to simple justice in the adjudications of Veterans' Administration claims. Under the current VA procedures veterans have no right to appeal outside the agency, are effectively denied access to an attorney, and cannot question in Federal court validity of the VA rule and regulations promulgated by the VA. S. 349 will correct these deficiencies and finally restore the full constitutional rights of the American veteran.

In conclusion, Mr. President, I want to express my appreciation to Senator SIMPSON, distinguished chairman of the Veterans' Affairs Committee and Senator CRANSTON, the ranking minority member, for their work and strong support of this important measure. I would also like to recognize the excellent work of the Veterans' Affairs Committee staff, particularly Mr. Scott Wallace of the committee staff and Mr. Bill Brew and Mr. Tom Harvey of the minority staff, for the many hours of diligent work to bring this measure to the floor for consideration.

Mr. President, I believe this legislation is essential in insuring this Nation protects the rights of its veterans. There is no logical reason for Congress to deny the men and women who have honorably served their country in times of war and peace the right to simple justice. I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BAKER. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

CONVENTION ON THE PHYSICAL PROTECTION OF NUCLEAR MATERIAL IMPLEMENTATION ACT OF 1982

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask the distinguished minority leader once more if he is in a position to consider calendar item No. 744, which is H.R. 5228.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. That has been cleared on our side, Mr. President.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask that the Senate consider calendar order No. 744, H.R. 5228.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 5228) to amend title 18 of the United States Code to implement the Convention on the Physical Protection of Nuclear Material, and for other purposes.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

UP AMENDMENT 1261

Mr. BAKER. I send to the desk a corrected amendment proposed by the distinguished Senator from South Carolina (Mr. THURMOND).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER) for the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. THURMOND) proposes an unprinted amendment numbered 1261:

On page 2, line 13, after the word "thereby" insert the word "knowingly".

On page 3, line 18, insert the word "or" at the end of the line; beginning with line 24 on page 3, strike out all through line 9 on page 4; and in line 10, page 4, before the word "shall" insert "or attempts or conspires to do so,".

On page 4, strike out lines 11 through 19 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(b) The punishment for an offense under this section is—

"(1) a fine of not more than $250,000; and

"(2) imprisonment for any term of years or for life if the offender while committing an offense under subsection (a)—

"(A) knowingly causes the death of any person; or

"(B) under circumstances manifesting"; and on page 4, line 24, strike out "(ii)" and insert in lieu thereof "(C)".

On page 4, line 25, strike out "case; and" and insert in lieu thereof "case."; and on page 5 strike out lines 1 through 3.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, this amendment to H.R. 5228 would accomplish a number of related goals.

First, the offense defined in section (a)(1)(A) for causing death, serious bodily injury, or substantial property damage in the course of unlawfully acquiring, using or disposing of nuclear material would be amended to require a "knowing" rather than an "intentional" state of mind with respect to the "result" elements of the offense. As amended, rather than requiring a "conscious objective" to cause the harm, the actor would be guilty if he engaged in the prohibited conduct with an "awareness of or a firm belief in the substantial certainty of causing" the death, the bodily injury, or the property damage. The culpability proposed by the amendment is a standard often used in modern homicide statutes for murder. See section 1601, Final Report of the National Commission on Reform of Federal Criminal Laws (1971). In the context of this extremely dangerous conduct involving nuclear material the "knowing" standard is by far the preferable one.

Second, the penalty subsection is amended to add "knowingly causes the death of any person" to the other aggravating factors justifying a possible life term of imprisonment. This is the only appropriate maximum penalty for such an offense. The penalty provisions are also amended to apply this higher penalty to every offense defined in the act when the specified aggravating factors are present. H.R. 5228 as it passed the House would permit a life term under specified aggravating circumstances only for the offenses in subsections (a)(1) and (a)(3) dealing with homicide, assault, and robbery. While these probably are the crimes most likely to leave an aftermath of death and serious bodily injury, who can say that the unauthorized transfer of a nuclear weapon to a terrorist group under subsection (a)(2)(B) that is used to kill or injure was not done under circumstances manifesting an extreme indifference to human life. Similarly, with respect to extortion under subsection (a)(4), a life term is clearly appropriate for the offender who systematically kills hostages in order to obtain delivery of a nuclear bomb to a foreign power. Even the so-called "threat" offenses in subsections (a)(5) and (a)(6) in the nuclear context contain the seeds of panic and potential death and serious bodily injury under the specified aggravating factors. No one knows what would happen if some known irresponsible group threatened to set off a nuclear bomb in New York City. It is almost impossible to predict the various circumstances under which these offenses may occur. In deciding an appropriate penalty, the existence of the aggravating factors justifying a higher penalty for one offense should apply to all offenses.

Third, this amendment alters the bill to clearly retain without change the current case law on attempt and conspiracy. It accomplishes this result by simply deleting the definitions in the bill and inserting in lieu thereof the phrase "or attempts or conspires to do so." No other Federal statute proposes to define these terms. The exact and appropriate definitions have long been in dispute between the House and Senate in the context of the criminal code bills. The House formulation of both attempt and conspiracy in this act have potential serious problems. For example, both of these offenses are framed in terms of a "specific intent" to commit another offense where it is strongly arguable that the appropriate mental state is the mental state required by the crime attempted or that is the object of the conspiracy. The implications of this issue cut across the whole criminal code. This legislation is not the place to try to resolve it. Accordingly, the amendment simply keeps current case law relating to the definition of attempt and conspiracy.

In addition, the amendment concerning attempt and conspiracy is drafted to apply these concepts to all offenses in this bill, including the "treat" offenses in subsections (a)(5) and (a)(6). The House excluded this coverage on a theory that first amendment rights were somehow involved because the offenses involve making threats. Current conspiracy law does not make such a distinction as to "threat" crimes and there does not appear any good reason why, under this act, a person should not be chargeable for conspiracy to threaten to blow up New York City with an atomic bomb. An unsuccessful attempt to make such a threat is probably a rare possibility in the real world but there is no sound policy reason not to cover it. It clearly does not violate the first amendment.

Finally, the amendment proposed would change the penalty provisions so as to grade conspiracy the same as the completed offense rather than the 5-year penalty applicable under the general conspiracy provisions of 18 U.S.C. 371. This conforms to the modern practice for grading offenses. See, for example, congressional assassination and kidnaping (18 U.S.C. 351) and Presidential assassination and kidnaping (18 U.S.C. 1751).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendment and the third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Calendar No. 743, S. 1446, the Senate companion bill, be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECESS UNTIL 2 P.M.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I observe that the hour of 12 o'clock has arrived, if I observe correctly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will now stand in recess until 2 p.m.

Thereupon, at 12:01 p.m., the Senate recessed until 2 p.m.; whereupon, the Senate reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer (Mr. MATTINGLY).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair, in his capacity as a Senator from Georgia, suggests the absence of a quorum.

The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, what is the unfinished business?

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further morning business? If not, morning business is closed.

TEMPORARY INCREASE IN THE PUBLIC DEBT LIMIT

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will resume consideration of the pending business which the clerk will state.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution (H.J. Res. 520) to provide for a temporary increase in the public debt limit.

The Senate resumed consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, in a moment I am going to send a cloture motion to the desk against further debate on the Helms amendment to the Helms amendment.

Mr. President, later in the day I hope to be able to conclude an agreement that will provide by unanimous consent for a time certain for this vote to occur on Thursday if indeed cloture is not invoked tomorrow. If cloture is invoked tomorrow, then under the provisions of the rule no further action will be required.

CLOTURE MOTION

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I send a cloture motion to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The cloture motion having been presented under rule XXII, the Chair, without objection, directs the clerk to read the motion.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

CLOTURE MOTION

We the undersigned Senators, in accordance with the provisions of rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, hereby move to bring to a close debate on amendment number 2038 to amendment number 2031, as modified, to the committee substitute to House Joint Resolution 520, a joint resolution to provide for a temporary increase in the public debt limit:

Jesse Helms, Roger W. Jepsen, Jeremiah Denton, Paul Laxalt, Paula Hawkins, Orrin G. Hatch, Bob Kasten, Don Nickles, John P. East, Steve Symms, Strom Thurmond, Charles E. Grassley, Edward Zorinsky, Jake Garn, James Abdnor, Bob Dole, and Howard Baker.

TEMPORARY INCREASE IN THE PUBLIC DEBT LIMIT

The Senate continued with the consideration of House Joint Resolution 520.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, an order has been entered that no tabling motion be in order today. I had hoped that would avoid any conflict over the question of who has possession of the floor. I do not see many people on the floor. I see the Senator from North Carolina here, and one or two of my diligent and dedicated staff. But until we have somebody else here I do not know anything else to do except to suggest the absence of a quorum, which I will do shortly.

But, Mr. President, once again I do not want to preach but at some point we have to move on with this matter, and I would urge Senators to come to the floor and make whatever presentation they wish on this subject.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAKER. I yield the floor, Mr. President.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I think I am now moving into the 35th second of my participation in this filibuster. I have not chosen to consume the time of the Senate because everything has been said time and time again that can be said or perhaps should be said on the subject.

Furthermore, for the past 3 or 4 weeks I have been willing, in fact anxious, to have a vote on my two amendments, and that is why I have not elected to participate in the extended debate which is being conducted by my good friends and colleagues who are opposed to my amendments. Variously they say that my amendments are going to be defeated. They say that, on the one hand, and, on the other hand, they say, "No, we will not allow a vote to occur."

I find it passing strange that if they have enough votes to defeat one or both of my amendments why do they not proceed and let the Senate vote them down so that the distinguished majority leader will have one less problem to deal with, and he does have a plate full of problems trying to put together the legislative schedule of the Senate for the remainder of this session.

I know that both of these issues are emotional issues. Both are emotional insofar as I am concerned. It gives me no pleasure to be in the eye of the hurricane on the abortion issue because I can see the frustrations on both sides, and it is not without regard for the opinions of others that I have felt obliged to represent the way I feel on this issue.

You would have to be callous not to understand the feelings of those who favor abortion on demand. But, on the other hand, we are dealing with the ultimate right of all, we are dealing with the question of whether we, as a Nation and as individuals, do not become a part of what we condone. We live in a time when 1.5 million babies die, have their lives terminated deliberately, each year in this country.

I remember, Mr. President, 2 or 3 years ago I attended a fundraising function in Durham, N.C. for the intensive care facility of the children's ward of Duke University Medical Center. Arnold Palmer was there, Perry Como was there, as were others. All of us went there to raise money for this facility, which had saved the lives of countless thousands of babies who could lie in my hand, premature children, prematurely born children.

Later that day I went over to the intensive care division, and the physician who heads that fine facility took me on a tour of it. I was dressed in the appropriate clothes, and we went around and we saw these little lives being preserved by the latest technology and by the most dedicated men and women who were scurrying about making sure that the temperature was just right, and the blood pressure was just right.

Then the physician took me across the hall to the waiting room, and there must have been 8 or 10 young couples there, the mothers and fathers of those little ones, and they were down on their knees praying that their child in each case across the hall would survive.

That was Sunday, Mr. President. I flew into Washington that evening, came to the Senate floor the next day at noon, and the first order of business was the question of whether the taxpayers' money should be used for the purpose of deliberately terminating the lives of innocent unborn children.

I remember engaging in the debate that afternoon and thinking about the contradiction between what I had seen the day before and what I was hearing on this Senate floor that afternoon.

Still in all, Mr. President, I recognize that this is an emotional issue, a polarizing issue, a difficult political issue for some Senators, but I say again that, in my judgment, we have become a part of what we condone.

Many of my friends in North Carolina tell me this abortion issue and my stand on it will cost me my seat in the Senate. If that be the case, so be it. My conscience will not allow me to walk away from this issue.

I have noted with some interest the extended remarks of Senators who are opposed to my amendment with reference to abortion, the pending amendment, and over and over again they have lectured the Senate about the Constitution.

They have deplored what they have described as being an assault on the Constitution and on the Federal judiciary.

I have heard those comments with interest, and some amusement, because clearly they have not read the amendment.

Would you believe, Mr. President, that the amendment about which these Senators complain would strip the courts of jurisdiction does not strip the courts of jurisdiction? In fact, it urges and provides for expedited consideration by the Supreme Court of State abortion laws. Because there are many of us, Mr. President, who feel that Roe against Wade was a serious and tragic error by the Supreme Court and that the Court ought to have the opportunity—and in fact has the duty—to reconsider Roe against Wade.

Now, having said that, Mr. President, on this other subject of limiting the jurisdiction of the courts over cases involving voluntary school prayer, I have heard quotations from any number of liberal legal spokesmen to the effect that it would be an awesome thing for the Congress to get in the business of limiting the jurisdiction of the Federal courts.

I was talking to a former distinguished Member of this Senate from North Carolina, the Honorable Sam J. Ervin, Jr., who is one of the leading constitutional scholars in this country and is justifiably acknowledged as such. If I remember correctly, he said that he had counted 57 times—57 times—when the Senate had voted to limit the jurisdiction of the courts. And I do not recall seeing the pillars of justice come tumbling down as a result of any one of those 57.

As a matter of fact, the same Senators who are rather piously describing themselves as defenders of the Constitution and of the Federal courts voted just a few weeks ago for the so-called Voting Rights Act extension which clearly limits the jurisdiction of the Federal courts. So what they are saying, Mr. President, by any fair interpretation, is that it is all right to limit the jurisdiction of the courts when they want to do it, but it is not all right when somebody else thinks the courts have overstepped their bounds.

And I have been amazed at the cavalier manner in which the opponents of my amendment have glossed over article III, sections 1 and 2 of the Constitution, which clearly sets forth the right—and I think the duty—of Congress to limit the jurisdiction of the courts when the courts have gone too far.

The Supreme Court went too far when it banned prayer from the schools of this country. The Court went too far when it got into the school busing business, resulting in hundreds of thousands of little children being hauled across cities and counties just to satisfy the whim and caprice of some Federal judge or Federal bureaucrat or combination of the two. And the Court, in the judgment of this Senator, erred badly in the instance of Roe against Wade.

But, Mr. President, aside from the arguments, pro and con, on either of my amendments, what happened to the oft-proclaimed declaration that the Senate should be allowed to work its will?

Now, I readily confess that that late, great, distinguished Senator from Alabama, Jim Allen, and I conducted a few extended debates ourselves. So I know what a filibuster is. I have been on the other side.

But every time Jim Allen and JESSE HELMS tried to say to this Senate, "Whoa, here, take another look," immediately the press rose up as one and said, "They should stop; they should allow the Senate to work its will." And I hear all of the pious declarations that Senator Allen and Senator HELMS were engaging in some sort of dark conspiracy to thwart the will of the Senate. Well, I cannot recall, Mr. President, one instance—one instance—in which Senator Allen and I did not reach an accommodation with the leadership of the Senate.

Now, Senator Allen is dead and gone, and I miss him. He was one of the greatest Senators ever to sit in this body. But I do not recall one time when, after the point was made, he was unwilling, or I was unwilling, to let the Senate vote.

But here we have the spectacle of Senators, who say, "Oh, no. This thing has gone on for 3 or 4 weeks and we are not going to let the Senate vote." And then out of the other side of their mouths they say, "Oh, we have got the votes." Well, if they have the votes, why do they not let the Senate vote?

And, by the way, Mr. President, what has happened to all my liberal editor friends—the Washington Post and the New York Times and others—who have been so quick in the past to condemn those of us who engaged in extended debate? Have they now been struck dumb and blind? Do they not have one word to encourage Senator WEICKER and Senator PACKWOOD and others to let the Senate work its will? Is it just a one-way street with the Washington Post and the New York Times? I think it is. I think it is.

Now, I have been asked by just about every newsperson in this town in the last 24 hours whether we will have enough votes to impose cloture tomorrow. My answer is, I do not know. I do not even know whether we have enough votes to pass either of my amendments, if Senator WEICKER and Senator PACKWOOD would ever let us get to a vote.

I am willing to take my chances, but they are not willing to take their chances. They have tied this Senate up for week after week, day after day, because, apparently, they are afraid to let the Senate work its will.

Now, the distinguished majority leader has stated that the debt ceiling bill must pass. And I know he feels obliged to do whatever he can in that direction. But I would say to the majority leader that his problems will not be over, in terms of consumption of time, if, as, and when a motion to recommit with instructions is made. And certainly the Senate will not be saying goodby to either of these issues if we are denied a vote on my amendments.

If we are denied a vote, then I must exercise my right as a Senator to continue to bring these matters to the attention of the Senate and encourage the Senate to vote on them. There will be appropriations bills, there will be authorization bills, there will be all types of legislation, as long as there is a U.S. Senate. If I should be removed from the picture, there are other Senators who will pick up this torch. There are other Senators who believe in the sanctity of innocent human life. Life will go on.

But I have made an agreement which I shall keep with the majority leader that if I am accorded a vote on these issues, I will not bring them up again this year, whether we are in the postelection session or not.

I want him to understand, and I am sure he does understand, that if I do not get a vote on my two proposals all bets are off.

So it is a matter of what the Senate wants to do. To vote cloture tomorrow does not necessarily mean that a Senator will vote one way or another on the amendment itself. It will simply be a vote to let the Senate work its will.

Mr. President, I do not know how long I have spoken. Let me ask the Chair, how long have I been speaking? Does the Chair know?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Approximately 20 minutes.

Mr. HELMS. Approximately 20 minutes, the Chair says. This is the longest I have spoken since these amendments became the pending business. I do not intend to consume any more of the Senate's time, but let me say again so it will be clear, that I have been willing from the very beginning to take my chances. I have been asking for the Senate to express its will. I think the waste of the Senate's time should be concluded.

Mr. President, I yield the floor and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

DAVID AND DOROTHY NEWHALL HOST THE COUNTY FIELD DAYS

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, one of the most enjoyable parts of being a Senator is the chance to get back home. For my wife and me, home usually means going to Middlesex, Vt., to our former farm, situated in the mountains in central Vermont. It is a lovely area, with a view unmatched anywhere in the country, and the most restful place I have ever been.

I think we enjoy Middlesex so much because of the people who live there. Nothing that the Leahy family has done, or could do, could begin to match all of the special things the residents of this lovely town have accomplished.

Two of the very special people in Middlesex are David and Dorothy Newhall. They have been involved in every aspect of Middlesex life, and most residents feel that the town would not be the same without them. Recently, the Times-Argus in Vermont wrote about the Newhalls and one aspect of their life—the County Field Days. I know how enjoyable these field days are as I have never missed them, but they are especially enjoyable because of Dave's and Dot's work.

I ask unanimous consent that the entire article from the Times-Argus be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Times-Argus, Aug. 4, 1982]

NEWHALLS HOST COUNTY FIELD DAYS

(By Derek L. Kinner)

MIDDLESEX.—For the past five years, Newhall Field here has been the site of the well-attended Washington County Field Days. The hosts, David ("Buffalo") and Dorothy ("Dot") Newhall, find preparation and coordination of the event exhausting but would not have it any other way. To them, it is a labor of love.

"You have to really enjoy people to want to work so hard on a show this large," Dot says. "David begins his two-week vacation one week before the Field Days to mow the field and prepare the cooking shed. The week afterwards he cleans up."

David Newhall is employed as a maintenance mechanic in the state Buildings Division. Besides working full-time for the state, David is also Middlesex fire chief, the town's civil defense director and an inspector for the Capital Fire Mutual Aid System. He also does a lot of work around his home and in his garden.

Being very community-oriented, the Newhalls gladly accepted when they were approached five years ago and asked to host the Washington County Field Days.

"Everything ran smoothly," he says, "and we've held it here ever since. Of course, we've made improvements over the years."

The first Washington County Field Days celebration was held 15 years ago on Upper Terrace Street, Montpelier, at Eugene Joslin's farm. At the time it was mainly a cattle show.

Later it was moved to Kneeland Flats, but the owner of that property died and it was moved to Newhall Field, where it has been since. Today, Washington County Field Days not only offers a 4-H cattle show but several other exhibits, such as an open horse show, a small animal display, garden displays and musical entertainment.

"We'll have a parachute jump for the first time this year," Dot says. Hawk Leno, an experienced jumper, came to the Newhalls and offered his skills. He will fall from the sky into the tractor rodeo ring.

Washington County Field Days Inc., a nonprofit corporation, sponsors the event to help 4-H clubs show their animals. Money earned is cycled back into future fairs. The event also receives a stipend from the state.

"Without the stipend, it would be nearly impossible to hold the Field Days," David says, "It takes a large amount of money to buy the food and refreshments."

The Newhalls say they have met a lot of "fantastic" people and formed several lasting friendships with participants in the show. The cooperation of most people involved is very warming, they say. Of course, the Newhalls add their own touches of hospitality.

Three years ago, Dot Newhall made a breakfast for overnight campers who had no transportation. It was such a hit that she has made it an annual practice. Many visitors show up in the morning both days just to enjoy the eggs, bacon and toast breakfast.

Along with the preparation, the Newhalls' grounds must pass a health inspection. The state Board of Health inspects the grounds before and during the Washington County Field Days. However, the Newhalls say they have had no problems with sanitation.

"Last year," David says, "we got 95 points out of a possible 100."

All of the animals to be exhibited must be inspected. The rules are strict and the state Department of Agriculture regulates the inspection.

Dot says, "The kids are really good with their animals. You wouldn't even recognize the animals after they are cleaned up and brushed down."

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ABDNOR). Without objection, it is so ordered.

OMNIBUS VICTIMS PROTECTION ACT OF 1982

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, as in morning business, there is an item that is cleared on this side for action at this time. I refer to Calendar Order No. 769, S. 2420. I inquire of the minority leader if he is in position to consider that act at this time.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, that item is cleared on this side of the aisle.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the minority leader.

Mr. President, in view of that I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate S. 2420, Calendar Order No. 769.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2420) to protect victims of crime.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill which was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert the following:

That this Act may be cited as the "Omnibus Victims Protection Act of 1982".

FINDINGS AND PURPOSE

SEC. 2. (a) The Congress finds and declares that:

(1) Without the cooperation of victims and witnesses, the criminal justice system would cease to function; yet with few exceptions these individuals are either ignored by the criminal justice system or simply used as tools to identify and punish offenders.

(2) All too often the victim of a serious crime is forced to suffer physical, psychological, or financial hardship first as a result of the criminal act and then as a result of contact with a criminal justice system unresponsive to the real needs of such victim.

(3) Although the majority of serious crimes falls under the jurisdiction of State and local law enforcement agencies, the Federal Government, and in particular the Attorney General, have an important leadership role to assume in ensuring that victims of crime, whether at the Federal, State, or local level, are given proper treatment by agencies administering the criminal justice system.

(4) Under the current law, law enforcement agencies must have cooperation from victims of crime and yet neither the agencies nor the legal system can offer protection or assistance when such victim as a result of such cooperation, is threatened or intimidated.

(5) While the defendant is provided with counsel who can explain to him both the criminal justice process and his rights, the victim or witness has no counterpart and is usually not even notified when the defendant is released on bail, the case is dismissed, a plea to a lesser charge is accepted, or a court date is changed.

(6) The victim and witness who cooperate with the prosecutor often find that the transportation, parking facilities, and child care services at the court are unsatisfactory and they must often share the pretrial waiting room with the defendant or his family and friends.

(7) The victim may lose valuable property to a criminal only to lose it again for long periods of time to Federal law enforcement officials, until the trial and sometimes the appeals are over; many times that property is damaged or lost, which is particularly stressful for the elderly or poor.

(b) The Congress declares that the purposes of this Act are—

(1) to enhance and protect the necessary role of crime victims and witnesses in the criminal justice process;

(2) to ensure that the Federal Government does all that is possible within the limits of available resources to assist victims and witnesses of crime without infringing on the constitutional rights of the defendant; and

(3) to provide a victim/witness model for State and local law enforcement officials.

TITLE I—VICTIM'S IMPACT STATEMENT

SEC. 101. Subsection (c)(2) of rule 32 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure is amended by striking ", and such other information as may be required by the court" and inserting in lieu thereof: "The report shall also contain verified information stated in a nonargumentative style assessing the financial, social, psychological, and medical impact upon and cost to any person who was the victim of the offense committed by the defendant. The report shall also include a statement of any need of the victim for restitution and any such other information as may be required by the court.".

TITLE II—PROTECTION OF VICTIMS AND WITNESSES FROM INTIMIDATION

SEC. 201. (a) Chapter 73 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sections:

"§1512. Tampering with a witness, victim, or an informant

"(a) Whoever—

"(1) knowingly uses or attempts to use physical force, threat, intimidation, or fraud with intent to—

"(A) influence the testimony of another person in an official proceeding;

"(B) cause or induce another person to—

"(i) withhold testimony, or withhold a record, document, or other object, from an official proceeding;

"(ii) alter, destroy, multilate, or conceal an object with intent to impair such object's integrity or availability for use in an official proceeding;

"(iii) evade legal process summoning him to appear as a witness, or to produce a record, document, or other object in an official proceeding; or

"(iv) absent himself from an official proceeding to which he has been summoned by legal process; or

"(C) hinder, delay, or prevent the communication to a law enforcement officer of information relating to an offense or a possible offense;

"(2) knowingly and maliciously hinders, delays, prevents, or dissuades or attempts to hinder, delay, prevent, or dissuade—

"(A) a witness or a victim from attending or testifying in an official proceeding; or

"(B) a witness, victim, or a person acting on behalf of a victim from—

"(i) making a report of an offense or a possible offense to a judge, a law enforcement officer, a probation or parole officer, or an officer of a correctional facility;

"(ii) causing a criminal prosecution, or a parole or probation revocation proceeding, to be sought or instituted or assisting in such prosecution or proceeding; or

"(iii) arresting, or causing or seeking the arrest of, a person in connection with an offense; or

"(3) with intent corruptly, or by threats of force, or by any threatening letter or communication, influences, obstructs, impedes, or attempts to corruptly, or by threats of force, or by threatening letter or communication, influences, obstructs, impedes the—

"(A) enforcement and prosecution of federal law;

"(B) administration of a law under which an official proceeding is being or may be conducted; or

"(C) exercise or a Federal legislative power of inquiry, shall be punished as provided in subsection (b).

"(b) Whoever is guilty of an offense set forth in subsection (a)(1) shall be fined not more than $100,000, or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both. Whoever is guilty of an offense set forth in subsection (a)(2) or (a)(3) shall be fined not more than $25,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both. Whoever is convicted for a second or subsequent offense under this section shall be sentenced to a term of imprisonment, or fine or both up to twice that authorized for such offense.

"(c) In a prosecution for an offense under subsection (a)(1) of this section, it is an affirmative defense, as to which the defendant has the burden of proving the defense by a preponderance of the evidence, that the conduct engaged in consisted solely of lawful conduct and that the defendant's sole intention was to encourage or cause the other person to testify truthfully.

"(d) It is not a defense to a prosecution under this section that—

"(1) an official proceeding was not pending or about to be instituted;

"(2) the testimony, or the record, document, or other object, would have been legally privileged or would have been inadmissible in evidence; or

"(3) no person was injured physically, or, in fact, intimidated.

"(e) There is Federal jurisdiction over an offense described in this section if—

"(1) the official proceeding, offense, or prosecution is or would be a Federal official proceeding, offense, or prosecution;

"(2) the officer is a Federal public servant and the information or report relates to a Federal offense or a possible Federal offense;

"(3) the administration of justice, administration of a law, or exercise of a legislative power of inquiry relates to a Federal Government function;

"(4) the United States mail or a facility in interstate or foreign commerce is used in the planning, promotion, management, execution, consummation, or concealment of such crime punishable in this section, or in the distribution of the proceeds of such crime punishable in this section;

"(5) movement of a person across a State or United States boundary occurs in the planning, promotion, management, execution, consummation, or concealment of such crime punishable in this section or in the distribution of the proceeds of such crime punishable in this section.

"§ 1513. Retaliating against a witness or an informant

"(a) Whoever—

"(A) the attendance of a witness or party at an official proceeding, or any testimony given, or any record, document, or other object produced, by a witness in an official proceeding; or

"(B) any information relating to an offense or a possible offense given by a person to a law enforcement officer; or

"(2) threatens to cause bodily injury to another person or to damage the property of another person or otherwise endeavor to intimidate another person because of any matter described in subparagraph (A) or (B) of paragraph (1);

"(3) unlawfully subjects a Federal public servant to economic loss or injury to his business or profession because of any matter described in subparagraph (A) or (B) of paragraph (1), shall be punished as provided in subsection (b).

"(b) Whoever is guilty of an offense in subsection (a)(1) shall be fined not more than $100,000 or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both. Whoever is guilty of an offense in subsection (a)(2) shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than two years, or both. Whoever is guilty of an offense in any other case under this section shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

"(c) There is Federal jurisdiction over an offense described in this section if—

"(1) the official proceeding is a Federal official proceeding;

"(2) the law enforcement officer is a Federal public servant and the information relates to a Federal offense or a possible Federal offense;

"(3) the United States mail or facility in interstate or foreign commerce is used in the planning, promotion, management, execution, consummation, or concealment of such crime punishable in this section or in the distribution of the proceeds of such crime punishable in this section; or

"(4) movement of a person across a State or United States boundary occurs in the planning, promotion, management, execution, consummation, or concealment of such crime punishable in this section or in the distribution of the proceeds of such crime punishable in this section."

"§ 1514. Definitions for certain provisions

"As used in sections 1512 and 1513 of this title the term—

"(1) 'law enforcement officer' means an officer or employee of the Federal Government, or a person authorized to act for or on behalf of the Federal Government or serving the Federal Government as an adviser or consultant (including an elected official, judge, or juror)—

"(A) authorized under law to engage in or supervise the prevention, detection, investigation, or prosecution of an offense; or

"(B) serving as a parole or probation officer under this title;

"(2) 'maliciously' means for the purpose of (A) intimidating, harassing, harming, injuring in any other way another person or (B) interfering with the orderly administration of justice;

"(3) 'official proceeding' means—

"(A) a proceeding before a judge or court of the United States, a United States magistrate, a bankruptcy judge, or a Federal grand jury, a parole or probation officer;

"(B) a proceeding before the Congress; or

"(C) a proceeding before a Federal Government agency which is authorized by law;

"(4) 'physical force' means physical action against another, and includes confinement;

"(5) 'victim' means an individual against whom an offense has been or is being committed, or was attempted to be committed;

"(6) 'witness' means an individual—

"(A) having knowledge of the existence or nonexistence of facts relating to an offense;

"(B) whose declaration under oath is received in evidence for any purpose;

"(C) who has reported an offense to a judge, a law enforcement officer, or probation officer, or an officer of a correctional facility; or

"(D) who has been served with a subpoena, including a grand jury subpoena, issued under the authority of a court of the United States.

"§ 1515. Penalty for an offense committed while on release pending judicial proceedings

"Any term of imprisonment imposed under sections 1503, 1512, or 1513 which is committed while such person is released under chapter 207 of this title shall be consecutive to any sentence of imprisonment for the offense with respect to which release was ordered.".

(b) The analysis for chapter 73 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new items:

"1512. Tampering with a witness, victim, or an informant.
"1513. Retaliating against a witness or an informant.
"1514. Definitions for Certain Provisions.
"1515. Penalty for an offense committed while on release pending judicial proceeding.".

(c) Subsection (a) of section 3146 of chapter 207 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by—

(1) inserting between "officer," and "unless" the following: "subject to the condition that such person not commit an offense under chapter 73 of this title,"; and

(2) inserting between "impose" and "the" the following: "a condition of release that such person not commit an offense under chapter 73 of this title and impose"; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following: "Notwithstanding any other provision of this subsection, the pretrial release of any person pursuant to this section or section 3148 shall be deemed to include a condition that the defendant not commit or cause to be committed any act proscribed by sections 1503, 1512, and 1513 of this title".

SEC. 202. (a) Title 18 of the United States Code is amended by adding after chapter 223 the following new chapter:

"CHAPTER 224—PROTECTION OF WITNESSES

"Sec.
"3521. Witnesses relocation and protection.
"3522. Reimbursement of expenses.
"3523. Civil action to restrain witness or victim intimidation.
"3524. Definition for chapter.

"§ 3521. Witness relocation and protection

"(a) The Attorney General may provide for the relocation or protection of a government witness or a potential government witness in an official proceeding if the Attorney General determines that an offense described in section 1503, 1512, or 1513 of this title, or a State or local offense that is similar in nature or that involves a crime of violence directed at a witness, is likely to be committed. The Attorney General may also provide for the relocation or protection of the immediate family of, or a person otherwise closely associated with, such witness or potential witness if the family or person may also be endangered.

"(b) In connection with the relocation or protection of a witness, a potential witness, or an immediate family member or close associate of a witness or potential witness, the Attorney General may take any action he determines to be necessary to protect such person from bodily injury, and otherwise to assure his health, safety, and welfare, for as long as, in the judgment of the Attorney General, such danger exists. The Attorney General may—

"(1) provide suitable official documents to enable a person relocated to establish a new identity;

"(2) provide housing for the person relocated or protected;

"(3) provide for the transportation of household furniture and other personal property to the new residence of the person relocated;

"(4) provide a tax-free subsistence payment, in a sum established in regulations issued by the Attorney General, for such times as the Attorney General determines to be warranted;

"(5) assist the person relocated in obtaining employment; and

"(6) refuse to disclose the identity or location of the person relocated or protected, or any other matter concerning the person or the program after weighing the danger such a disclosure would pose to the person, the detriment it would cause to the general effectiveness of the program, and the benefit it would afford to the public or to the person seeking the disclosure.

"(c) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (b)(6), if a person relocated under this section is named as a defendant in a civil cause of action, arising prior to the person's relocation, for damages resulting from bodily injury, property damage, or injury to business, process in the civil proceeding may be served upon the Attorney General. The Attorney General shall make reasonable efforts to serve a copy of the process upon the person relocated at his last known address. If a judgment in such an action is entered against the person relocated, the Attorney General shall determine whether the person has made reasonable efforts to comply with the provisions of that judgment. The Attorney General shall take affirmative steps to urge the person relocated to comply with any judgment rendered. If the Attorney General determines that the person has not made reasonable efforts to comply with the provisions of the judgment, he may, in his discretion, after weighing the danger to the person relocated, disclose the identity and location of that person to the plaintiff entitled to recovery pursuant to the judgment. Any such disclosure shall be made upon the express condition that further disclosure by the plaintiff of such identity or location may be made only if essential to the plaintiff's efforts to recover under the judgment, and only to such additional persons as is necessary to effect the recovery. Any such disclosure or nondisclosure by the Attorney General shall not subject the government to liability in any action based upon the consequences thereof.

"§ 3522. Reimbursement of expenses

"The provision of transportation, housing, subsistence, or other assistance to a person under section 3523 may be conditioned by the Attorney General upon reimbursement of expenses in whole or in part to the United States by a State or local government.

"§ 3523. Civil action to restrain witness or victim intimidation

"(a) The Attorney General may initiate a civil proceeding to prevent and restrain an offense involving a witness or a victim under sections 1503, 1512 or 1513 of this title. After a hearing and upon a finding, which may be based upon hearsay or the representation of the attorney for the government or the counsel for the defendant, that an offense under sections 1503, 1512 or 1513 of this title involving a witness or a victim has occurred or is reasonably likely to occur, the court may order that a defendant, a witness or other person connected with the case, or any individual in the courtroom to—

"(1) refrain from engaging in conduct in violation of section 1503, 1512, or 1513 of this title;

"(2) maintain a prescribed distance from a specified victim or witness; and

"(3) refrain from communicating with a specified victim or witness except under such conditions as the court may impose.

"(b) A district court of the United States in which a proceeding is initiated under this section has jurisdiction to hear and determine the matter so presented, and to prevent and restrain an offense referred to in subsection (a). In a proceeding initiated under this section, the court shall proceed as soon as practicable to a hearing and determination.

"§ 3524. Definition for chapter

"As used in this subchapter 'government' includes the Federal Government and a State or local government.".

(b) The table of chapters for part II of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding after the item for chapter 223 the following new item:

"224. Protection of witnesses..... 3521".

TITLE III—RESTITUTION

SEC. 301. (a) Chapter 227 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"§ 3579. Order of restitution

"(a) The court, in imposing a sentence on a defendant for any offense under this title, except an offense described in subsection (d), may order the defendant to make appropriate restitution. The order of restitution shall require that the defendant—

"(1) in the case of an offense causing injury or death, make restitution to the victim of the offense or estate of the victim in an amount that does not exceed income lost because of the victim's incapacitation or death, necessary medical expenses including ones associated with physical, psychological or vocational rehabilitation and, if applicable, the expenses for the funeral and burial of the victim; and

"(2) in the case of an offense resulting in loss, damage, or destruction of property—

"(A) restore the property to the victim of the offense; or

"(B) make restitution to the victim of the offense in an amount that does not exceed the value of the property; or

"(3) make restitution in money or, when the victim agrees, in services to the victim or to a person or organization designated by the victim.

If the court does not order restitution, the court must state for the record the reasons. The court shall make the order of restitution as fair as possible to the victim without unduly complicating or prolonging the sentencing process.

"(b)(1) The court shall not order restitution as to any victim who is bound by an earlier judgment in, or a settlement of a civil proceeding involving the underlying offense.

"(2) Any amount paid to a person pursuant to an order of restitution shall be set off against an amount later recovered as compensatory damages by such person in any civil proceeding.

"(3) A conviction of a defendant by a Federal court of an offense involving the act giving rise to restitution under this section shall estop the defendant from denying the essential allegations of the criminal offense in any subsequent civil proceeding brought by the victim.

"(4) If appropriate the court may consider ordering restitution to any party who has compensated the victim for expenses or losses directly related to the crime.

"(5) An order of restitution may be enforced by the victim or the United States in same manner as a judgment in a civil action and notwithstanding any other provision of law, an order of restitution shall be satisfied by the defendant before any Federal lien.

"(c) If a defendant is placed on probation or paroled pursuant to this title any restitution ordered under this section shall be a condition of such parole or probation. Failure to comply with an order of restitution shall be grounds for the revocation of parole or probation. In determining whether failure to comply with an order of restitution shall be grounds for the revocation of parole or probation, the Court shall consider the defendant's employment status, earning ability, the willfulness of the defendant's failure to pay, and any other special circumstances that may have a bearing on the defendant's ability to pay.".

(b) The analysis for chapter 227 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"3579. Order of restitution.".

(c) Within six months after the date of enactment of this title, the Attorney General shall report to Congress concerning any laws necessary to ensure that all victims of crime are justly compensated in those cases where restitution is not possible. The Attorney General shall consider funding methods such as imposing additional fines on all individuals convicted of Federal crimes.

(d) The court may not order restitution in any offense described in:

(1) section 24 of the Securities Act of 1933 (15 U.S.C. 77x) (relating to the registration of securities);

(2) section 325 of the Trust Indenture Act of 1939, as added by the Act of August 3, 1939, and amended (15 U.S.C. 77yyy) (relating to the public offering of notes, bonds, debentures, evidences of indebtedness, and certificates of interest or participation therein);

(3) section 32(a) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78ff(a)) (relating to regulation of transactions in securities exchanges and over-the-counter markets);

(4) section 29 of the Public Utility Holding Company Act (15 U.S.C. 79z-3) (relating to regulation of public utility holding companies and their subsidiary companies);

(5) section 49 of the Investment Company Act of 1940 (15 U.S.C. 80a-48) (relating to regulation of investment companies and securities issued by them);

(6) section 217 of the Investment Advisers Act of 1940 (15 U.S.C. 80b-17) (relating to registration of investment advisers);

(7) section 11911 of subtitle IV of title 49, United States Code (relating to securities of carriers subject to the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission);

(8) section 127 of chapter 2 of title I of the Act of October 26, 1970 (12 U.S.C. 1957) (relating to records and reports by uninsured banks and institutions, banks insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, and institutions insured by the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation);

(9) section 210 of the Currency and Foreign Transaction Reporting Act (31 U.S.C. 1059) (relating to records and reports concerning domestic currency transactions, exports and imports of monetary instruments, and foreign monetary transactions);

(10) section 9(b) of the Commodity Exchange Act (7 U.S.C. 13(b) (relating to price manipulation and other illegal practices involving transactions in commodities in interstate commerce), and section 9 (d) and (e) of that Act (7 U.S.C. 13 (d) and (e)) (relating to transactions in commodity futures by commissioners, employees, or agents of the Commodity Futures Trading Commission);

(11) the eleventh paragraph of section 25(a) of the Act of December 23, 1913, as added by the Act of December 24, 1919 (12 U.S.C. 617) (relating to the prohibition on the use of corporate funds to manipulate the price of a commodity by an agent of a corporation organized to do foreign banking); and

(12) sections 1, 2, and 3 of the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C. 1, 2, and 3) (relating to agreements in restraint of trade and monopolizing trade).

TITLE IV—FEDERAL ACCOUNTABILITY FOR ESCAPE OR RELEASE OF FEDERAL PRISONER

SEC. 401. (a) Section 1346(b) of title 28, United States Code, is amended by inserting "(1)" immediately after "(b)."

(b) Section 1346(b) of title 28, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(2)(A) Subject to the provisions of chapter 171 of this title and subparagraph (B) of this paragraph, the district courts, together with the United States District Court for the District of the Canal Zone and the District Court of the Virgin Islands, shall have exclusive jurisdiction of any civil action on a claim against the United States for damages, accruing on and after the date of enactment of this paragraph, for personal injury or death directly caused by any dangerous offender charged with or convicted of a Federal offense who is released from, or who escapes from, lawful custody of an employee of, or any person acting as the lawful agent of, the United States as a result of the gross negligence of such employee or person.

"(B) For the purposes of this paragraph 'dangerous offender' means a person charged with or convicted of a crime involving the use, attempted use, or threatened use of violence against the person or property of another.

SEC. 402. Subsection (a) of section 2680 of title 28 of the United States Code is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "This subsection shall not apply to actions constituting gross negligence for purposes of section 1346(b)(2) of this title.".

TITLE V—FEDERAL GUIDELINES FOR FAIR TREATMENT OF CRIME VICTIMS AND WITNESSES IN THE CRIMINAL JUSTICE SYSTEM

SEC. 501. (a) Within six months after the date of enactment of this title, the Attorney General shall develop and implement guidelines for the Department of Justice consistent with the purposes of this Act. The Attorney General shall assign responsibilities for the implementation of each of the guidelines. In preparing the guidelines the Attorney General shall consider the following objectives:

(1) SERVICES TO VICTIMS OF CRIME.—Law enforcement personnel should ensure that victims routinely receive emergency social and medical services as soon as possible and are given information on the following—

(A) availability of crime victim compensation (where applicable);

(B) community-based victim treatment programs;

(C) their role in the criminal justice process, including what they can expect from them;

(D) key points in the criminal justice process at which they might want to request information as to the status of their particular case and suggestions on how best to request this information; and

(E) ability of law enforcement officers to protect victims and witnesses from intimidation.

(2) SCHEDULING CHANGES.—All victims and witnesses who have been scheduled to attend criminal justice proceedings should either be notified as soon as possible of any scheduling changes which will affect their appearances or have an "on call" or "telephone-alert" system available.

(3) PROMPT NOTIFICATION TO VICTIMS OF MAJOR SERIOUS CRIMES.—The opportunity to request advance notification of important criminal justice proceedings shall be given to victims, witnesses, relatives of those victims and witnesses who are minors, and relatives of homicide victims. Those same individuals, who provide the appropriate official with a current address and telephone number should receive prompt advance, if possible, notification of judicial proceedings relating to their case, including—

(A) arrest or initial appearance before a judicial officer of the accused;

(B) initial bond decision of the accused; and

(C) disposition of the case (including trial, sentencing, and eventual release of accused).

"(4) CONSULTATION WITH VICTIM.—The prosecution should obtain the non-binding views of victims of serious crimes, or in the case of a minor child or homicide, the victim's family, prior to making a recommendation to the court, when the victim has provided a current address and telephone number. The key points for consultation include—

(A) pretrial release hearings (if feasible);
(B) pretrial diversion program;
(C) dismissal; and
(D) plea negotiations;

(5) SEPARATE WAITING AREA.—Victims and other prosecutor witnesses should be provided prior to court appearance a waiting area that is separate from all other witnesses.

(6) PROPERTY RETURN.—Law enforcement agencies and prosecutors should promptly return victim's property held for evidentiary purposes unless there are compelling law enforcement reason for retaining it.

(7) NOTIFICATION TO EMPLOYER.—A victim or witness should be asked if he would like his employer to be notified of need for the victim/witness to cooperate and, therefore, be absent from work. If the victim or witness has to take time off from work to assist in the investigation or prosecution of the case, employers should be encouraged to continue to pay the victim or witness as if he had actually worked. In situations where as a direct result of a crime or cooperation with law enforcement officials, the victim or witness is subjected to serious financial strain, a law enforcement official should offer to contact creditors to explain the circumstances.

(8) TRAINING BY FEDERAL LAW ENFORCEMENT TRAINING FACILITIES.—The Attorney General and Secretary of the Treasury should instruct the directors of the Federal training facilities to ensure that victim assistance training be offered to law enforcement personnel so that victims are properly assisted immediately following the commission of crime and throughout the duration of the criminal justice proceedings; and to ensure that criminal justice personnel are familiar with these guidelines.

(9) GENERAL VICTIM ASSISTANCE.—The guidelines should also ensure that when feasible other important means of assisting victims and witnesses, such as the adoption of transportation, parking, and translator services for victims in court, are provided.

(b) Nothing in this title shall be construed as creating a cause of action against the United States.

SEC. 502. All Federal law enforcement agencies, outside of the Department of Justice, shall adopt guidelines consistent with section 501.

TITLE VI—PROFIT BY A CRIMINAL FROM SALE OF HIS STORY

SEC. 601. Within one year after the date of enactment of this title, the Attorney General shall report to Congress regarding any laws that are necessary to ensure that no Federal felon derives any profit from the sale of the recollections, thoughts, and feelings of such felon with regards to the offense committed by the felon until any victim of the offense receives restitution.

UP AMENDMENT NO. 1262

(Purpose: To provide technical and clarifying amendments to S. 2420)

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, on behalf of Senator LAXALT and myself, I send to the desk and ask for the immediate consideration of an amendment to the substitute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. HEINZ), for himself and Mr. LAXALT, proposes an unprinted amendment numbered 1262.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 27, line 4, strike "multilate" and replace in lieu thereof "mutilate".

On page 27, line 12, insert ")" after "(iv.

On page 28, strike out lines 12 through 16 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(3) corruptly, by threats of force, or by any threatening letter of communication, intentionally influences, obstructs, or impedes or attempts to influence, obstruct, or impede the—

On page 28, line 22, strike "or" and insert in lieu thereof "of".

On page 34, line 17, insert "which is" after "imprisonment".

On page 34, line 18, strike "which is" and insert in lieu thereof "when the offense is".

On page 35, in the material immediately following line 20, strike "Witnesses relocation" and insert in lieu thereof "Witness relocation".

On page 38, line 21, strike "3523" and replace in lieu thereof "3521".

On page 39, line 11, strike "that".

On page 46, line 11, strike "or property".

On page 46, line 11, insert "." after "another".

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I will say for the benefit of my colleagues these are technical amendments. My understanding is they have been cleared on the other side of the aisle as well.

Mr. President, I believe the technical amendments are before us for consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The amendment (UP No. 1262) was agreed to.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I know of no further amendments.

Mr. President, I rise to urge swift approval of S. 2420, the Omnibus Victims Protection Act of 1982. As chairman of the Special Committee on Aging, I have long advocated measures to improve our criminal justice system to better protect those older Americans who are especially vulnerable to violent crime. The committee has found, however, that one of the greatest needs after the crime has been committed is for the police, prosecutors, and courts to take into account the needs and interests of the victim. After all, victims are supposed to be the very individuals the criminal justice system was set up to protect. It is this need that the Omnibus Victims Protection Act, S. 2420, was developed to fulfill.

S. 2420 will not take away the grief nor erase the memory of those already victimized by crime. But the bill would be a first step toward insuring more humane, respectful treatment of victims by a system that is supposed to help them. S. 2420 would:

Make it less likely that dangerous offenders would continue to be able to prey on society;

Make sure that the sentencing judge is aware of the impact of the crime on the victim;

Make sure that victims and witnesses who cooperate with law enforcement officials are given better protection against intimidation and retaliation;

Make sure the Attorney General develops guidelines which will provide for the fair treatment of crime victims and witnesses.

I recognize that S. 2420 is not the final answer to all the problems victims face after the crime. However, I do see this legislation as the most important step the Federal Government can take to begin the process of rebalancing the scales of justice. We must insure that victims are given at least the rights now afforded routinely to the accused.

It is inexcusable that victims routinely show up at court only to find out that once again the court date has been changed; or to be forced to wait in the same room with the person they have identified as having committed a violent crime.

It is inexcusable for prosecutors to drop or plea bargain them to lesser charges without even picking up the phone to talk to the victim.

It is inexcusable for parole boards to release from prison a dangerous person without the greatest attention being given to the details involved in the decision to release.

It is inexcusable that criminals who receive funds as a result of their crimes can spend those funds without the victim ever having a chance to receive restitution for their losses.

The time has come for action. I urge my colleagues to swiftly approve this legislation. Every day we delay, thousands of new victims are being added to the rolls; every day we wait, new victims are being ignored and mistreated.

Hundreds of individuals and organizations devoted countless hours to the drafting and perfecting of the omnibus victims protection bill of 1982. While it is impossible to thank them all individually, I did want to thank my good friend, the distinguished Senator from Nevada, Senator LAXALT, for the work he has done on behalf of this legislation. Senator LAXALT for years has been a leading advocate for greater victims' rights. And many of the provisions in this bill are based on work he and his able staff member, Jock Nash, have done. In addition, I want to thank Senator THURMOND, chairman of the Judiciary Committee, and Senator BIDEN, minority chairman. Both were original cosponsors of the legislation and helped guide it through the Judiciary Committee in an expeditious manner. In addition to the other members on Judiciary, I also want to especially thank Senator MA-

THIAS, who, as chairman of the Subcommittee on Criminal Law, prepared the hearings and moved the legislation through the subcommittee. I also want to thank the staff of the subcommittee, Mike Klipper and Maura Whelan, and many other staff members on Judiciary who helped immeasurably with the legislation.

I especially appreciate the assistance of the citizens who came forward to testify at the hearings on this bill. It was difficult for these individuals to share with us the painful experiences they endured as victims. I will never forget the testimony of Virginia Montgomery, who after being mugged just a few blocks from the Capitol, had to pay $11,000 in doctors' bills, only to be treated shabbily by the criminal justice system. Nor will I forget the testimony of Geraldine, who was kidnapped, raped, and robbed at gunpoint and said that her treatment by the courts and prosecutors was so bad that she would never recommend to any rape victim that she go through a trial. Nor will I forget Douglas Payton, who brought with him photographs of his deceased wife and testified to the pointlessness and brutality of her murder—which could have been prevented had the Federal Government not been grossly negligent.

The President's task force on victims also assisted in reviewing the bill and offered constructive suggestions for amendments—those of Chairman Lois Harrington and staff director Terry Russell—were especially valuable.

Dozens of private organizations helped with the bill at every stage. The American Bar Association as represented by Laurie Robinson and Susan Hillenbrand of the criminal justice section's victim witness assistance project; the National Organization for Victim Assistance as represented by Marlene Young and John Stein; the Coalition Against Sexual Assault as represented by Mary Ann Largen; the Crime Victims Legal Advocacy Institute as represented by Frank Carrington, the American Civil Liberties Union as represented by John Shattuck, David Landau, and Martin Michaelson; the Washington Legal Foundation as represented by Nick Calio and Paul Kamenar; the Victim Service Agency as represented by Lucy Friedman; and Paul Hudson of the New York Compensation Board. I am also grateful for the many individuals inside the Justice Department who offered their advice and assistance. In particular, Ron Ganier, Roger Pauli, Gerald Shur, and Cary Copland.

Many assistant U.S. attorneys spent long hours reviewing drafts of the legislation and helping us to locate potential witnesses for the hearings. In particular, I want to thank Ava Abramowitz, of the U.S. Attorney's Office in the District of Columbia and Justin Williams of the Alexandria office.

Finally, I especially would like to thank Catherine Milton of the staff of the Special Committee on Aging, without whose skillful direction this legislation would not have been developed, John Rother, staff director of the committee, for his guidance, and Kate Clarke and Linda Goldman for their assistance.

S. 2420 does not call for new Federal funds, it simply requires a redirection of priorities and appropriated resources. In fact, in a letter from Alice M. Rivlin, Director of the Congressional Budget Office, it is estimated that there would be some minimal costs associated with implementation of S. 2420, the omnibus victims protection bill. According to the estimates provided by the Congressional Budget Office, preparation of victim impact statements, would cost about $300,000 by 1987. The only other provision to which CBO attached cost estimates is title V, the requirement that the Attorney General issue guidelines for victims. Based on information provided by the Department of Justice, CBO estimates that developing the guidelines would require approximately 3 staff years, at a cost of $125,000 in fiscal year 1983. Because the guidelines have not as yet been promulgated, CBO states it has "no clear basis for estimating their implementation costs."

The Senate Judiciary Committee intends that these costs be absorbed into the annual budget of the agencies affected. The committee does not intend for these costs to increase the appropriated requests for fiscal year 1983.

I urge my colleagues to approve S. 2420 so that the Federal criminal justice system will no longer impose further injury upon those it was designed to protect and assist.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter from Alice M. Rivlin, Director of the Congressional Budget Office.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE,
U.S. CONGRESS,
Washington, D.C., September 10, 1982.

Senator STROM THURMOND,
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Pursuant to Section 403 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, the Congressional Budget Office has reviewed S. 2420, the Omnibus Victims Protection Act of 1982, as reported by the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, August 19, 1982. For the purpose of this estimate, it is assumed that this bill will be enacted by October 1982.

Title I requires that presentence reports prepared for federal district judges contain a victim impact statement, assessing the financial, social, psychological, and medical impact of the offense on identifiable victims. Based on information from the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts, and assuming that about 20 percent of presentence reports would require such statements in 1983, CBO estimates that the cost of this program would be about $300,000 in 1983, increasing to $500,000 by 1987.

Section 201 of the bill provides criminal penalties for the intimidation of or retaliation against witnesses and victims. CBO has no basis for estimating the amount of fines the government might receive as a result of these provisions.

Section 202 broadens the authority of the Attorney General to provide witness protection, authorizes the Attorney General to seek reimbursement of witness protection expenses from state or local governments, and permits certain civil actions to prevent or restrain intimidation of a victim or witness. The extension of protection to the new categories of witnesses is at the discretion of the Attorney General, and would necessitate either a reduction in expenditures for protection of other types of witnesses, an increase in funding for witness protection, or additional reimbursement from a state or local government, when appropriate. Thus, the extent to which the broadened authority will be used, and whether any additional costs will be incurred, cannot be determined at this time.

Title IV authorizes individuals to sue the federal government for injuries or death caused by persons who escape or are released from federal custody where the government has been grossly negligent. Data are not available on the number of individuals victimized by federal escapees or released federal prisoners. Because it is not possible to predict the number of escapees or judicial findings of gross negligence associated with such victimization, CBO has no basis for estimating the costs to the government of enactment of this provision.

Title V requires the Attorney General to develop and implement Department of Justice guidelines for fair treatment of crime victims and witnesses. Based on information from the Department of Justice, CBO estimates that developing the guidelines would require approximately 3 staff-years, at a cost of $125,000 in fiscal year 1983. Because the guidelines have not as yet been promulgated, CBO has no clear basis for estimating their implementation costs. The Committee has stated its intent that the guidelines should not require the creation of new services beyond the various departments' budgetary capacity. However, the bill specifies a minimum of 9 objectives for the guidelines, and some costs could be incurred in order to meet these objectives, subject to appropriation action. For example, if the 95 U.S. Attorneys' offices were to devote an average of only one additional paralegal each to implement the guidelines, the cost would be approximately $3 million annually.

The other titles of the bill are expected to result in no significant cost to the federal government.

Should the Committee so desire, we would be pleased to offer further details on this estimate.

Sincerely,

ALICE M. RIVLIN, Director.

● Mr. LAXALT. Mr. President, the Senate is considering today what I believe to be an issue of great importance. Namely, how can our criminal justice system be made more responsive to the needs of crime victims? For too long, victims have been the "forgotten persons" in our system of justice. Indeed, they are not only forgotten, they are neglected by the very system which totally depends on them. Were it not for victims coming forward to sign complaints, identify the accused and to testify for the prosecution, our system of justice as we know it, would come to an end. The time has come to enhance the role of the victim in the criminal justice process.

The Omnibus Victims Protection Act is a bill which represents the end product of what has been clearly a bipartisan effort to redress clear inequities that have affected victims of crime. In a system which seeks justice through the adversarial process, the victim must be made a part of the proceedings, and be assured that his just claims to information, notification, protection and restitution be seriously considered and honored. S. 2420 is an important first step which will do much to restore the faith of the American public in our system of justice.

In this bipartisan effort, a number of people deserve particular recognition. First, Senator HEINZ and his capable staff of Catherine Milton and Joseph Lydon labored extensively in bringing this bill to where it is today. My distinguished colleague from Pennsylvania, as chairman of the Special Committee on Aging, has been very involved in victims' issues, especially since a large proportion of all victims happen to be the elderly. Senator HEINZ is to be commended in this regard and for his contribution to this bill.

Second, I would like to especially thank Senator THURMOND and Senator BIDEN. As chairman and ranking minority member respectively of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, they played an indispensable role in seeing that S. 2420 was reported out of committee before this Congress adjourned. There is a large backlog of legislation in the committee and without their assistance and cooperation, this bill would not have been considered today on the floor of the Senate.

Third, Senator MATHIAS, as chairman of the Judiciary Subcommittee on Criminal Law also played an important role in expediting the processing of this bill. Maura Whelan, a legislative assistant on his staff, provided invaluable assistance in drafting the bill's report as well as making the necessary technical changes that were required. Senator MATHIAS and his subcommittee staff have my personal gratitude for the help they provided.

Finally, two organizations whose expertise and draftsmanship provided much of the language of S. 2420 must be recognized. They are the American Bar Association and the National Organization for Victim Assistance. The ABA's model statute on victim-witness intimidation was the base on which the rest of this bill was fashioned. During the course of Senate consideration of this bill they have made themselves available to the judiciary staff to help reconcile the many legal and substantive questions that arose. In addition, the National Organization for Victim Assistance, has been working for years at the grassroots level to change State statutes in this area. Their knowledge of victim's issues and their solutions, plus their help in generating a grassroots lobbying effort to push this bill, played a vital role in drafting this bill as well as seeing it through the Senate. NOVA continues to play a preeminent role as advocates for victims of crime. This legislation is as much a result of their efforts as any other organization or person.

Mr. President, I will not go on further. My views in this area are a matter of record. I support this bill without reservation.●

● Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my distinguished colleagues, Senators HEINZ and LAXALT, in urging final Senate passage of S. 2420, the Omnibus Victim/Witness Protection Act. This legislation has strong bipartisan support, and its nearly 60 cosponsors represent every point on the ideological spectrum. Shortly after the bill's introduction last spring, the Subcommittee on Criminal Law, of which I am chairman, held a hearing where S. 2420 received supporting testimony from the Department of Justice, the American Bar Association, a number of victims' rights organizations, and three victims of violent crime. The subcommittee sent S. 2420 to the full Judiciary Committee with a unanimous favorable recommendation; and, shortly thereafter, the committee agreed to report it favorably to the Senate floor. I am confident that today we will vote overwhelmingly to send S. 2420 to the House of Representatives, where the Judiciary Committee is already preparing a bipartisan bill similar to S. 2420.

In the preamble to the U.S. Constitution, the framers wrote that one of the principal tasks of the new government would be to "insure domestic tranquility." However, we need only look at the steady increase in violent crime in this Nation to recognize that this is one area in which, if we have not failed outright, we are sadly far from success. There has been much discussion in the 97th Congress about what we, in the Federal Government, can do to address the problem of violent crime. S. 2420 is a comprehensive piece of legislation designed to deal with the most tragic effect of violent crime—its impact on the victim. The interest and support S. 2420 has generated indicates that there is increased public awareness of the need to sensitize the criminal justice system to the problems faced by victims of crime. A number of victims' advocacy groups have been formed in recent years, such as Frank Carrington's Victims' Assistance Legal Organization (VALOR), and the National Organization for Victim Assistance (NOVA), both of which were represented at the May 27 hearing. These groups have been in the forefront of the movement for victims' rights, and have made valuable contributions to the progress of S. 2420. The American Bar Association has also been a leader in this area. Since 1976, the ABA's criminal justice section's Victims Committee has been studying the role and treatment of victims in the criminal justice system. In fact, a large part of the legislation now before us is a direct outgrowth of the many hearings and publications of the Victims Committee over the last 6 years.

S. 2420 consists of six sections which recognize the important role played by victims and witnesses of crime in our criminal justice system, and the difficulties they often face as they cooperate with the system. This legislation, if enacted, will provide victims and witnesses with a wide range of protections generally unavailable to them now, and it does so in a manner fully consistent with the constitutional rights of criminal defendants. Basically, S. 2420 would:

Require a "victim impact statement" to be included in the report given to the sentencing judge;

Make it a Federal offense to intimidate or retaliate against victims of Federal crimes;

Permit, for the first time, a Federal judge to order restitution as part of the sentence for crimes involving loss of property or personal injury;

Require the Attorney General to develop guidelines for the fair treatment of crime victims and withesses;

Make the Federal Government civilly liable for bodily injury caused by a "dangerous person" who has either escaped or been prematurely released from Federal custody due to the gross negligence of the Federal Government; and Require the Attorney General to recommend legislation restricting the ability of a Federal felon to reap financial gain from the publication of his memoirs, for example, or in any other way capitalizing on the notoriety of his crime.

For the most part, the changes envisioned by the authors of S. 2420 are not dramatic, but simple and straightforward alterations in current law that are consistent with out Nation's basic values and principles.

The Victim Impact Statement, for example, is a logical addition to our criminal justice system which will make it more responsive to the needs of victims. This statement—a nonargu-mentative assessment of the psychological, financial, and medical impact of the crime on the victim which is filed with the sentencing judge—has, I am pleased to say, been employed by the Federal district court of Maryland in Baltimore since 1979. At the May 27 hearing, Judge Edward S. Northrop, chief judge of the Federal district court of Maryland, and Paul Falconer, the chief U.S. Probation Officer there, both testified on the district court's experience with the Victim Impact Statement. Mr. Falconer stated:

> The victim of an offense has no standing in the court beyond the status a mere witness—he has no right of allocution and is often overlooked in the process of plea negotiation. Our position is that we should not prosecute, try and sentence any defendant without at least listening to the victim and giving some consideration to the victim's offense-related needs. It is essential that the Victim Impact Statement be factual and confirmed; it must be non-inflammatory and non-argumentative. We never want to be guilty of waving the bloody shirt; neither are we to bury the bloody shirt with the victim still in it.

The "Guidelines for the Fair Treatment of Victims and Witnesses" are straightforward, commonsense recommendations that will surely create a more humane and effective criminal justice system. Among its recommendations, the guidelines, if implemented, would: require that victims and witnesses be notified of scheduling changes, such as postponements in trial dates; require that they be consulted before the case in which they are involved is plea bargained or otherwise disposed of; assure separate waiting chambers for the victim and the accused; and require that the Government return, within a reasonable period of time, any property to the victim that was used as evidence in the prosecution of a case.

Far from complicating the prosecutorial process, the implementation of these guidelines will improve the operation of the criminal justice system while it shows more sensitivity to the victim. Faith in the integrity and responsiveness of the criminal justice system will increase the likelihood that those who have been victimized will report these crimes to law enforcement authorities, and work with those authorities in seeing that justice is served. There are many people now who are so fearful of reprisals from the assailant or his associates that they believe it is better and safer to remain quiet. Others feel that the justice system does not provide relief, but, instead, creates a further agony—a second victimization. At the May 27 hearing, Geraldine X, a librarian from Maryland, who had been raped and kidnapped, described this "second victimization":

> My sense of disillusionment with our court system is so great that the year following the crime was much more painful than those three hours I described to you. My disillusionment is so great that I cannot in good conscience urge anyone to prosecute. • • • The greatest insult is being overlooked. Your humanity is overlooked. • • • I would never shame a person into going into the court system. I could not.

The testimony of Geraldine X eloquently demonstrates that the criminal justice system, in hurting the victim, threatens itself, by discouraging crime victims who believe they will not get justice from coming forward.

In urging the enactment of S. 2420, the sponsors recognize that the majority of violent crimes are prosecuted on the State and local level. It is our hope that in passing S. 2420, the Federal Government will be providing the States with a comprehensive and effective model statute. Once again, I urge my colleagues to support this important legislation.●

● Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, today the Senate will consider S. 2420, the Omnibus Victims Protection Act of 1982. I rise in enthusiastic support of this measure.

Mr. President, through the years our judicial system has paid close attention to assuring that the individual accused of crime be given fair treatment throughout criminal proceedings. But little attention has been given to assuring that the victim of a crime be awarded the best possible treatment. I believe that S. 2420 ably addresses some of the more troublesome aspects of victimization, and I am proud to be an original cosponsor of this measure.

While enactment of this legislation would make a considerable difference in some of the long-term effects of victimization on all victims, one of the most positive aspects is the hope it will give to our Nation's older Americans who are so often devastated by crime. It has been found that the odds are better than 10 to 1 that an older person will become the victim of crime. The elderly are also more inclined to suffer broken bones and greater financial setbacks as the result of crime. And several public opinion polls have shown that elderly persons often rank fear of crime as the most serious problem they face. In some communities, 80 percent of the elderly say they live in constant apprehension.

Earlier this year the Special Committee on Aging, of which I am a member, held a hearing to examine the issue of crime and the elderly. One theme kept recurring throughout the panel's questioning of victims, police officers, social workers, and the like. This was the fact that in many cases what occurs in the victim's life as a result of the crime can be worse than the crime itself.

The victim of crime is often forced to recover from physical injuries, recoup economic losses, fight the fear of future crime, and work with an often cumbersome judicial system in apprehending and prosecuting the criminal. It appears that, in many cases, the trouble caused by legal red-tape leaves the victim "victimized" twice—once by the criminal and again by the system. Often the victim or witness is called to appear in court, and arrives there, only to find that the case has been pulled off the docket or delayed. Many times, when the suspect has not been apprehended or is released on bail, the victim may be subjected to harassment or intimidation. There are many examples of a person being convicted of theft, swindle or other crimes for profit, yet no move is made to reimburse the victim. In these cases the criminal actually comes out better financially than the victim.

It is my firm belief that S. 2420, which has been introduced by my distinguished colleague from Pennsylvania (Mr. HEINZ), will go a long way toward easing some of these unfortunate effects of crime. I urge that my colleagues give this measure their full support.●

● Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, crime in this country is out of control. Whether it be in New York City, here in our Nation's Capital, or in the towns and cities of my home State of Wisconsin, everyone is concerned. When people cannot walk the streets without fearing for their lives; when a family is afraid to leave their home for fear it will be looted in their absence, then the people of this country are hostage to crime and the fear of crime.

People want laws passed that will protect them from becoming victims of crime. They also want laws passed to insure that when they are victims, they will be treated fairly and not be subject to further hardship. The bill now before us, Omnibus Victims Protection Act of 1982, will help assure that the victim of a crime will be treated with dignity and fairness.

When a person is robbed, or mugged, or otherwise made a victim of crime, there is often great psychological stress. The threat to personal safety, and the loss of valuable property, can leave lasting scars. Older people, who often lead a fragile existence, are particularly susceptible to the trauma associated with crime.

Mr. President, it is the victims of crime who need protection. Our system of justice presently looks to protect the accused. In so doing, we often inflict upon the innocent victim unnecessary physical, financial, and psychological hardship. It is unfair to ask victims to cooperate in prosecuting an accused criminal, and then not protect the victims from that criminal, and from the unnecessary burdens such cooperation now places upon the victim.

The bill before us today protects the innocent victim of crime in many ways. When a crime is committed, the court proceedings will include an impact statement to provide information on the psychological, financial, and medical impact of the crime on the victim. Rules against threatening a witness, victim or informant are strengthened, as are rules for retaliating against a witness or an informant. New rules are provided for witness relocation and protection. In addition, the bill provides for reimbursement of expenses and restitution of amounts lost as a result of criminal activity.

Mr. President, these provisions, and the others that make up this bill, are an important beginning toward treating the innocent victims of crime with the dignity and respect they deserve. Passage of this bill will bring us one step closer to the day when Americans can live without the fear of crime.

Mr. President, I support this legislation and urge my fellow colleagues to join me in voting for it. I believe this is the least we can do.●

● Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, there is common agreement that crime in America is a matter of grave concern, one of the most pressing issues on our legislative and social agendas. I support the efforts of the Congress and of our community leaders to strengthen existing legal deterrents to crime and to creatively attack the procedural impediments that too often prevent the criminal from being brought to justice. For these reasons, I have cosponsored legislation designed to simplify and strengthen the Federal criminal code and drug enforcement regulations, guarantee swift and certain punishment of offenders identified as "careers criminals," and assure that the law-abiding citizen's constitutional right to possess a firearm is not unnecessarily burdened.

Yet, in our effort to focus on the reduction of crime, we tend to overlook those most immediately affected by the rising crime rate: the victims of crime themselves. While it should be obvious that our current system of criminal justice quite literally could not function without the cooperation of the victim, our system tends to treat these persons like lifeless cogs in the machinery. We cannot expect to improve our criminal justice system unless the victim of crime can reliably expect to be treated as a person, with emotions and a personal interest in the outcome.

The sad fact is that the end of the criminal episode may mark only the beginning of the victim's ordeal. The victim who cooperates with authorities and appears as a witness may be exposed to forms of stress and embarrassment comparable to or even greater than that suffered by the criminal defendant. Having been once victimized during the perpetration of a crime, an individual should not be victimized a second time by legal institutions interested in the victim only as a tool to identify and punish criminal offenders. The final indignity may come when a too lenient, overburdened criminal justice system permits the acknowledged criminal to walk away unpunished while the victim of crime pays an unrecognized financial, psychological, and social price.

S. 2420, the victim protection bill, is designed to remedy these injustices. This legislation, when implemented at the Federal trial court level, would assure that the victim's side of the story receives a crucial airing within the context of the sentencing proceeding itself, where it can do the most good. Before sentencing a convicted criminal, the court would be compelled to consider the financial, psychological, and medical impacts of the crime on the victim. The victim would be protected from retaliation by a criminal defendant, and might even have the right to collect money from the convicted criminal to reimburse the victim's loss.

Mr. President, my colleagues from Pennsylvania and Nevada are to be commended for introducing this legislation. It is a key building block in an improved, comprehensive criminal justice system, and I urge its passage.●

● Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, as an original cosponsor of S. 2420, the Omnibus Victim and Witness Protection Act, I commend Senators HEINZ and LAXALT for their successful efforts in putting together this omnibus bill. It provides much needed reforms to our criminal justice system.

This bill is the result of extensive hearings held by the Special Committee on Aging and the Senate Judiciary Subcommittee on Criminal Law. The hearings established the need for legislative action to assist victims and witnesses as they come in contact with the criminal justice system. Unfortunately, our criminal justice system gives more priority and attention to criminal defendants than it gives to victims and witnesses of criminal acts. For example, defendants are provided with legal counsel who can explain to them the criminal judicial process and their rights, while victims or witnesses have no such counterparts. Victims are the "forgotten people" in our criminal justice system.

The purpose of this bill is threefold: To enhance and protect the necessary role of crime victims and witnesses in the criminal justice process; to insure that the Federal Government does all that is possible within the limits of available resources to assist victims and witnesses of crime without infringing on the rights of defendants; and to provide a victim/witness model for State and local law enforcement officials. This bill addresses the insensitivity and lack of concern for the victims and witnesses by strengthening their legal protections.

There are six major provisions in S. 2420. First, require that the presentence report prepared for Federal judges includes a "victim impact statement," informing judges of the financial, social psychological, and medical impact upon victims of the crime. Second, require restitution for crimes involving loss of property or personal injury. Third, request the Attorney General to recommend legislation providing restitution to victims before a Federal felon may profit from his crime's notoriety. Fourth, hold the Federal Government civilly liable for bodily injury caused by a "dangerous person" who escaped or has been released from Federal custody when the Government is found "grossly negligent." Fifth, require the Attorney General to prepare guidelines for the fair treatment of Federal crimes, similar to a "victim's bill of rights." Finally, this bill provides added protections for victims and witnesses, including criminal penalties intimidating witnesses or victims.

It is sad that victims and witnesses are oftentimes hurt more by our criminal justice system than by the crime itself. Indeed, one witness testifying before the Subcommittee on Criminal Law said, "My life has been permanently changed, I will never forget being raped, kidnaped, and robbed at gunpoint. However, my sense of disillusionment with the criminal justice system is many times more painful. I could not, in good faith, urge anyone to participate in this hellish process." Victims are often the last to hear about changes in the time of the court proceeding so they are required to not only wait in the courtroom with the accused, but lose wages for worktime lost. Oftentimes they are not informed of financial assistance or other social services available as a result of being a witness or victim. It is our duty to support legislative action which improves our criminal justice system. Mr. President, this bill, S. 2420, will do just that by improving the treatment of victims and witnesses. I urge prompt passage of this legislation.●

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, are there any further statements by Senators?

● Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I am pleased to cosponsor S. 2420, the Omnibus Victims Protection Act of 1982.

Violent crime in this country has increased dramatically and tragically. From 1976 to 1980, reported violent crime increased 33 percent and in 1981 criminal violence was committed every 24 seconds. In 1981, over a million citizens were victimized, with tragic consequences for them and their families.

A secondary consequence of criminal violence is that citizens against whom there is no allegation of wrongdoing enter our criminal justice system. Hundreds of thousands of victims are subpenaed to appear in court, an often stressful experience. Michael McCann, chairman of the American Bar Association's Victims Committee testified compellingly on their behalf when he appeared before the Senate Committee on the Judiciary.

No prosecutor with any degree of sensitivity can long remain ignorant of the truly onerous and often frightening part such victims and witnesses play as the crime tragedy progresses from the stage of offense, through apprehension, identification, pretrial proceedings, and trial. The woes of victims and witnesses are legion. To the weak, the infirm, and the elderly, the potential of offender retribution for aiding the prosecution is real, palpable, and, on occasion, terrifying.

Mr. President, we must insure that those who have suffered as victims of crime do not suffer further at the hands of our criminal justice system—that they do not fear retribution for testifying against those who have harmed them already.

Although only a small fraction of violent crime and crimes against property are under Federal jurisdiction, I believe that the Federal Government should play a leadership role in recognizing the needs of victims, in helping them cope, and in protecting them against retaliation. This bill is an important first step toward that goal.

S. 2420 requires that the judge be presented with an assessment of injury to the victim as part of the sentencing report. Too often, at present, the judge is unaware of the severity of the attack, or even, at times, of whether the victim survived wounds caused during an attack. Further, the bill protects both victims and witnesses from intimidation or retaliation at the hands of an offender, enabling the Attorney General to initiate civil proceedings to restrain intimidation, or harassment. The bill further provides for restitution by the offender. Such restitution would cover the victim's expenses, property losses, uninsured medical costs, and funeral costs, if necessary.

Additionally, S. 2420 mandates that the Attorney General develop and implement guidelines for the fair treatment of victims and witnesses, addressing the need for consultation and information exchange with the prosecutor. Federal immunity is waived in cases where gross negligence in releasing a prisoner causes further injury to citizens. Finally, profit by a criminal as a result of his notoriety is curtailed. The last provision was earlier recommended by the House Select Committee on Assasinations, of which I was a member, and I applaud its inclusion here. We should restrict the extent to which violent criminal acts are ultimately profitable to those who commit them.

These provisions move us toward a model in which crime victims will be treated fairly in our criminal justice system. But this is not a perfect bill nor should it be a final effort.

The bill does not provide for direct aid to victims either through services to help them cope with their experience or through monetary compensation. Many States, including Connecticut, have more extensive programs than that proposed here, which are financed through fines and court fees. The Federal Government does not have ready access to many of these same mechanisms. Thus the fiscal constraints we are operating under make a more complete program difficult at this time.

Protection of its citizens is a fundamental function of government. The provisions of this bill were designed to further that purpose. It would be wrong to apply too broadly the third-party accountability implied by a waiver of Federal immunity in cases of gross negligence. Further, flexibility in restitution provisions should be maintained and, as the bill states, restitution should be "as fair as possible without unduly complicating or prolonging the sentencing process."

Overall, this legislation takes an important first step in establishing the rights of victims in Federal court. The first responsibility of law enforcement is to secure the safety of law-abiding citizens. Safety can be secured without jeopardizing the rights of the accused. It is those principles which this bill seeks to maintain. I applaud the efforts of its sponsors in bringing it before us today.●

● Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I am pleased to lend my support to this landmark in criminal legislation.

So often we find ourselves in the position of legislating rights for the accused—we are scrupulously aware of the accused's constitutional rights—and yet we overlook the rights of the victim. We are quick to see that the accused is informed of his rights, quick to see that he is provided with an attorney to protect those rights, quick to see that all of his medical needs are taken care of, and all of his physical needs are provided for. The victim however is on his own. The victim was hurt? Well, let's hope that he has insurance.

Added to the unfairness of this system is that on the Federal level, we are forced to simply shake our heads when the convict sells his accounting of his crime for profit. Jack Henry Abbott, for example, a long-time convict collected a $12,500 advance for his book, "In the Belly of the Beast," a document about the nightmare of prison life. He is expected to earn as much as $250,000 in royalties from the book, and the notoriety he has so unabashedly earned from his latest murder is expected to contribute to that sum.

Now I ask you: Should society be rewarding a man who has taken two lives? Jack Abbott has hired an attorney to keep that money from the family of his victims. Jack Abbott admitted he killed Richard Adan, a waiter and aspiring playwright, but he blames society for spawning his alleged paranoia that "forced him to kill" a man who was trying to help him. Think for a moment how Adan's family feels, how Adan's fiancé feels upon learning that a loved one's murderer is profiting from the notoriety surrounding his murder.

This legislation goes a long way toward sensitizing the criminal justice system to those who are the victims of crime. Aside from insuring that no Federal felon will profit as a result of his notoriety, the legislation requires that a victim's impact statement be included in the sentencing report given to the judge. This legislation underscores the capability of the court to prevent intimidation of a witness or victim and importantly makes the Federal Government civilly liable for bodily injury caused by a "dangerous person who has either escaped or been prematurely released from Federal custody due to the gross negligence of the Federal Government."

I commend Senators THURMOND, HEINZ, LAXALT, and, of course, the majority leader for their hard work in getting this legislation passed. I hope that the House acts quickly in enacting this legislation to respond to a system that victimizes those who have already suffered at the hands of an assailant.●

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendments to be proposed, the question is on agreeing to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended, was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed, as follows:

S. 2420

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Omnibus Victims Protection Act of 1982".

FINDINGS AND PURPOSE

SEC. 2. (a) The Congress finds and declares that:

(1) Without the cooperation of victims and witnesses, the criminal justice system would cease to function; yet with few exceptions these individuals are either ignored by the criminal justice system or simply used as tools to identify and punish offenders.

(2) All too often the victim of a serious crime is forced to suffer physical, psychological, or financial hardship first as a result of the criminal act and then as a result of contact with a criminal justice system unresponsive to the real needs of such victim.

(3) Although the majority of serious crimes falls under the jurisdiction of State and local law enforcement agencies, the Federal Government, and in particular the Attorney General, have an important leadership role to assume in ensuring that victims of crime, whether at the Federal, State, or local level, are given proper treatment by agencies administering the criminal justice system.

(4) Under the current law, law enforcement agencies must have cooperation from victims of crime and yet neither the agencies nor the legal system can offer protection or assistance when such victim as a result of such cooperation, is threatened or intimidated.

(5) While the defendant is provided with counsel who can explain to him both the criminal justice process and his rights, the victim or witness has no counterpart and is usually not even notified when the defendant is released on bail, the case is dismissed, a plea to a lesser charge is accepted, or a court date is changed.

(6) The victim and witness who cooperate with the prosecutor often find that the transportation, parking facilities, and child care services at the court are unsatisfactory and they must often share the pretrial waiting room with the defendant or his family and friends.

(7) The victim may lose valuable property to a criminal only to lose it again for long periods of time to Federal law enforcement officials, until the trial and sometimes the appeals are over; many times that property is damaged or lost, which is particularly stressful for the elderly or poor.

(b) The Congress declares that the purposes of this Act are—

(1) to enhance and protect the necessary role of crime victims and witnesses in the criminal justice process;

(2) to ensure that the Federal Government does all that is possible within the limits of available resources to assist victims and witnesses of crime without infringing on the constitutional rights of the defendant; and

(3) to provide a victim/witness model for State and local law enforcement officials.

TITLE I—VICTIM'S IMPACT STATEMENT

SEC. 101. Subsection (c)(2) of rule 32 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure is amended by striking ", and such other information as may be required by the court" and inserting in lieu thereof: "The report shall also contain verified information stated in a nonargumentative style assessing the financial, social, psychological, and medical impact upon and cost to any person who was the victim of the offense committed by the defendant. The report shall also include a statement of any need of the victim for restitution and any such other information as may be required by the court.".

TITLE II—PROTECTION OF VICTIMS AND WITNESSES FROM INTIMIDATION

SEC. 201. (a) Chapter 73 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sections:

"§ 1512. Tampering with a witness, victim, or an informant

"(a) Whoever—

"(1) knowingly uses or attempts to use physical force, threat, intimidation, or fraud with intent to—

"(A) influence the testimony of another person in an official proceeding;

"(B) cause or induce another person to—

"(i) withhold testimony, or withhold a record, document, or other object, from an official proceeding;

"(ii) alter, destroy, mutilate, or conceal an object with intent to impair such object's integrity or availability for use in an official proceeding;

"(iii) evade legal process summoning him to appear as a witness, or to produce a record, document, or other object in an official proceeding; or

"(iv) absent himself from an official proceeding to which he has been summoned by legal process; or

"(C) hinder, delay, or prevent the communication to a law enforcement officer of information relating to an offense or a possible offense;

"(2) knowingly and maliciously hinders, delays, prevents, or dissuades or attempts to hinder, delay, prevent, or dissuade—

"(A) a witness or a victim from attending or testifying in an official proceeding; or

"(B) a witness, victim, or a person acting on behalf of a victim from—

"(i) making a report of an offense or a possible offense to a judge, a law enforcement officer, a probation or parole officer, or an officer of a correctional facility;

"(ii) causing a criminal prosecution, or a parole or probation revocation proceeding, to be sought or instituted or assisting in such prosecution or proceeding; or

"(iii) arresting, or causing or seeking the arrest of, a person in connection with an offense; or

"(3) corruptly, by threats of force, or by any threatening letter of communication, intentionally influences, obstructs, or impedes or attempts to influence, obstruct, or impede the—

"(A) enforcement and prosecution of federal law;

"(B) administration of a law under which an official proceeding is being or may be conducted; or

"(C) exercise of a Federal legislative power of inquiry, shall be punished as provided in subsection (b).

"(b) Whoever is guilty of an offense set forth in subsection (a)(1) shall be fined not more than $100,000, or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both. Whoever is guilty of an offense set forth in subsection (a)(2) or (a)(3) shall be fined not more than $25,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both. Whoever is convicted for a second or subsequent offense under this section shall be sentenced to a term of imprisonment, or fine or both up to twice that authorized for such offense.

"(c) In a prosecution for an offense under subsection (a)(1) of this section, it is an affirmative defense, as to which the defendant has the burden of proving the defense by a preponderance of the evidence, that the conduct engaged in consisted solely of lawful conduct and that the defendant's sole intention was to encourage or cause the other person to testify truthfully.

"(d) It is not a defense to a prosecution under this section that—

"(1) an official proceeding was not pending or about to be instituted;

"(2) the testimony, or the record, document, or other object, would have been legally privileged or would have been inadmissible in evidence; or

"(3) no person was injured physically, or, in fact, intimidated.

"(e) There is Federal jurisdiction over an offense described in this section if—

"(1) the official proceeding, offense, or prosecution is or would be a Federal official proceeding, offense, or prosecution;

"(2) the officer is a Federal public servant and the information or report relates to a Federal offense or a possible Federal offense;

"(3) the administration of justice, administration of a law, or exercise of a legislative power of inquiry relates to a Federal Government function;

"(4) the United States mail or a facility in interstate or foreign commerce is used in the planning, promotion, management, execution, consummation, or concealment of such crime punishable in this section, or in the distribution of the proceeds of such crime punishable in this section;

"(5) movement of a person across a State or United States boundary occurs in the planning, promotion, management, execution, consummation, or concealment of such crime punishable in this section or in the distribution of the proceeds of such crime punishable in this section.

"§ 1513. Retaliating against a witness or an informant

"(a) Whoever—

"(A) the attendance of a witness or party at an official proceeding, or any testimony given, or any record, document, or other object produced, by a witness in an official proceeding; or

"(B) any information relating to an offense or a possible offense given by a person to a law enforcement officer; or

"(2) threatens to cause bodily injury to another person or to damage the property of another person or otherwise endeavor to intimidate another person because of any matter described in subparagraph (A) or (B) of paragraph (1);

"(3) unlawfully subjects a Federal public servant to economic loss or injury to his business or profession because of any matter described in subparagraph (A) or (B) of paragraph (1), shall be punished as provided in subsection (b).

"(b) Whoever is guilty of an offense set forth in subsection (a)(1) shall be fined not more than $100,000 or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both. Whoever is guilty of an offense in subsection (a)(2) shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than two years, or both. Whoever is guilty of an offense in any other case under this section shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

"(c) There is Federal jurisdiction over an offense described in this section if—

"(1) the official proceeding is a Federal official proceeding;

"(2) the law enforcement officer is a Federal public servant and the information relates to a Federal offense or a possible Federal offense;

"(3) the United States mail or facility in interstate or foreign commerce is used in the planning, promotion, management, execution, consummation, or concealment of such crime punishable in this section or in the distribution of the proceeds of such crime punishable in this section; or

"(4) movement of a person across a State or United States boundary occurs in the planning, promotion, management, execution, consummation, or concealment of such crime punishable in this section or in the distribution of the proceeds of such crime punishable in this section."

"§ 1514. Definitions for certain provisions

"As used in sections 1512 and 1513 of this title the term—

"(1) 'law enforcement officer' means an officer or employee of the Federal Government, or a person authorized to act for or on behalf of the Federal Government or serving the Federal Government as an adviser or consultant (including an elected official, judge, or juror)—

"(A) authorized under law to engage in or supervise the prevention, detection, investigation, or prosecution of an offense; or

"(B) serving as a parole or probation officer under this title;

"(2) 'maliciously' means for the purpose of (A) intimidating, harassing, harming, injuring in any other way another person or (B) interfering with the orderly administration of justice;

"(3) 'official proceeding' means—

"(A) a proceeding before a judge or court of the United States, a United States magistrate, a bankruptcy judge, or a Federal grand jury, a parole or probation officer;

"(B) a proceeding before the Congress; or

"(C) a proceeding before a Federal Government agency which is authorized by law;

"(4) 'physical force' means physical action against another, and includes confinement;

"(5) 'victim' means an individual against whom an offense has been or is being committed, or was attempted to be committed;

"(6) 'witness' means an individual—

"(A) having knowledge of the existence or nonexistence of facts relating to an offense;

"(B) whose declaration under oath is received in evidence for any purpose;

"(C) who has reported an offense to a judge, a law enforcement officer, or probation officer, or an officer of a correctional facility; or

"(D) who has been served with a subpoena, including a grand jury subpoena, issued under the authority of a court of the United States.

"§ 1515. Penalty for an offense committed while on release pending judicial proceedings

"Any term of imprisonment which is imposed under sections 1503, 1512, or 1513 when the offense is committed while such person is released under chapter 207 of this title shall be consecutive to any sentence of imprisonment for the offense with respect to which release was ordered.".

(b) The analysis for chapter 73 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new items:

"1512. Tampering with a witness, victim, or an informant.
"1513. Retaliating against a witness or an informant.
"1514. Definitions for certain provisions.
"1515. Penalty for an offense committed while on release pending judicial proceeding.".

(c) Subsection (a) of section 3146 of chapter 207 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by—

(1) inserting between "officer," and "unless" the following: "subject to the condition that such person not commit an offense under chapter 73 of this title,"; and

(2) inserting between "impose" and "the" the following: "a condition of release that such person not commit an offense under chapter 73 of this title and impose"; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following: "Notwithstanding any other provision of this subsection, the pretrial release of any person pursuant to this section or section 3148 shall be deemed to include a condition that the defendant not commit or cause to be committed any act proscribed by sections 1503, 1512, and 1513 of this title".

SEC. 202. (a) Title 18 of the United States Code is amended by adding after chapter 223 the following new chapter:

"CHAPTER 224—PROTECTION OF WITNESSES

"Sec.
"3521. Witness relocation and protection.
"3522. Reimbursement of expenses.
"3523. Civil action to restrain witness or victim intimidation.
"3524. Definition for chapter.

"§ 3521. Witness relocation and protection

"(a) The Attorney General may provide for the relocation or protection of a government witness or a potential government witness in an official proceeding if the Attorney General determines that an offense described in section 1503, 1512, or 1513 of this title, or a State or local offense that is similar in nature or that involves a crime of violence directed at a witness, is likely to be committed. The Attorney General may also provide for the relocation or protection of the immediate family of, or a person otherwise closely associated with, such witness or potential witness if the family or person may also be endangered.

"(b) In connection with the relocation or protection of a witness, a potential witness, or an immediate family member or close associate of a witness or potential witness, the Attorney General may take any action he determines to be necessary to protect such person from bodily injury, and otherwise to assure his health, safety, and welfare, for as long as, in the judgment of the Attorney General, such danger exists. The Attorney General may—

"(1) provide suitable official documents to enable a person relocated to establish a new identity;

"(2) provide housing for the person relocated or protected;

"(3) provide for the transportation of household furniture and other personal property to the new residence of the person relocated;

"(4) provide a tax-free subsistence payment, in a sum established in regulations issued by the Attorney General, for such times as the Attorney General determines to be warranted;

"(5) assist the person relocated in obtaining employment; and

"(6) refuse to disclose the identity or location of the person relocated or protected, or any other matter concerning the person or the program after weighing the danger such a disclosure would pose to the person, the detriment it would cause to the general effectiveness of the program, and the benefit it would afford to the public or to the person seeking the disclosure.

"(c) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (b)(6), if a person relocated under this section is named as a defendant in a civil cause of action, arising prior to the person's relocation, for damages resulting from bodily injury, property damage, or injury to business, process in the civil proceeding may be served upon the Attorney General. The Attorney General shall make reasonable efforts to serve a copy of the process upon the person relocated at his last known address. If a judgment in such an action is entered against the person relocated, the Attorney General shall detemine whether the person has made reasonable efforts to comply with the provisions of that judgment. The Attorney General shall take affirmative steps to urge the person relocated to comply with any judgment rendered. If the Attorney General determines that the person has not made reasonable efforts to comply with the provisions of the judgment, he may, in his discretion, after weighing the danger to the person relocated, disclose the identity and location of that person to the plaintiff entitled to recovery pursuant to the judgment. Any such disclosure shall be made upon the express condition that further disclosure by the plaintiff of such identity or location may be made only if essential to the plaintiff's efforts to recover under the judgment, and only to such additional persons as is necessary to effect the recovery. Any such disclosure or nondisclosure by the Attorney General shall not subject the government to liability in any action based upon the consequences thereof.

"§ 3522. Reimbursement of expenses

"The provision of transportation, housing, subsistence, or other assistance to a person under section 3521 may be conditioned by the Attorney General upon reimbursement of expenses in whole or in part to the United States by a State or local government.

"§ 3523. Civil action to restrain witness or victim intimidation

"(a) The Attorney General may initiate a civil proceeding to prevent and restrain an offense involving a witness or a victim under sections 1503, 1512 or 1513 of this title. After a hearing and upon a finding, which may be based upon hearsay or the representation of the attorney for the government or the counsel for the defendant, that an offense under sections 1503, 1512 or 1513 of this title involving a witness or a victim has occurred or is reasonably likely to occur, the court may order a defendant, a witness or other person connected with the case, or any individual in the courtroom to—

"(1) refrain from engaging in conduct in violation of section 1503, 1512, or 1513 of this title;

"(2) maintain a prescribed distance from a specified victim or witness; and

"(3) refrain from communicating with a specified victim or witness except under such conditions as the court may impose.

"(b) A district court of the United States in which a proceeding is initiated under this section has jurisdiction to hear and determine the matter so presented, and to prevent and restrain an offense referred to in subsection (a). In a proceeding initiated under this section, the court shall proceed as soon as practicable to a hearing and determination.

"§ 3524. Definition for chapter

"As used in this subchapter 'government' includes the Federal Government and a State or local government.".

(b) The table of chapters for part II of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding after the item for chapter 223 the following new item:

"224. Protection of witnesses..... 3521".

TITLE III—RESTITUTION

SEC. 301. (a) Chapter 227 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"§ 3579. Order of restitution

"(a) The court, in imposing a sentence on a defendant for any offense under this title, except an offense described in subsection (d), may order the defendant to make appropriate restitution. The order of restitution shall require that the defendant—

"(1) in the case of an offense causing injury or death, make restitution to the victim of the offense or estate of the victim in an amount that does not exceed income lost because of the victim's incapacitation or death, necessary medical expenses including ones associated with physical, psychological or vocational rehabilitation and, if applicable, the expenses for the funeral and burial of the victim; and

"(2) in the case of an offense resulting in loss, damage, or destruction of property—

"(A) restore the property to the victim of the offense; or

"(B) make restitution to the victim of the offense in an amount that does not exceed the value of the property; or

"(3) make restitution in money or, when the victim agrees, in services to the victim or to a person or organization designated by the victim.

If the court does not order restitution, the court must state for the record the reasons. The court shall make the order of restitution as fair as possible to the victim without unduly complicating or prolonging the sentencing process.

"(b)(1) The court shall not order restitution as to any victim who is bound by an earlier judgment in, or a settlement of a civil proceeding involving the underlying offense.

"(2) Any amount paid to a person pursuant to an order of restitution shall be set off against an amount later recovered as compensatory damages by such person in any civil proceeding.

"(3) A conviction of a defendant by a Federal court of an offense involving the act giving rise to restitution under this section shall estop the defendant from denying the essential allegations of the criminal offense in any subsequent civil proceeding brought by the victim.

"(4) If appropriate the court may consider ordering restitution to any party who has compensated the victim for expenses or losses directly related to the crime.

"(5) An order of restitution may be enforced by the victim or the United States in same manner as a judgment in a civil action and notwithstanding any other provision of law, an order of restitution shall be satisfied by the defendant before any Federal lien.

"(c) If a defendant is placed on probation or paroled pursuant to this title any restitution ordered under this section shall be a condition of such parole or probation. Failure to comply with an order of restitution shall be grounds for the revocation of parole or probation. In determining whether failure to comply with an order of restitution shall be grounds for the revocation of parole or probation, the Court shall consider the defendant's employment status, earning ability, the willfulness of the defendant's failure to pay, and any other special circumstances that may have a bearing on the defendant's ability to pay.".

(b) The analysis for chapter 227 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"3579. Order of restitution.".

(c) Within six months after the date of enactment of this title, the Attorney General shall report to Congress concerning any laws necessary to ensure that all victims of crime are justly compensated in those cases where restitution is not possible. The Attorney General shall consider funding methods such as imposing additional fines on all individuals convicted of Federal crimes.

(d) The court may not order restitution in any offense described in:

(1) section 24 of the Securities Act of 1933 (15 U.S.C. 77x) (relating to the registration of securities);

(2) section 325 of the Trust Indenture Act of 1939, as added by the Act of August 3, 1939, and amended (15 U.S.C. 77yyy) (relating to the public offering of notes, bonds, debentures, evidences of indebtedness, and certificates of interest or participation therein);

(3) section 32(a) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78ff(a)) (relating to regulation of transactions in securities exchanges and over-the-counter markets);

(11) the eleventh paragraph of section 25(a) of the Act of December 23, 1913, as added by the Act of December 24, 1919 (12 U.S.C. 617) (relating to the prohibition on the use of corporate funds to manipulate the price of a commodity by an agent of a corporation organized to do foreign banking); and

(12) sections 1, 2, and 3 of the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C. 1, 2, and 3) (relating to agreements in restraint of trade and monopolizing trade).

TITLE IV—FEDERAL ACCOUNTABILITY FOR ESCAPE OR RELEASE OF FEDERAL PRISONER

SEC. 401. (a) Section 1346(b) of title 28, United States Code, is amended by inserting "(1)" immediately after "(b)."

(b) Section 1346(b) of title 28, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(2)(A) Subject to the provisions of chapter 171 of this title and subparagraph (B) of this paragraph, the district courts, together with the United States District Court for the District of the Canal Zone and the District Court of the Virgin Islands, shall have exclusive jurisdiction of any civil action on a claim against the United States for damages, accruing on and after the date of enactment of this paragraph, for personal injury or death directly caused by any dangerous offender charged with or convicted of a Federal offense who is released from, or who escapes from, lawful custody of an employee of, or any person acting as the lawful agent of, the United States as a result of the gross negligence of such employee or person.

"(B) For the purposes of this paragraph 'dangerous offender' means a person charged with or convicted of a crime involving the use, attempted use, or threatened use of violence against the person of another.".

SEC. 402. Subsection (a) of section 2680 of title 28 of the United States Code is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "This subsection shall not apply to actions constituting gross negligence for purposes of section 1346(b)(2) of this title.".

TITLE V—FEDERAL GUIDELINES FOR FAIR TREATMENT OF CRIME VICTIMS AND WITNESSES IN THE CRIMINAL JUSTICE SYSTEM

SEC. 501. (a) Within six months after the date of enactment of this title, the Attorney General shall develop and implement guidelines for the Department of Justice consistent with the purposes of this Act. The Attorney General shall assign responsibilities for the implementation of each of the guidelines. In preparing the guidelines the Attorney General shall consider the following objectives:

(1) SERVICES TO VICTIMS OF CRIME.—Law enforcement personnel should ensure that victims routinely receive emergency social and medical services as soon as possible and are given information on the following—

(A) availability of crime victim compensation (where applicable):

(B) community-based victim treatment programs;

(C) their role in the criminal justice process, including what they can expect from them;

(D) key points in the criminal justice process at which they might want to request information as to the status of their particular case and suggestions on how best to request this information; and

(E) ability of law enforcement officers to protect victims and witnesses from intimidation.

(2) SCHEDULING CHANGES.—All victims and witnesses who have been scheduled to attend criminal justice proceedings should either be notified as soon as possible of any scheduling changes which will affect their appearances or have an "on call" or "telephone-alert" system available.

(3) PROMPT NOTIFICATION TO VICTIMS OF MAJOR SERIOUS CRIMES.—The opportunity to request advance notification of important criminal justice proceedings shall be given to victims, witnesses, relatives of those victims and witnesses who are minors, and relatives of homicide victims. Those same individuals, who provide the appropriate official with a current address and telephone number should receive prompt advance, if possible, notification of judicial proceedings relating to their case, including—

(A) arrest or initial appearance before a judicial officer of the accused;

(B) initial bond decision of the accused; and

(C) disposition of the case (including trial, sentencing, and eventual release of accused).

"(4) CONSULTATION WITH VICTIM.—The prosecution should obtain the non-binding views of victims of serious crimes, or in the case of a minor child or homicide, the victim's family, prior to making a recommendation to the court, when the victim has provided a current address and telephone number. The key points for consultation include—

(A) pretrial release hearings (if feasible);

(B) pretrial diversion program;

(C) dismissal; and

(D) plea negotiations;

(5) SEPARATE WAITING AREA.—Victims and other prosecutor witnesses should be provided prior to court appearance a waiting area that is separate from all other witnesses.

(6) PROPERTY RETURN.—Law enforcement agencies and prosecutors should promptly return victim's property held for evidentiary purposes unless there are compelling law enforcement reason for retaining it.

(7) NOTIFICATION TO EMPLOYER.—A victim or witness should be asked if he would like his employer to be notified of need for the victim/witness to cooperate and, therefore, be absent from work. If the victim or witness has to take time off from work to assist in the investigation or prosecution of the case, employers should be encouraged to continue to pay the victim or witness as if he had actually worked. In situations where as a direct result of a crime or cooperation with law enforcement officials, the victim or witness is subjected to serious financial strain, a law enforcement official should offer to contact creditors to explain the circumstances.

(8) TRAINING BY FEDERAL LAW ENFORCEMENT TRAINING FACILITIES.—The Attorney General and Secretary of the Treasury should instruct the directors of the Federal training facilities to ensure that victim assistance training be offered to law enforcement personnel so that victims are properly assisted immediately following the commission of crime and throughout the duration of the criminal justice proceedings; and to ensure that criminal justice personnel are familiar with these guidelines.

(9) GENERAL VICTIM ASSISTANCE.—The guidelines should also ensure that when feasible other important means of assisting victims and witnesses, such as the adoption of transportation, parking, and translator services for victims in court, are provided.

(b) Nothing in this title shall be construed as creating a cause of action against the United States.

SEC. 502. All Federal law enforcement agencies, outside of the Department of Justice, shall adopt guidelines consistent with section 501.

TITLE VI—PROFIT BY A CRIMINAL FROM SALE OF HIS STORY

SEC. 601. Within one year after the date of enactment of this title, the Attorney General shall report to Congress regarding any laws that are necessary to ensure that no Federal felon derives any profit from the sale of the recollections, thoughts, and feelings of such felon with regards to the offense committed by the felon until any victim of the offense receives restitution.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I simply wish to thank all Senators.

I thank, first of all, Senator THURMOND, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, who expedited not only the hearings but the consideration of this measure on the Victims Assistance Act.

I thank, of course, my principal cosponsor, Senator LAXALT, with whom it has been such a great privilege to work and without whose diligence in the efforts in the committee I do not think we would have developed such a fine work product.

I am deeply indebted to Senator BIDEN, who cooperated with us in every way. Most of this legislation is a part of the omnibus bill that he has been working on. It is through his efforts today that we were able to clear this bill for consideration.

Finally, Mr. President, I observe that, as we meet here at this hour, the President's Commission on Victims, which the President appointed some weeks ago, ably chaired by Lois Harrington, is deliberating at this very moment down at the courthouse on the issue of what we should have in the way of a national policy, not just a Federal Government policy, but a national policy on victims and witnesses.

The passage of this bill by the Senate I think underscores the sensitivity of this body and all its Members to seeing to it that we do something at long last to balance the scale of justice now more in favor of the victims and the witnesses and end a situation where some people have said we often give more attention to the rights of the criminals than we do to the rights of victims and witnesses.

I thank all my colleagues, and especially Senator BAKER and Senator ROBERT C. BYRD for their cooperation in this matter.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, also as in morning business I am prepared to take up H.R. 1710, Calendar Order No. 748, if that is cleared on the minority leader's calendar.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, that is cleared.

USE OF THE FRANK BY THE LAW REVISION COUNSEL

The bill (H.R. 1710) to authorize the use of the frank for official mail sent by the Law Revision Counsel of the House of Representatives, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

ORDER DISCHARGING THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY FROM FURTHER CONSIDERATION OF SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 205

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I believe this has been cleared as well. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Judiciary be discharged from further consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 205.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

NATIONAL SEWING MONTH

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate, Senate Joint Resolution 205, the item just discharged from the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the resolution by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S.J. Res. 205) to designate September 1982 as "National Sewing Month".

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

● Mr. EAST. Mr. President, I recently introduced a resolution to designate September as "National Sewing Month." This resolution, Senate Joint Resolution 205, parallels a resolution introduced in the House by Representative BILL BONER of Tennessee.

This resolution is of particular interest to the people of my State, since North Carolina is one of the Nation's leaders in textile manufacturing. Many of our people work in textile mills, fabric centers, sewing shops, or otherwise participate in the day-to-day buying and selling of sewing items.

Yet home sewing is very much a national avocation. More than 90 million Americans sew at home: 50 million citizens have the basic skills to do small-item or mend-type sewing at home, and 40 million citizens sew at least part of their wardrobe—with many of them making home furnishing items as well. Home sewers also make sport accessories, arts/crafts handiwork, and energy-saving items.

National Sewing Month is being actively promoted by the American Home Sewing Association, which represents over 500 corporations and retail outlets in the textile, fabric, pattern, and fiber sectors. The industry is being joined in its efforts by a wide variety of educational, social, and service groups including home economics teachers, 4-H clubs, the Girl Scouts of America, American Sewing Guilds, Future Homemakers of America, and others.

Mr. President, I urge that the Senate support this sewing awareness effort by passing Senate Joint Resolution 205. I also ask that an excellent article on home sewing from the current issue of Forbes magazine be inserted in the RECORD.

The article follows:

A STITCH IN TIME

(By Thomas Jaffe)

Listen closely and you may be able to hear it: the distant, fitful hum of sewing machines. Up until recently only about 20 percent of American women used their Singers twice a month or more. But with the sorry state of the economy and changing lifestyles those machines are coming out of the closet more often these days. Just look at the earnings of manufacturers supplying the home sewing market: Wm. E. Wright, a $61 million (sales) purveyor of everything from ribbons to zippers, reported a 65 percent increase in profits, to $3.7 million, in its June fiscal year. Wright's 6 percent margins are the best in a decade. Earnings projections for retail fabric companies like Fabri-Centers of America and House of Fabrics call for a 30 percent to 40 percent increase this year.

Nor has this sudden burst of activity been lost on investors. Since last September the Price of House of Fabrics common has nearly tripled, to a recent 18. Wright, traded over the counter, has doubled, to 12¼. And Fabri-Centers of America has almost doubled, to 17¾.

Why the suddenly rekindled interest in needle and thread? Simple economics. Today over half of American women work. They want something to wear on the job with enough style that it will look good for at least a couple of years, not just one season. In the midst of a recession with unemployment at its highest level since the Depression, if you can make your own dress for as little as 30 percent of what it would cost you to buy it in a store you start thinking about your sewing machine.

This time the patternmakers are ready. "We're aiming at the customer who wants to make something simple and fast," says Arthur Joinnides, vice president of American Can's Butterick Fashion Marketing Co. and the publisher of Vogue Patterns. Yesterday's enormous catalogs, with patterns for 700 styles or more and frighteningly complex instructions showing as many as five views of the finished dress, frightened off a lot of potential home sewers, and patternmakers seem to have learned their lesson.

In 1980, for instance, Butterick introduced its See & Sew line—only 96 styles on their own display stand. There are fewer pattern pieces. There's only one view to consult and instructions that mercifully allow for a graded fit. "After all," laughs Joinnides," who's a perfect 8 or 10?" Best of all, their price is only $1.19 each, vs. the $2.75 pattern average. (The total U.S. market is an estimated $2.75 million.) After just three years See & Sew accounts for some 7 percent of more than 100 million patterns sold annually.

There have been other changes in the market since Wilbur Peters, chairman of $122 million (sales) Minnesota Fabrics Inc., started in fabric retailing 23 years ago. "We had loads of stuff piled high and priced cheap," he remembers. "We specialized in offgoods, overruns and discontinued patterns. If we tried that approach today, we'd be sunk." Last year many women went to MF's 92 stores to buy fabric for patterns designed by the likes of Calvin Klein, Yves St. Laurent and Ralph Lauren.

"We're in the fashion business, pure and simple," says Michael Feuer, vice president of $173 million (sales) Fabri-Centers of America, Inc. "We just happen to market it by the yard rather than by the size." To do this successfully, however, Feuer says you also must offer full customer service. Minnesota has added 50 home economists to its sales staff to help beginners get in the home sewing habit. Feuer thinks the reason some of the giant retailers like K Mart couldn't make it in the business is that their operations were basically self-service.

After all, many of the big retail chains scrambled into fabrics in the first place to cash in on the double knit craze. "Double knits were so easy to sew that women just bought patterns and a bunch of material and waltzed out of the store," says Wes Phillips, senior fabric buyer for $2 billion (sales) TG&Y Stores of Oklahoma City. "It was so easy from the retailer's point of view that once the double knit days were over, plenty of guys sat there asking themselves, 'Where did all our quick sales go?' and never got around to building a true organization for their fabric departments."

Other discounters like Wal-Mart, Zarye and TG&Y made the adjustment and survived. Says Malcolm Sherman, general manager of Zayre Stores: "If you try to sell to home sewers the way you market health and beauty aids or ketchup, you're bound to lay an egg."

Nobody is predicting a long-term boom in home sewing. And the recession that has encouraged this do-it-yourself economizing won't last throughout the Eighties. But there is no question that home sewing has a new lease on life. "If we could get just one-tenth of the customers for ready-to-wear clothes to start sewing more," says Art Joinnides of Vogue Patterns, "the size of the industry would double."●

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and to be read a third time. The joint resolution was read the third time and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

The joint resolution (S.J. Res. 205) together with its preamble is as follows:

S.J. RES. 205

Whereas the American Home Sewing Association is sponsoring a first industrywide promotion effort to increase consumer sewing education and family sewing participation; and

Whereas over fifty million consumers sew at home and over forty million citizens sew at least part of their wardrobe; and

Whereas the home sewing industry generates over $3,500,000,000 in sales annually for the United States economy; and

Whereas unnumbered careers in fashion, retail merchandising, fashion design, interior design, patternmaking, and textile design and parts of the garment industry have had their genesis in a seventh or eighth grade home economics sewing class: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the month of September 1982 is designated "National Sewing Month", and the President is requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such month with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

S. 1814 INDEFINITELY POSTPONED

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I move to indefinitely postpone Calendar Order 716, S. 1814.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR BUDGET COMMITTEE TO FILE REPORT ON SENATE RESOLUTION 447

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Budget Committee have until the close of business tomorrow, the 15th of September, to report Senate Resolution 447.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

TEMPORARY INCREASE IN THE PUBLIC DEBT LIMIT

Mr. BAKER. Now, Mr. President, what is the pending business before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. House Joint Resolution 520 is the pending business. The pending question is the Baucus amendment.

Mr. BAKER. Yes, Mr. President.

I would point out to my colleagues this has been pending now for more than 2 weeks, and while there will be a cloture vote tomorrow at 5 p.m. under the provisions of rule XXII and pursuant to unanimous consent previously agreed to setting that time, there is also an order that provides that no tabling motion will be in order for the remainder of this calendar day, which was designed originally to encourage Members to debate freely and to discuss these issues without fear of parliamentary complications.

I think we failed in that because I do not find many takers. But, Mr. President, it is only 3:25 in the afternoon, and I do not plan to go out at this hour. So I would once again urge Senators to come to the floor and make their contribution to this debate and to say whatever they may wish pro or con.

Mr. President, earlier today I filed a cloture motion with respect to further debate against the Helms amendment which will mature, under the provisions of the rule, on Thursday 1 hour after the Senate convenes and after a quorum call is provided for under the rule. That, of course, would occur only if cloture is not invoked on Wednesday at 5 p.m.

If cloture is invoked on Wednesday that would be a nullity. But in the event we must have the vote on Thursday, may I inquire of the minority leader and the distinguished Senator from Oregon (Mr. PACKWOOD) if they might be in position to explore the possibility of a time certain for that vote on Thursday, as we have under other circumstances?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I have asked the staff to explore the possibility of agreeing to a request to vote at 2 p.m. on Thursday.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the Senator. If he could let me know when he is in position to do so I would like to put a request that we establish that as a time certain to vote.

Mr. PACKWOOD. That is fine with me.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I will not put the request at this time, but we will check with our cloakroom, as the minority leader has indicated he is checking with his. It would be my hope that no Senator will object to the request to set the time at 2 o'clock on Thursday if that vote is required and without the requirement for a mandatory quorum under the provisions of rule XXII.

Mr. President, we are now on the debt limit bill. I thank all Senators, including the minority leader, for permitting me to transact this business as in morning business. I yield the floor.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, does the distinguished majority leader intend to renew the request by him for no tabling motion for tomorrow?

Mr. BAKER. Perhaps, Mr. President. But may I say to my friend, the minority leader, that I would like to consider that a little further before I make the request, and I would not propose to do it at this time.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I thank the majority leader.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HAYAKAWA). Without objection, it is so ordered.

TIME TO VOTE

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, the abortion issue is an important one and one which I feel should be addressed by Congress. The issue has been fully debated. So I shall vote tomorrow to bring debate to a close on the Helms proposal. I think the Senate should vote one way or the other on the issue.

In regard to the Helms amendment, I have studied the Helms proposal and shall vote against it as I feel it goes too far.

THE GOVERNMENT'S FINANCIAL SITUATION

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, I wish to comment briefly on the Government's financial situation.

The total deficit for the current fiscal year through July 31, 1982—and this is the latest date for which figures are available—on that date the deficit was $106 billion. Yes, $106 billion deficit for the first 10 months of the current fiscal year.

Now let us equate that to what the Senate told the American people last year the deficit would be. On May 18, 1981, not much more than a year ago. Congress passed a budget resolution which stated that the deficit would be $37 billion. Last July, a little more than a year later, the deficit was $106 billion and still climbing.

The Budget Committee and the budget resolutions passed by the Senate have consistently underestimated spending. For the fiscal year 1980, the Budget Committee and the budget resolution underestimated spending by $144 billion. For the fiscal year 1981, the Budget Committee and the budget resolution underestimated spending by $44 billion. And for this year, fiscal 1982, which ends in 2 weeks and 2 days, the Budget Committee and the budget resolution underestimates spending by $36 billion.

This is a horrendous record, a terrible record. I think it is just irresponsible the way Congress is handling the tax funds of the American people.

This fiscal year will end with the largest deficit in history, the largest deficit in history, well over $100 billion.

Is it any wonder, Mr. President, that the American economy is in the shape it is? Is there any wonder why interest rates are so high?

Interest rates are devastating. They have brought the housing industry to a halt; they have had a major adverse impact on the automobile industry. Indeed, interest rates have had an adverse impact on virtually every business and every individual who has to go to the banks, to the money markets, to borrow funds either for business or for daily living.

When anyone tells you, the American public, that the Federal Government is getting spending under control, you ask them to show you figures. The figures do not justify any claim that Federal spending is being brought under control. It is spending as usual.

One of these days this Congress will be forced by circumstances to face up to this issue of spending; up to this point it has not done so.

The much-heralded change in budget procedures of some 7, or 8 years ago was supposed to bring a discipline to Congress. No discipline has been brought to Congress.

When it comes to spending there is no discipline in the Congress of the United States. Every record shows that. All one needs to do is look at the figures. Spending is totally out of control.

As a politician I know it is much easier to vote to spend than it is to vote to safeguard the tax funds of the American people. All the pressure is to spend. There is no pressure on the other side.

For many years now, Congress has been buying the people's votes with the people's own money. There is no place that Congress can get money, there is no place the Federal Government can get money, except out of the pockets of the people who work.

Yes, the deficit for fiscal year 1982, which ends in 2 weeks and 2 days, as of July 1 of this year was $106 billion. That is $69 billion more that authorized by the budget resolution passed May 18, 1981.

Last Friday was a dramatic day in the Senate. The President of the United States had vetoed a $14 billion supplemental appropriation bill which he said was excessive spending. And let me emphasize that a supplemental spending bill is what the name implies; it is additional spending far and above the regular appropriation bills.

After the measure was vetoed, it went to the House of Representatives, which overrode his veto. The Senator from Virginia is not surprised that the Democratic-controlled House of Representatives would vote to override the veto on a spending bill.

But then it comes to the Republican dominated Senate. The Republican dominated Senate could not even get one-third of its membership to support the President on his veto of an excessive money spending bill.

I think that was a highly symbolic vote. To me it says that the Congress is continuing business as usual when it comes to uncontrolled spending of American tax funds. It suggests, too, that it does not make too much difference when the Congress is Republican or Democratic, the spending goes on as usual.

How long can this country continue to tolerate deficits of the magnitude of $106 billion? And it will be greater by the time the fiscal year is over. The deficit projected for the upcoming fiscal year is $155 billion, and for the year after that it will be more than $100 billion. So it will be 3 years in a row, and maybe 4, with deficits exceeding $100 billion. To the Senator from Virginia, that is a very alarming, dangerous prospect for the people of the United States. The more the Government goes into debt, the more the Government has to borrow, the more that forces up interest rates.

If we do not get interest rates down, how can the young people buy a home? How can the working people buy automobiles? How can we get a sustained economic recovery going unless we bring interest rates down to a point where the average working man and woman can make the purchases that are necessary both to them and to develop a strong economic recovery?

Yes, Mr. President, I am greatly concerned about the Government's financial situation. I think it is the major problem facing the United States today. This country could experience a real sustained economic recovery if we could get the Government's finances straightened out, if we could control Government spending.

To give one other example before I close of what the Congress has done, Congress this year passed a budget resolution which puts into motion spending policies and programs that, in the period of 3 years and 5 months ending September 30, 1985—3 years from the end of this month—will increase the national debt by 44 percent—yes, 44 percent. Last April the debt was $1.069 trillion; the budget resolution projects a debt of $1.468 trillion; on September 30, 1985.

Incidentally, speaking of the national debt, many say, "Well, what difference does it make, we are not going to pay it anyway, so why worry about it?"

Of course, that is foolish; there are many reasons to worry about it. One reason is that the interest charges on the national debt—the interest cost of the national debt paid by the taxpayers—is $115 billion at the present time. Yes, $115 billion just to pay the interest costs on the national debt.

If one wants to put it another way, of every personal and corporate income tax dollar paid into the Federal Treasury, 36 cents of that dollar goes to pay the interest costs on the debt.

And yet the Congress this year, the Senate this year, has passed a budget resolution which will increase the national debt by 44 percent, $400 billion; during the period which will end 3 years from now; namely, September 30, 1985.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

TEMPORARY INCREASE IN THE PUBLIC DEBT LIMIT

The Senate resumed consideration of H.J. Res. 520.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I would like to respond, if I might, just momentarily to my good friend from Virginia about whether or not we have had full debate on the pending Helms amendment. I very much appreciate his support today against cloture. I heard his statement that he will vote for it tomorrow. I do appreciate the fact that if we have to vote on the Helms amendment that he will vote against it.

But if he means if we have had full, open debate, Senator HELMS and I confronting each other or trying to debate what his current amendment means, we have not.

In deference to the majority leader, he has endeavored to get that kind of debate. That is the reason we have been operating under a unanimous consent that no motions to table are in order so nobody has to worry about who has the floor.

Up until a few weeks ago, we assumed that we would be debating the so-called human life bill that had been introduced by Senator HELMS and held at the desk. And that human life bill was an attempt not even obliquely to almost directly overturn the Supreme Court decision in Roe against Wade, which was the Supreme Court decision that legalized a woman's right to choose whether or not she wanted an abortion.

In the human life bill, the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. HELMS) had language that reads as follows:

The Congress finds that present day scientific evidence indicates a significant likelihood that actual human life exists from conception.

The Congress further finds that the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States was intended to protect all human beings.

Upon the basis of these findings, and in the exercise of the powers of the Congress, including its power under section 5 of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, the Congress hereby declares that for the purpose of enforcing the obligation of the States under the fourteenth amendment not to deprive persons of life without due process of law, human life shall be deemed to exist from conception, without regard to race, sex, age, health, defect, or condition of dependency; and for this purpose "person" shall include all human life as defined herein.

The 14th amendment reads as follows, and section 1 is critical:

All persons—

And I emphasize "persons"—

born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

Now, that is section 1 of the 14th amendment.

It is clear that the amendment, over and over, refers to persons and starts out "All persons born or naturalized." It is clear that the drafters of that amendment understood what they meant by the term "persons."

The Supreme Court, in its decision of Roe against Wade, which legalized abortion, said that they did not have to decide, for the purposes of that decision, when life started. They freely admitted that philosophers, theologians, and jurists have dealt with that point for some time but, for the purposes of their decision, they did not have to decide it because the fetus, especially in the early months of pregnancy, was not a person within the definition of the 14th amendment.

Then they laid down their decision as to when a woman might make a choice as to whether or not she wanted an abortion.

Senator HELMS, in order to overturn that decision, and I emphasize this, overturn it by statute—there was a constitutional decision. The Supreme Court vested the woman's right to make that decision for herself in the Constitution. The normal method of overturning constitutional decisions of the Court, if you do not like them, is by a constitutional amendment. And we have done that a number of times in our history.

Senator HELMS preferred to attempt to overturn it by a statute, which, of course, requires only a majority vote in the House and Senate, rather than a constitutional amendment, which requires a two-thirds vote and then ratification by three-quarters of the States, which is a very difficult process. Hence, the human life bill was introduced.

There were hearings on it in the Senate Judiciary Committee and the bill was roundly attacked even by people who did not like the Supreme Court's decision on Roe against Wade, as being a back-door effort to reverse the Supreme Court by a statute. Senator HELMS took a vote count, as best he could, on his amendment on this bill. I took a vote count. It was clear that if this particular amendment came to a vote, it would have lost by a fairly wide majority. He knew that; I knew that. Consequently, he has changed his tactic and now has a slightly different approach.

He now says, and these are the three qualifications:

Scientific evidence demonstrates the life of each human being begins at conception.

The Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Roe against Wade erred in not recognizing the humanity of the unborn child and the compelling interest of the several States in protecting the life of each person before birth; and

The Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Roe against Wade erred in excluding unborn children from the safeguards afforded by the equal protection and due process provisions of the Constitution of the United States.

Now, my fellow Senators, I do not know what that means. It is clear that is a change from his earlier human life bill where he attempted, by a bootstrap argument, to define life as beginning at conception and that all life was a person within the meaning of the 14th amendment and, therefore, entitled to the protection of the 14th amendment.

Does this new amendment, does this new bill of his mean the same thing? I think it does. And, indeed, the Senator from North Carolina, on one occasion, made a statement that he intended to accomplish the same thing with this new amendment.

But we have not had any debate on it. No chance to put and respond to questions because for 3 days—for 3 days—the Senator from North Carolina has indicated that he is prepared to vote on his amendment. But no one has had a chance to say, "Senator, is it different than the previous amendment, where the previous one was an effort to restrain the court or overturn by statute but this is an effort to expedite appeal from the Supreme Court, or are they one and the same thing in different language?"

Apparently, we are going to have no debate.

So we may be undertaking the reversal of the Supreme Court. We may be. I think we are, with this amendment, without ever having had a hearing on it, without a single person knowing for sure what it means, without any constitutional scholar ever coming and saying, "That is a dangerous way to go about overturning the Supreme Court."

I would like to have a debate. I am ready for a debate. I am here for a debate. But we have had none.

For those who want to terminate further discussion on this, who say that we have had an adequate debate and who will now vote for cloture to end debate, they may choose to do that, but they should not do it if they think we have had a meaningful debate on what the pending amendment means.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, this week, my colleagues are being called upon to cast many of the most important votes in the history of this body. The Senate must delay no longer in addressing the grievious situation created by the Supreme Court's Roe against Wade decision which has permitted the abortion of millions of unborn children over the years. Each moment that we delay results in the needless and unjustified deaths of countless innocent children. I submit that should the Senate choose not to act expeditiously to rectify this egregious situation, each of us is responsible for this unprecedented loss of human life.

I have searched my soul and decided that this issue will determine, as several others, what we are as a people. I do not consider it a religious issue. I consider it a human issue, perhaps one of the greatest civil rights issues of all time. The right to life deals with the most defenseless, voiceless, and vulnerable of all human beings—the unborn. The dimensions and significance of this issue are great. We have tolerated over 1 million abortions every year in this country. This is a staggering waste of human life.

It is time that we reflect on the significance of a legal system that permits the deaths of thousands each week. What kind of "justice" is this? As legislators, how can we stand idly by and witness such a tragic perversion of the most basic principles of human life—the right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness? Mr. President, I simply ask that my colleagues responsibily weigh the grave consequences of their decisions and search their consciences for guidance.

I congratulate Senator HELMS for his diligence in pressing for Senate consideration of this all-too-important issue. His dedication is to be commended.

Mr. President, there is virtually nothing in the Helms proposal that is either objectionable or controversial. While its purpose is twofold, its thrust is very basic and straightforward.

The proposed amendment incorporates the significant findings of numerous treaties, historical documents, international declarations, and Senate hearings regarding unborn children and the right to life. These findings are unanimous in that they affirm the fact that life begins at conception.

In accordance with these findings, the measure would get the Federal Government completely out of the business of abortion. Briefly, the proposal codifies the Hyde amendment restrictions on Federal funding of abortions, thereby eliminating the necessity of renewing these prohibitions annually through appropriations riders. Nearly all of these regulations and restrictions have been approved by the Congress in one form or another.

I hope that cloture can be invoked this week, so that we may move to the speedy adoption of the Helms amendment to this bill.

But to be quite frank, the measure before us is not my first choice as a vehicle for correcting the present situation nor is it my second choice. Unfortunately, this proposal will not sufficiently rectify the injustice created by the Supreme Court's Roe against Wade decision. My strong personal preference remains with the human life amendment approach, such as is embodied in my own amendment, Senate Joint Resolution 18; or the very similar amendment by Senator GARN which I have cosponsored, Senate Joint Resolution 17. Therefore, I must make clear that any statutory action which the Senate shall take on this matter shall not distract from my efforts to secure the constitutional guarantee of the right to life.

I hope that at some time during the consideration of this issue, the Senate could turn its attention to Senate Joint Resolution 110, the human life federalism amendment offered by my colleague from Utah, Senator HATCH. While Senate Joint Resolution 110 is not ideal, it could allow even greater protection of the right to life than the measure proposed by Senator HELMS. On March 10, the Senate Judiciary Committee approved the human life federalism amendment by a vote of 10 to 7. I believe that the Members of this body should at least offer their constituents an indication of their support for this proposal by subjecting it to a straight up or down vote.

I yield the floor.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa yield for a question?

Mr. GRASSLEY. I yield the floor, but I regret that I do not have time to yield for a question.

Mr. PACKWOOD. All right.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I have a number of unanimous-consent requests. Unless the Senator from Oregon, or another Senator, seeks recognition on the bill at this time, I am prepared to put us into a brief period for the transaction of routine morning business.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there now be a brief period for the transaction of routine morning business, not to extend beyond the hour of 5 p.m., in which Senators may speak.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

NCA, DOE BLAST PROPOSED ACID RAIN CONTROLS

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, as the Senate nears the possibility of debate on amendments to the Clean Air Act, I would like to point out that part of the bill, as reported by the Committee on Environment and Public Works, is based on inconclusive scientific evidence. As shown by testimony presented before a hearing recently held by the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, the facts are just not all in on the phenomenon of acid precipitation.

The entire transcript of the August 22 hearing will be available to my colleagues by the end of this week so that they may see for themselves how disparate are the opinions of the scientific community and how premature it would be to impose an acid rain control strategy at this point. As a prelude to this, however, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD two articles that highlight the scientific disagreement on the cause and effects of acid rain.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the National Coal Association News, Aug. 30, 1982]

NCA, DOE BLAST PROPOSED ACID RAIN CONTROLS

Jan W. Mares, the Energy Department's acting undersecretary, told the Senate Energy Committee August 22 that legislation pending before the Senate to reduce sulfur emissions from coal-fired power plants could cost consumers between $5 billion and $7 billion annually.

Mares said proposed acid rain controls are "especially disconcerting in light of the fact that major scientific uncertainties abound, and we have little understanding of the benefits, if any, that would result."

The plan, adopted by the Senate Environment Committee, would require utilities and industries in a 31-state region to reduce the amount of sulfur dioxide emitted from their smokestacks by 8 million tons annually by 1995.

According to Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp., the impact of such an acid rain plan would have devastating economic impacts upon the aluminum industry, increasing the cost of aluminum from the company's Ravenswood plant by more than five cents per pound.

"Over the past several years Kaiser and the entire U.S. aluminum industry have been severely impacted by increasing energy costs," the company said in a statement. "Already there are serious questions about the viability of many aluminum smelters as they face increased competition from others with lower energy and labor costs. Five cents a pound clearly represents a competitive problem. It is more than 10 percent of the current selling price of aluminum ingot."

In other testimony, Professor Alan Gertler of the University of Nevada's Atmospheric Sciences Center and Richard Semonin of the Illinois State Water Survey said additional research is needed to develop the most efficient abatement strategies for combatting acid rain.

[From the Western Kentucky Coal Association News, September 1982]

COAL INDUSTRY UNITED IN OPPOSITION TO SENATE ACID RAIN CONTROL PLAN

The nation's coal industry-miners and mining companies—told members of the Senate last month that it "stands united in the strongest possible opposition" to the acid rain control program approved July 22 by the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee.

In a joint letter signed by the presidents of the United Mine Workers of America, the National Coal Association and the Mining and Reclamation Council of America, the industry spokesmen charged the measure would cost far more than the $3.9 billion annual cost projected by the Environment and Public Works Committee and may reach $8.5 billion per year when fully implemented.

Sam Church, Jr., president of the United Mine Workers of America, Carl E. Bagge, president of the National Coal Association, and Daniel R. Gerkin, president of the Mining and Reclamation Council of America, signed the joint letter.

The group charged that even at the committee's lower cost estimate, consumer electric bills in some areas of 31 midwestern and eastern states that fall under the new program would increase by 50 percent or more. The industry leaders also said nearly 90,000 coal mining jobs could be dislocated or lost along with an additional 225,000 associated jobs and $6.6 billion in annual wages.

The Environment Committee measure calls for a reduction of 50 percent in emissions from existing utility power plants by 1995. However, the coal industry letter says the committee failed to recognize the effects of its requirements that new power plants "offset" new emissions with further reductions at existing plants.

One coal company analysis found this requirement would increase the 8 million ton annual reduction projected by the committee to 12 million tons. Such a requirement would raise the total cost of the measure to $8.5 billion per year, the letter said.

While the "high economic and social costs" of the committee proposal are certain, the coal industry leaders said, there is "uncertainty that additional, new controls would bring about a change in the acidity of rainfall."

Also, they said, there is "astounding inequity" in the proposal. As an example, the industry leaders cited a comparison of the effects of the proposed program on two states—Kentucky and New York—which have nearly identical levels of total manmade sulfur dioxide emissions. Although New York is supposed to be the state suffering the greatest environmental effects from rainfall, it would only be required to reduce its sulfur dioxide emissions one fourth as much as Kentucky, they said.

This inequity exists because the impact of the committee's proposal falls predominantly on midwestern coal-fired power plants and not on other sources of sulfur dioxide emissions. Some scientists believe that local sources of emissions in New York and other Northeastern states play a far greater role in potential rainfall effects than do more distant emissions.

The committee's action was based on the false assumption that rainfall is rapidly becoming more acidic and that environmental damage is increasing and spreading, the industry leaders said.

"New reports from the U.S. Geological Survey and New York State's Department of Environmental Conservation call into question the premise that immediate action is required," the group said. "In the longest continuous monitoring program of rainfall quality, the U.S.G.S. found that rainfall in New York State has remained virtually unchanged since it began its studies in 1965. Also analysis of new data from New York State's lake monitoring program shows that in the last few years lakes have not become more acidic and in fact may be improving.

"Responsible researchers suggest that not enough is understood about this phenomenon and man's role in its formation to embark on yet another costly regulatory program with results far from certain," the group said. They urged the Senate to reject "costly and premature proposals" to control acid rain and instead approve legislation to accelerate the existing federal acid rain research effort and establish a program to mitigate environmental effects in lakes and waters found to be more acid than normal.

Meanwhile, at the Kentucky Coal Conference in Lexington two weeks ago, Brad Cates, Director of the Intergovernmental Liaison Office of the Environmental Protection Agency, said "EPA must first determine if there is an acid deposition problem", and "The current effort by Congress to deal with the acid rain question is an excessive and premature response to a problem we know little about, although current studies should tell us much in a few years".

David Drake, Deputy Secretary of the Kentucky Department of Energy told the attendees at the conference that, "if the acid rain legislation passes in its current form, we will see a drastic increase in the use of Western coal, east of the Mississippi and a halt to the conversion of oil fired facilities to coal."

The legislation directs the Governors of the 31 states within the "acid deposition impact region" to negotiate their respective shares of the mandated 10 million ton reduction in sulfur dioxide emissions. If the Governors of three fourths of the 31 states reach agreement on how to allocate sulfur dioxide emission reductions, the agreement becomes binding and enforceable upon all 31 states. (Thus, the Governors of 24 states could agree that their states should affect the entire 8 million tons of reductions.) If the Governors fail to reach agreement within 18 months of the date of enactment a statutory formula is established to define each state's share of the 10 million ton reduction goal. The formula ranks the states by the extent to which all the actual utility emissions in a given state exceed 1.5 pounds of sulfur dioxide per million BTU heat input. (Under this formula, states with the highest sulfur dioxide emission rates have the greatest reduction burden; Indiana would have to reduce sulfur dioxide emissions by more than 70 percent, while Massachusetts would have to reduce sulfur dioxide emission by less than 10 percent.)

The 31 states are given 3½ years from the date of enactment to submit a plan to USEPA for achieving each state's respective share of the 10 million ton reduction requirement. If a state does not submit a plan within the time provided, or if the plan submitted has not been approved by USEPA within 6 months after its submission, then all major stationary source power plants in that state (except those subject to new source performance standards) must meet an emission limitation of 1.2 pounds of sulfur dioxide per million BTU heat input.

The sulfur dioxide emission reductions required by the amendment must be achieved

"at the earliest practicable date," but not later than January 1, 1993, unless the control strategy consists of "an innovative system of continuous emission reduction or the replacement of existing facilities with new facilities of substantially lower emissions," in which event the deadline is January 1, 1995.

WKCA President Steve Jones has conveyed the concerns for this legislation and the result to the Western Kentucky Coal industry to U.S. Senators Ford and Huddleston, calling such a possibility, "the darkest day in the history of the Western Kentucky Coal industry". He questions ability of any legislative body to "legislate Western Kentucky out of the electric utility market", pointing out that the electric utility industry is the largest user of domestic coal.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Saunders, one of his secretaries.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session, the Acting President pro tempore laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations and a treaty which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(The nominations and treaty received today are printed at the end of the Senate proceedings.)

ANNUAL REPORT ON ADMINISTRATION OF THE FEDERAL RAILROAD SAFETY ACT—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—PM 175

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, together with an accompanying report; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith the Eleventh Annual Report on the Administration of the Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970 (45 U.S.C. 421 et seq.) as required by the Act. This report was prepared in accordance with Section 211 of the Act and covers calendar year 1981.

RONALD REAGAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, September 14, 1982.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE FEDERAL LABOR RELATIONS AUTHORITY—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—PM 176

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, together with an accompanying report; which was referred to the Committee on Governmental Affairs:

To the Congress of the United States:

In accordance with Section 7104(e) of Title 5, United States Code, I hereby transmit the Third Annual Report of the Federal Labor Relations Authority which covers Fiscal Year 1981.

RONALD REAGAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, September 14, 1982.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE NATIONAL ENDOWMENT FOR THE ARTS AND NATIONAL COUNCIL ON THE ARTS—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—PM 177

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, together with an accompanying report; which was referred to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources:

To the Congress of the United States:

In accordance with the provisions of the National Foundation on the Arts and Humanities Act of 1965, as amended, I transmit herewith the Annual Report of the National Endowment for the Arts and the National Council on the Arts for the Fiscal Year 1981.

RONALD REAGAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, September 14, 1982.

ANNUAL REPORTS ON THE STATUS OF HEALTH INFORMATION AND HEALTH PROMOTION—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—PM 178

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, together with accompanying reports; which was referred to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources:

To the Congress of the United States:

In accordance with the provisions of P.L. 94-317, the "National Consumer Health Information and Health Promotion Act of 1976," I hereby transmit the Fourth and Fifth Annual Reports on the Status of Health Information and Health Promotion. The fourth report is based on the period of June 1980 through June 1981 and reviews activities that occurred primarily before I took office, and the fifth report is based on activities during the period of June 1981 through June 1982.

RONALD REAGAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, September 14, 1982.

MESSAGES FROM THE HOUSE

At 11:26 a.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Mr. Gregory, one its reading clerks, announced that the House has agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the following bill, with an amendment, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate:

H.R. 5139. An act to authorize appropriations for certain insular areas of the United States, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House has passed the following bill, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate:

H.R. 5831. An act to amend the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act to provide lending limits for fiscal years 1983, 1984, and 1985.

At 3:19 p.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Mr. Berry, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House agrees to the amendments of the Senate to the following bill:

H.R. 3620. An act transferring certain Federal property to the city of Hoboken, N.J.

The message also announced that the House has passed the following bills, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate:

H.R. 6222. An act to amend the Federal Reserve Act to exempt from reserve requirements a certain amount of the deposits and accounts of depository institutions;

H.R. 6384. An act to extend title XVII of the Public Health Service Act; and

H.R. 6422. An act to direct the Secretary of Agriculture to release on behalf of the United States a reversionary interest in certain land previously conveyed to the State of Connecticut.

The message further announced that the House has agreed to the following concurrent resolution, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate:

H. Con. Res. 405. Concurrent resolution directing the Clerk of the House of Representatives to make corrections in the enrollment of H.R. 3517.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED

The following bills were read the first and second times by unanimous consent, and referred as indicated:

H.R. 6222. An act to amend the Federal Reserve Act to exempt from reserve requirements a certain amount of the deposits and accounts of depository institutions; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

H.R. 6384. An act to extend title XVII of the Public Health Service Act; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

H.R. 6422. An act to direct the Secretary of Agriculture to release on behalf of the United States a reversionary interest in certain land previously conveyed to the State of Connecticut; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

HOUSE BILL PLACED ON THE CALENDAR

The following bill was read the first and second times by unanimous consent, and placed on the calendar:

H.R. 5831. An act to amend the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act to provide lending limits for fiscal years 1983, 1984, and 1985.

EXECUTIVE AND OTHER COMMUNICATIONS

The following communications were laid before the Senate, together with accompanying papers, reports, and documents, which were referred as indicated:

EC-4215. A communication from the Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary of the Navy for Shipbuilding and Logistics transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on a decision made to convert the Inactive Ship Maintenance function at the Naval Inactive Ship Detachment, Pearl Harbor, Hawaii to performance under contract; to the Committee on Armed Services.

EC-4216. A communication from the Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary of the Navy for Shipbuilding and Logistics transmitting, pursuant to law, notice of a decision made to convert the Motor Vehicle Operations and Maintenance function at the Pacific Missile Test Center, Point Mugu, Calif., to performance under contract; to the Committee on Armed Services.

EC-4217. A communication from the Acting Assistant Secretary of the Army for Installations, Logistics, and Financial Management transmitting, pursuant to law, notice of a decision made to convert the refuse collection and disposal function at Fort Sheridan, Ill., to performance under contract; to the Committee on Armed Services.

EC-4218. A communication from the Acting Assistant Secretary of the Army for Installations, Logistics, and Financial Management transmitting, pursuant to law, notice of a decision made to convert the motor vehicles operations function at Fort Riley, Kans., to performance under contract; to the Committee on Armed Services.

EC-4219. A communication from the Acting Assistant Secretary of the Army for Installations, Logistics, and Financial Management transmitting, pursuant to law, notice of a decision made to convert the maintenance function of the Directorate of Industrial Operations at Fort Riley, Kans., to performance under contract; to the Committee on Armed Services.

EC-4220. A communication from the Director of the Defense Security Assistance Agency transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on a foreign military assistance sale to Egypt; to the Committee on Armed Services.

EC-4221. A communication from the Director of the Defense Security Assistance Agency transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on a foreign military assistance sale to Korea; to the Committee on Armed Services.

EC-4222. A communication from the Director of the Defense Security Assistance Agency transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on a foreign military assistance sale to France; to the Committee on Armed Services.

EC-4223. A communication from the Assistant Secretary of State for Congressional Relations transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on an extension and guarantee of credit by the Export-Import Bank to the People's Republic of China in connection with its purchase of steelmaking equipment and related services; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

EC-4224. A communication from the Chairman of the Federal Financial Institutions Examination Council transmitting, pursuant to law, a report entitled "Section 340 Fair Housing Lending Study"; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

EC-4225. A communication from the Assistant Secretary of State for Congressional Relations transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to implement the Convention for the Conservation of Salmon in the North Atlantic Ocean; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

EC-4226. A communication from the Secretary of Transportation transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on the status of the public ports of the United States; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

EC-4227. A communication from the Secretary of Energy transmitting, pursuant to law, the 1982 third quarter report on biomass energy and alcohol fuels; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

EC-4228. A communication form the Secretary of the Interior transmitting, pursuant to law, notice of an oil and gas leasing sale, Diapir Field, Outer Continental Shelf; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

EC-4229. A communication from the Comptroller General of the United States transmitting, pursuant to law, a report entitled "Repeal of Unneeded Outer Continental Shelf Production Rate-Setting Functions Would Cut Costs"; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. THURMOND, from the Committee on the Judiciary, with an amendment and an amendment to the title and with a preamble:

S.J. Res. 97: A joint resolution to designate the second full week in October as "National Legal Secretaries' Court Observance Week."

By Mr. THURMOND, from the Committee on the Judiciary, without amendment and with a preamble:

S.J. Res. 174: A joint resolution to authorize and request the President to designate October 16, 1982, as "World Food Day."

By Mr. THURMOND, from the Committee on the Judiciary, without amendment:

S.J. Res. 234: A joint resolution to provide for the designation of the week commencing with the third Monday in February 1983 as "National Patriotism Week."

By Mr. THURMOND, from the Committee on the Judiciary, without amendment and with a preamble:

S.J. Res. 235: A joint resolution to proclaim March 21, 1983, as "National Agriculture Day."

S.J. Res. 238: A joint resolution to designate October 9, 1982, as "National Running and Fitness Day."

S.J. Res. 239: A joint resolution designating October 16, 1982, as "National Newspaper Carrier Appreciation Day."

S.J. Res. 241: A joint resolution to provide for the designation of the week of December 12, 1982 through December 18, 1982, as "National Drunk and Drugged Driving Awareness Week."

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following executive reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. THURMOND, from the Committee on the Judiciary:

Edward R. Camacho, of Guam, to be U.S. marshal for the district of Guam for a term of 4 years;

Max E. Wilson, of North Carolina, to be U.S. marshal for the western district of North Carolina for the term of 4 years; and Herbert M. Rutherford III, of New Jersey, to be U.S. marshal for the eastern district of Virginia for the term of 4 years.

By Mr. TOWER, from the Committee on Armed Services:

Andrew E. Gibson, of New Jersey, to be a member of the Board of the Panama Canal Commission; and William W. Watkin, Jr., of New Jersey, to be a member of the Board of the Panama Canal Commission.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, from the Committee on Armed Services, I report favorably the following nominations: Maj. Gen. William E. Brown, Jr., U.S. Air Force, to be lieutenant general, and Col. Diann A. Hale and Col. Arthur J. Sachsel, U.S. Air Force, to be brigadier general. I ask that these names be placed on the Executive Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, in addition, in the Air Force there are 472 appointments to the grades and dates of rank to be determined by the Secretary of the Air Force—list begins with James E. Albin—in the Air Force there are 8 appointments to the grades and dates of rank to be determined by the Secretary of the Air Force—list begins with David S. Bowles—in the Air Force there are 21 permanent promotions to the grade of lieutenant colonel and below—list begins with David S. Bowles—in the Air Force there are 3,829 permanent promotions to the grade of major—list begins with Gregory J. Aaron—and in the Marine Corps Reserve there are 199 permanent appointments to the grade of lieutenant colonel—list begins with James C. Adamson. Since these names have already appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and to save the expense of printing again, I ask unanimous consent that they be ordered to lie on the Secretary's desk for the information of any Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The nominations ordered to lie on the Secretary's desk appeared in the RECORD of September 8, 1982, at the end of the Senate proceedings.)

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

The following bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first and second time by unanimous consent, and referred as indicated:

By Mr. THURMOND (for himself, Mr. BIDEN, Mr. SPECTER, Mr. COCHRAN, Mr. DECONCINI, Mr. DOLE, Mr. EAST, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. HATCH, Mr. HEFLIN, Mr. LAXALT, Mr. LONG, Mr. NUNN, Mr. PRESSLER, Mr. QUAYLE, Mr. SIMPSON, Mr. SYMMS, Mr. ZORIN-SKY, Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD, Mr. CHILES, Mr. HELMS, Mr. WARNER, Mr. BAKER, Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. HUMPHREY, AND Mr. HUDDLESTON):

S. 2902. A bill to define the affirmative defense of insanity and to provide a procedure for the commitment of offenders suffering from a mental disease or defect, and for other purposes; read twice and ordered placed on the calendar.

By Mr. THURMOND (by request):

S. 2903. A bill to reform the use of the insanity defense in federal criminal cases, to ensure the admissibility of evidence when obtained by law enforcement authorities acting in good faith, and to define circumstances justifying federal intervention in State criminal proceedings; read twice and ordered placed on the calendar.

By Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD (for Mr. METZENBAUM (for himself, Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD, Mr. DIXON, Mr. HEINZ, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. MATHIAS, Mr. RIEGLE, Mr. DURENBERGER, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. EAGLETON, Mr. SARBANES, Mr. DECONCINI, Mr. CANNON, and Mr. SASSER)):

S. 2904. A bill to make more equitable certain provisions relating to unemployment compensation; read twice and placed on the calendar by unanimous consent.

● Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I would like to express my support for the legislation which Senator METZENBAUM has introduced today with respect to unemployment compensation. This legislation is urgently needed.

First, it will suspend until the national unemployment rate goes below 8.7 percent the illogical change which was made in last year's reconciliation bill with respect to the calculation of the insured unemployment rate (IUR). The insured unemployment rate is different from the nominal unemployment rate, which is the number normally cited in the press, and has traditionally been about 3 percent lower than the nominal rate. The IUR is the percentage of workers covered by a State's unemployment compensation program who are currently receiving State benefits. The IUR is used in determining whether a State is eligible for the extended benefits program for weeks 27 through 39, which is funded half by the State and half by the Federal Government.

As part of last year's reconciliation bill, the formula by which the IUR is determined was changed so that people who are receiving extended benefits are no longer included in the IUR. In other words, people who have received unemployment benefits for more than 26 weeks are no longer considered unemployed individuals. I object to this formula and agree that it should be suspended for three reasons.

First, it is illogical to me to have two individuals—one unemployed for 24 weeks and the other unemployed for 30 weeks—and to treat one as unemployed for the purpose of the IUR calculation and the other one as if he were employed. Both are without jobs. Both should be included in the insured unemployment rate. This illogic is compounded by the fact that the person who has been unemployed longer is probably more in need of assistance. What last year's reconciliation bill seemed to be saying was that if a State has been in a severe recession for a long period of time, and if a large percentage of the unemployed still cannot find work after 26 weeks, then the State's economic situation is improving as indicated by its falling IUR. This is spite of the fact that the State's nominal unemployment rate may continue to stay at record high levels.

Second, I have seen firsthand the practical effect of this illogic. As a result of this change, Michigan was knocked off of extended benefits last November and did not become eligible again until March of this year. All during that time, Michigan had the highest unemployment rate in the Nation.

Third, excluding the extended benefits recipients from the IUR calculation has made Swiss cheese out of the validity of the IUR as an accurate barometer of unemployment. For example, in my State of Michigan the nominal unemployment rate has hovered in the 14- to 15-percent range for the past few months, but the insured unemployment has dropped by 3 percentage points. The unemployment figures in Michigan for August add to the discredit of the IUR calculation because unemployment increased from 14.4 to 15.2 percent at the same time the IUR continued to drop.

The second part of the legislation which Senator METZENBAUM has introduced today will suspend the change in the level at which a State triggers on the extended benefits, thereby keeping it at a 5-percent IUR. This change to 6 percent was also part of last year's reconciliation bill, but is not scheduled to take effect until weeks beginning after September 25 of this year. Although having the IUR calculation revert back to the way it was prior to last year's reconciliation bill would be sufficient for Michigan to qualify for extended benefits after this September, other States which are currently experiencing high levels of unemployment would require keeping the IUR trigger at 5 percent as well in order to qualify for extended benefits. The result of not suspending last year's reconciliation changes with respect to both the IUR calculation and the trigger level would be to leave some States with historically high unemployment rates, but being ineligible for extended benefits.

The third part of this legislation would be to link the duration of the recently passed Federal supplemental benefits program to a specified rate of unemployment instead of the date of March 31. There has been more than a little speculation that the March 31 date was chosen as the time to end the FSB program because it was far enough beyond the election to avoid the most obvious appearances of its being politically motivated. However, it makes much more sense to key it to a rate of unemployment. The Metzenbaum legislation would terminate the FSB program when unemployment went below 8.7 percent.

By historical standards, this is a high threshold for an FSB program. In the 1970's a similar program was instituted twice, in 1971 and in 1974. In 1971, the unemployment rate was 5.5 percent, in 1974, it was 7.2 percent, now it is 9.8 percent. However, in the interest of "going the extra mile," as the President is fond of saying, this bill sets an 8.7-percent trigger, which is what the administration is projecting the unemployment rate to be by March 31 of next year. If the administration's forecast is correct, the FSB program would trigger off on schedule. If the administration's forecast is overly optimistic, then the need for the FSB program would still exist and the program should continue.

A final point. The three aspects of this bill should be considered as an integral package. If the changes are not made with respect to the IUR and the trigger level for extended benefits, then the FSB program will be a pale shadow of its predecessors. In that event, it will not provide unemployment compensation coverage on top of the 39 week State and extended benefits programs but rather for most States only add coverage on top of the first 26 weeks because so few States will be eligible for weeks 27 through 39 under the normal extended benefits program.

I am, therefore, pleased to be a cosponsor of this legislation and will work for its passage.●

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, today, I join my colleagues in cosponsoring what I hope will be the answer to the unemployment compensation difficulties that we still face.

On August 5, Senator METZENBAUM and I, along with many other Senators, offered a sense of the Senate resolution which passed the Senate by an overwhelming vote of 84 to 13. That measure instructed the conferees on the tax bill to take action on two issues.

First, to establish a Federal supplemental benefits program of not less than 10 weeks or more than 13 weeks which would be available to workers who have exhausted their rights to any extended unemployment compensation benefits.

Second, to assure the continued eligibility of States who are currently eligible, or who were eligible for the extended benefits program on June 1, 1982.

The conferees, in fact, have addressed only a portion of that instruction, and have failed to address the most substantive part of our resolution, that being the extended benefits program.

The FSB program was never meant to supercede the extended benefits program, but rather to augment it. We had a strong majority in this body who, by their votes on August 5, agreed that this should be the case. And yet, I respectfully point out that the conferees failed to address these issues.

I appreciate the conscientious manner in which the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee tried to address this issue. However, because the conferees failed to meet this challenge, the bill we offer today is still necessary.

This bill is a constructive approach to the basic problem that many States are facing—that being the changes in the calculation of the insured unemployment rate, or IUR, which qualifies a State for the extended benefits program.

Until last year, those individuals who were receiving extended benefits as well as those who were receiving the first 26 weeks of regular benefits, were counted in the calculation of the insured unemployment rate. Changes made in last year's omnibus budget reconciliation eliminate those on extended benefits in that calculation.

As a result, States with high total unemployment rates, such as Illinois with 11.8 percent, and who have had long periods of unemployment, are in a position where the insured rate is falling while the total unemployment rate is rising. The reason for this incongruity is that many who have exhausted benefits and are no longer included in the system, as well as those who are still on extended benefits, are not being counted.

It makes absolutely no sense whatsoever for a State that has the third highest level of unemployment among this Nation's 10 largest States, to be ineligible for the maximum benefits allowable.

Our bill would include those receiving extended benefits in the calculation of the insured unemployment rate until such time as the national unemployment rate falls below 8.7 percent. That percentage is the administration's projection for March 31, 1982.

Another change which was made in reconciliation last year was to increase the trigger rates by 1 percent on September 26. Understanding the calculation change that was made, this further exacerbates the problem.

In addition to the August 5 amendment, on August 3 I joined Senator HEINZ and many others on a letter to the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee, BOB DOLE, urging the conferees to change the trigger mechanism. On August 12, Senator HEINZ and I sent another letter explaining the problem, and again urging the conferees to address it.

Mr. President, our bill does address the root of this problem by temporarily repealing the increased trigger provisions until the national unemployment rate falls below 8.7 percent.

The third provision of our bill would enact the conference committee language with respect to the FSB program, changing it only in terms of the period in which it would be in effect. The conferees made the effective dates from September 12 through March 31. We would change that to end when the national level of unemployment falls below 8.7 percent—the administration's own figure for March 31, 1983.

It must be understood that each of these provisions is an integral part of the unemployment compensation system.

If only one part of these provisions is enacted, namely, the FSB program, it is quite possible that individuals would receive fewer weeks of benefits than they do now.

In any event, if we do not further address the extended benefits question, what is likely to happen in the States that soon trigger off the program is simple:

Individuals now on extended benefits will receive 10 more weeks of benefits. That is all. If we do not address the extended benefits questions, all benefits for those currently in the system will run out November 20.

As the FSB program was first conceived, it would add to the first 26 weeks of regular benefits and the additional 13 weeks of extended benefits, making a total program maximum of 52 weeks. In those States who have no extended benefits program, or who will trigger off, the maximum would be 36 weeks under the conference report language.

I urge my colleagues to support this bill. The Congressional Budget Office indicates that the costs associated with it are $529 million—a cost we must endure if we are to meet the needs of people who depend on this temporary assistance for their very survival.

This is responsible, responsive legislation. We cannot justify doing anything less.

By Mr. STEVENS:

S. 2905. A bill to amend title 5, United States Code, to establish a new retirement and disability system for Federal employees and Members of Congress while protecting the right of participants in the retirement and disability system under subchapter III of chapter 83 of such title to receive benefits under such subchapter, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

CIVIL SERVICE PENSION REFORM ACT OF 1982

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I am introducing the Civil Service Pension Reform Act of 1982, today, in order to circulate it to all parties. I plan to reintroduce it next year for more serious consideration, but I want my friends in the Federal work force to have it now to review. I hope they will think seriously about this proposal. Its structure would protect participants from further attacks. This bill is just a starting point, but we must start now before it is too late.

Retirement spells drastic changes for individuals and families. Prior to retirement, an employee makes a variety of decisions affecting his future. The most important questions are what will he do; when will he retire; and how much income will be needed to meet the needs of himself and his family.

Unlike 25 years ago, today an employer must offer a retirement plan to attract quality employees. A good retirement plan offers to resolve in part the questions of a reasonable retirement age and a sufficient income level. To determine these and other specifics, an employer must consider a number of factors, such as:

First, what can be profitably offered?

Second, what benefits are competitive with counterpart businessess?

Third, how much employee turnover is desirable?

Fourth, what age range is necessary or desirable for the type of work involved?

Fifth, what requirements must be met under the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974?

The Federal Government as an employer, however, is faced with a different set of circumstances. The Government's provision of a secure retirement for its employees is counterbalanced by its responsiveness to the taxpayers. While employee benefits in a business are constrained by the profit margin, similar benefits in Government employment are constrained by the public's willingness to pay. The Government has a responsibility to both groups to provide a good yet affordable retirement plan. The current civil service retirement system (CSRS) is clearly lacking in both respects. It is an expensive plan which rewards a few at the expense of many.

The Congressional Budget Office reports that annual outlays of CSRS are $17.3 billion and will rise to $30.1 billion in 1986. Total retirement costs constitute 36.5 percent of payroll, of which 29.5 percent are Government costs. This is to be compared to typical private sector plan costs of 22.7 percent. Yet, these high costs reflect benefit payments to a relatively small group of people. Studies show that approximately 25 percent of new Federal hires remain in the Government until retirement. The remaining 75 percent either withdraw their contributions upon resignation with no interest accrual or they remain vested in the system to receive a marginally smaller retirement benefit upon reaching retirement age. Hence, the exorbitant costs of the current system result from the relatively few who take advantage of it.

I am convinced that the cost of the system can be significantly reduced while redistributing the benefits to profit the most. In order to do this in the most equitable manner, I am introducing a bill to establish a new retirement system to mandatorily cover all Federal employees hired after the date of enactment of this legislation with the option to current Federal employees to elect coverage under this new system. This legislation, the Civil Service Pension Reform Act of 1982, will dramatically change the pension system for Federal workers.

It includes social security coverage for all new Federal workers. Social security will be the foundation for the rest of the system. It will make the system comparable to pension plans in the private sector. The public will no longer have reason to single out Federal workers as ones insulated from their concerns. All will be treated equally here. Yet, even to the Federal worker, the benefits of social security coverage far outweigh the liabilities.

The basic pension plan will be a defined contribution plan, requiring Government contributions only, eventually to be invested in the private sector. One's retirement will depend upon the accumulations of his contributions plus its investment earnings. Private investment provides a variety of heretofore unavailable options. Individual employees will now participate in investment decisions. When an employee feels his account is sufficiently large to support him, he can leave at any time.

Most Federal workers will actually benefit from this new system. Actuarial estimates reveal that employees at all income levels who work a full career—age 65 with 40 years of service—will receive greater net replacement of their income—after taxes—than under the current system. The new system will provide employees with portability between the Federal and private sector, nonexistent now. An employee may leave after 5 years, taking with him his accumulated earnings and his social security credit. This option heralds a new flexibility for Federal employees. Retirement benefits will no longer direct the decisions for midcareer Federal employees who are considering other career alternatives. The retirement plan will continue to reward full career Federal employees while freeing part-career employees to move in and out of the non-Federal sector.

In addition, unfunded liabilities and spiraling Government costs will be problems of the past. The system will be fully funded. The Government's costs will be fixed. This system also achieves substantial cost savings over the current system. The new system reduces the cost of Federal retirement to the Government and thus to the taxpayer by 20 percent. These savings are achieved primarily from two places. First, coverage by social security precludes the generation of windfall benefits to those who work in covered employment for short spans. Second, those who take advantage of the current system by retiring with minimum age and service eligibility will no longer receive benefits commensurate with the current arrangement.

Admittedly, the concepts contained in the legislation are somewhat revolutionary vis-a-vis the current system. However, such retirement plans are fairly common in the private sector. The structure, the costs, and the benefits are comparable to many good private sector retirement plans. The following describes the bill's general provisions:

First, the proposal mandatorily covers all Federal and postal employees hired after the date of enactment.

Second, there is an option for current workers to elect coverage in the new system.

Third, the Government will buy an employee's current retirement credit for the employee who elects coverage in the new system. The new amount will be placed in the employee's account in the new system. The employee will have two options:

Option one, the worker's current retirement contributions will be matched by the Government with the total increased by a 5-percent interest factor compounded for the number of years of service, or

Option two, the worker will be entitled to the present value of his accumulated benefits adjusted by a 6-percent inflation factor.

The following table illustrates the amounts involved for an employee who entered Government service at age 25 with a starting salary of $10,000 and received annual pay increases of 6-percent. Option A is based on a 5-percent interest rate. Option B is based on a 6-percent discount rate and an assumed 6-percent inflation rate.

At age	Option A	Option B
30	$9,104	$4,421
35	23,806	17,219
40	46,692	50,135
45	81,424	125,279

Fourth, the first tier of the new system will be social security. Federal employees will pay the same social security taxes as covered employees and will receive the same benefits. The Government will pay the employer tax and pay its portion into the social security trust fund.

Fifth, the second tier will be a defined contribution plan. The Government will contribute to an employee's account 9 percent of the first $20,000 (adjusted annually) and 16 percent of every dollar thereafter. This is a Government contribution plan only.

Sixth, the third tier will be a voluntary thrift plan. The employee may contribute any amount he wishes. The Government will match 100 percent of the employee's contribution up to 3 percent of salary. In other words, if the employee contributes 6 percent, the Government will contribute 3 percent; if the employee contributes 2 percent, the Government will contribute 2 percent.

Seventh, an employee will vest in the new system after 5 years of participation. This includes newly-hired employees and current employees who transfer to the new system. After 5 years of participation, an employee may leave Government with the entire amount in his retirement account. This includes Government contributions plus interest. Alternatively, he can draw an actuarily-adjusted annuity or he may defer drawing on the account until later in life. In such a case, the account would continue to accrue interest. Survivors will receive a social security benefit supplemented by the accumulated earnings in the employee's or annuitant's account.

Eighth, the new system will contain a new pension fund. All Government contributions to an employee's account in the fund will be invested in special issues of the Treasury for the employee's first 5 years of participation. The employee's contributions to the thrift plan will be available for private sector investment beginning the second year. After an employee's 5th year of participation, all new Government contributions will be available for private investment. During the first several years of the new system, however, Government contributions to an employee's account after the 5th year of participation will be phased into private investment.

Ninth, there is established an 11-person Federal Pension Board composed of the Secretaries of Treasury, Commerce, and Labor, the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, six appointments by the President (nominated to him by employee organizations), and an executive director appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate. All board members will be subject to the fiduciary responsibilities spelled out in ERISA. The Board will generally oversee investments of the fund. The Board will also establish a variety of investment options to which employees may direct their investments. Employees shall receive annual statements showing their current accounts and providing them with an opportunity to choose investments. The presiding member of the Board, one of the President's appointments, will be the Executive Director. The Director will implement the investments, contract with private investment firms, and perform general administrative functions.

Tenth, a new sick leave and disability system is established. Each employee will be granted seven days of nonaccumulating annual sick leave. Illnesses or injuries necessitating longer leave will trigger short-term accident and illness insurance. Such insurance will be preceded by a short waiting period and application for such payment must be accompanied by medical documentation. Depending upon one's length of service and the duration of his absence, an employee will receive 100 percent, 80 percent, and 60 percent of his gross pay.

If the absence will extend beyond 6 months, the employee may apply for long-term disability. If he qualifies for disability under social security, he will be guaranteed 60 percent of his gross pay until restoration or death. If he does not qualify for social security, he will remain covered for 20 years. After 2 years, he must take a fitness for duty examination or be dropped from the rolls. If he is considered capable of performing any Federal job, he must be appointed to a position. If he refuses the position, all disability payments cease. If he is not able to perform any Federal job but is still not eligible for social security, he will receive 40 percent of his gross pay until restoration or death.

Eleven, the unfunded liability of the current system is amortized over a 40-year period by payments from the General Treasury. All agencies will pay the full cost of the employees remaining in the current system.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2905

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Civil Service Pension Reform Act of 1982".

PURPOSES

SEC. 2. The purposes of this Act are—

(1) to provide Federal employees with a retirement benefits plan which is comparable to good private sector retirement benefits plans;

(2) to promote financial stability and flexibility for the future of each Federal employee;

(3) to ensure a fully funded and financially sound Federal Government retirement benefits plan;

(4) to guarantee the right of each Federal employee participating in the Federal employees' retirement system established before the date of enactment of this Act to receive the retirement benefits that are available to such employees under such system on the date of enactment of this Act;

(5) to establish a new Federal employees' retirement system that guarantees the right of each Federal employee to receive the cash value of property purchased for the benefit of the employee;

(6) to enhance portability of retirement assets between Federal jobs and jobs outside the Federal Government;

(7) to increase the options of each Federal employee with respect to retirement benefits plans;

(8) to encourage Federal employees to increase personal savings;

(9) to include Federal employees in the investment decisionmaking process with respect to the assets of the Federal employees' retirement system; and

(10) to extend financial protection from disability to additional Federal employees and to increase such protection for eligible Federal employees.

"SUBCHAPTER II—CIVIL SERVICE PENSION SYSTEM

"§ 8411. Civil Service Pension System; participation

"(a) The provisions of this chapter comprise the Civil Service Pension System.

"(b)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection, each employee commencing employment or reemployment by the Government on or after the effective date of this subchapter, and each Member taking office on or after such date for the first time or after a break in service, shall be a participant in the System.

"(2) Paragraph (1) of this subsection shall not apply to any employee by reason of a break in service if the employee—

"(A) is involuntarily separated from employment by the Government while subject to the provisions of subchapter III of chapter 83 of this title; and

"(B) is reemployed by the Government not later than three years after the date on which the employee was involuntarily separated from such employment.

"(c) Except as otherwise provided in this subchapter, the benefits payable under the System are in addition to the benefits payable under the Social Security Act.

"§ 8412. Defined contribution plan

"(a)(1) The employing agency of a participant shall deposit to the Fund for the benefit of the participant at the end of each pay period of the participant a portion of the annual contribution calculated under paragraph (2). The amount of the contribution deposited under this paragraph at the end of any pay period shall be equal to the product of such annual contribution and the fraction the numerator of which is the gross pay payable to the participant for such pay period and the denominator of which is the annual rate of basic pay of the participant.

"(2)(A) The annual contribution for the benefit of a participant in any fiscal year is the amount that is equal to the sum of—

"(i) 9 percent of the annual rate of basic pay of the participant not exceeding the reference amount; and

"(ii) 16 percent of the excess of the annual rate of basic pay of the participant over the reference amount.

"(B) For the purpose of subparagraph (A) of this paragraph, the reference amount is $20,000 as increased pursuant to this subparagraph. Each time, after the effective date of this chapter, that the rates of pay under the General Schedule are increased under section 5305 of this title, the reference amount shall be deemed to be increased by an amount (rounded to the nearest multiple of $100 or, if the amount is $50 less than a multiple of $100, to the next higher multiple of $100) determined by multiplying the overall average percentage increase in such rates of pay by the reference amount before the increase. Any increase in the reference amount shall take effect at the beginning of the first applicable pay period commencing on or after the first day of the month in which the increase in such rates of pay takes effect.

"(b)(1) In the case of any participant who served on active duty as a member of the uniformed services and who is commencing employment by the Government or taking office for the first time, each Secretary of a military department in which the participant served as a member of the uniformed services and each Secretary of an executive department (other than the Department of Defense) in which the participant served as a member of the uniformed services shall, on the date the participant becomes a participant, deposit in the Fund for the benefit of such participant an amount for each year and fraction of a year of such participant's service on active duty in the department of such Secretary as a member of the uniformed services. The amount deposited under this paragraph for any year or fraction of a year shall be calculated as provided in subsection (a)(2)(A) of this section, except as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection, based on the annual rate of basic pay payable to such participant in such year and the reference amount in effect in such year under paragraph (2) of this subsection.

"(2) For the purposes of the second sentence of paragraph (1) of this subsection, the reference amount applicable with respect to any period of service in the uniformed services before the effective date of this chapter is $20,000, and the reference amount applicable with respect to any period of service in the uniformed services after the effective date of this chapter is $20,000 as increased pursuant to the second sentence of this paragraph. Each time, after the effective date of this chapter, that the rates of basic pay of members of the uniformed services are increased under section 1009 of title 37, the reference amount shall be deemed to be increased by an amount (rounded to the nearest multiple of $100 or, if the amount is $50 less than a multiple of $100, to the next higher multiple of $100) determined by multiplying the overall average percentage increase in such rates of basic pay by the reference amount before such increase. Any increase in the reference amount shall be considered to have taken effect at the beginning of the first applicable pay period commencing on or after the first day of the month in which the increase in such rates of pay took effect.

"(3) Paragraph (1) of this subsection shall not apply in the case of any participant who is awarded retired pay by reason of service in the uniformed services unless the retired pay is awarded—

"(A) by reason of a service-connected disability—

"(i) incurred in combat with an enemy of the United States; or

"(ii) caused by an instrumentality of war and incurred in the line of duty during a period of war; or

"(B) under chapter 67 of title 10.

"(c)(1) The sums required to be contributed by an employing agency under subsection (a) of this section for the benefit of a participant shall be paid from the appropriations or funds available to such agency to pay the basic pay of the participant or, in the case of an elected official, from an appropriation or fund available for payment of other salaries of the office or establishment. In the case of a participant in the legislative branch who is paid by the Clerk of the House of Representatives, contributions for the benefit of such participant shall be paid from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives.

"(2) The sums required to be contributed by the Secretary of an executive department or the Secretary of a military department under subsection (b) of this section shall be paid from the appropriations or funds available to such Secretary to pay the basic pay of members of the uniformed services under such Secretary.

"(d) For the purposes of this section—

"(1) the term 'uniformed services' shall have the same meaning as provided in section 101(3) of title 37;

"(2) the term 'military department' means any of the military departments as defined in section 101(7) of title 10;

"(3) the term 'service-connected' shall have the same meaning as provided in section 101(16) of title 38; and

"(4) the term 'period of war' shall have the same meaning as provided in section 301(2) of title 38.

"§ 8413. Thrift savings plan

"(a) Each participant may contribute to the Fund in any fiscal year any amount not exceeding 16 percent of the participant's annual rate of basic pay. Any contribution under this subsection shall be pursuant to a program of regular contributions to be made at the end of each pay period of the participant under such regulations as the Board shall prescribe.

"(b) Subject to the third sentence of this subsection, the employing agency of a participant who contributes to the Fund under subsection (a) of this section in any fiscal year shall contribute to the Fund in such fiscal year for the benefit of such participant an amount equal to the amount of the contribution of the participant under subsection (a) of this section. The contribution by the agency shall be made at the same time as contributions are made by the participant under subsection (a) of this section. The total amount of the contributions made by an employing agency for the benefit of any participant in any fiscal year shall not exceed the lesser of—

"(1) the amount contributed by such participant during such fiscal year; or

"(2) 3 percent of such participant's annual rate of basic pay.

"(c) The sums required to be contributed by an employing agency under subsection (b) of this section for the benefit of a participant shall be paid from the appropriations or funds described in section 8412(c)(1) of this title.

"(d)(1) Subject to such restrictions, limitations, and conditions as the Board may prescribe, the Board shall pay to any participant who separates from employment by the Government before the date on which the participant becomes entitled to an annuity under section 8414(a) of this section an amount equal to—

"(A) the total of the contributions made under subsection (a) of this section; and

"(B) the applicable percentage of the amounts contributed for the benefit of the participant under subsection (b) of this section.

"(2)(A) For the purpose of paragraph (1) of this subsection, the applicable percentage for a participant separating from employment by the Government after having been a participant in the System for a period set forth under column I of the table below is, except as provided in subparagraph (B) of this paragraph, the percentage set forth under column II of the table below opposite the description of such period.

"Column I Period for which the participant has been a participant in the System:	Column II Applicable percentage:
More than 1 year and not more than 2 years	20
More than 2 years and not more than 3 years	40
More than 3 years and not more than 4 years	60
More than 4 years and not more than 5 years	80
More than 5 years	100.

"(B) For the purposes of paragraph (1) of this subsection, the percentage applicable in the case of any participant who dies while employed by the Government or separates from employment by the Government under section 8455(e)(1) of this title shall be 100 percent.

"§ 8414. Annuity: vesting; payment method; amount

"(a) An individual who is a participant for not less than 5 years is entitled to an annuity under this subchapter payable beginning on the day after the participant separates from employment by the Government or on such date as the participant specifies under section 8415 of this title. The annuity shall be payable pursuant to the method of payment elected under subsection (c) of this section.

"(b)(1) The Board shall prescribe methods of payment of annuities under this subchapter.

"(2) The Board shall include among the methods of payment prescribed under paragraph (1) of this subsection—

"(A) a method providing for the payment of a monthly annuity for the joint lives of the annuitant and the spouse of the annuitant and the life of the one of them who survives the other of them; and

"(B) methods that include provisions for periodic increases in the amount of the annuity payable under each such method to offset, in whole or in part, any increase in the cost of living.

"(c) Under such regulations as the Board shall prescribe, each annuitant—

"(1) shall elect one of the methods of payment prescribed by the Board under subsection (b)(1) of this section; and

"(2) may change, at any time, any election made under clause (1) of this subsection.

"(d)(1) The amount of the annuity payable to an annuitant pursuant to the method elected under subsection (c) of this section shall be determined, as of the date on which the payment of the annuity under the elected method commences, in accordance with generally accepted actuarial principles and standards based on the balance credited to the annuitant's account.

"(2) The amount of the annuity payable to the surviving spouse of an annuitant who elected, on or before the date payment of an annuity under this subchapter commenced, to be paid by the method described in subsection (b)(2) of this section and has been paid pursuant to such method continuously until the date of the annuitant's death shall be equal, subject to subsection (e) of this section, to 55 percent of the amount of the monthly annuity payable to the annuitant on the day before the date of the annuitant's death.

"(e)(1) At the end of each fiscal year the amount of each annuity payable under this subchapter shall be redetermined in accordance with generally accepted actuarial principles and standards based on the information applicable to the annuitant receiving the annuity and available as of the date of the redetermination.

"(2) If the amount of the annuity as redetermined at the end of any fiscal year under paragraph (1) of this subsection exceeds the amount of the annuity payable during such fiscal year, the amount of the annuity payable in the succeeding fiscal year shall be equal to the redetermined amount.

"(f) Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, no election or change of an election shall be effective under subsection (c) of this section if the election or change of an election would result in a violation of the terms of an applicable court decree of divorce, annulment, or legal separation, or the terms of any court order or court-approved property settlement agreement incident to a court decree of divorce, annulment, or legal separation, as determined by the Executive Director.

"§ 8415. Deferred retirement; withdrawal in lieu of annuity

"(a)(1) Any participant who separates from employment by the Government entitled to an annuity under section 8414(a) of this title may, in lieu of receiving the annuity beginning on the day after the date on which the participant separates, elect to—

"(A) defer the commencement of the payment of the annuity until such date as the participant specifies; or

"(B) withdraw, in one payment, the amount of the balance credited to the participant's account as of such date.

"(2) The Board shall make payments in accordance with any election of a participant under paragraph (1) of this subsection.

"(b) Any election under subsection (a) of this section shall be in writing and shall be filed in accordance with such rules as the Board may prescribe.

"(c)(1) Subject to paragraph (2) of this subsection, any former participant, after making an election under subsection (a)(1) of this section, may modify the date specified in the election.

"(2) Any modification under paragraph (1) of this subsection—

"(A) shall be—

"(i) in writing; and

"(ii) filed with the Board in accordance with such rules as the Board may prescribe; and

"(B) may not specify a date for the commencement of annuity payments earlier than 31 days after such modification is filed with the Board.

"(d) Any former participant who is reemployed by the Federal Government after receiving payment of the balance credited to his account pursuant to an election under subsection (a)(1)(B) of this section may deposit the amount withdrawn or any portion thereof in the Fund. Such amount shall be credited to the account established for the participant upon the reemployment of the participant and shall be invested.

"§ 8416. Death benefits

"(a) In any case in which a participant dies before the date on which the payment of an annuity under section 8414(a) of this title commences, the balance credited to the account of the deceased participant shall be payable in the following order:

"(1) to the beneficiary or beneficiaries designated, before death, by the participant in accordance with such rules as the Board may prescribe; or

"(2) if there is no beneficiary designated as described in clause (1) of this subsection, to—

"(A) the deceased participant's surviving spouse;

"(B) each surviving child of the deceased participant, in equal shares; or

"(C) the estate of the deceased participant.

"(b)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection, any beneficiary entitled to receive benefits under subsection (a) of this section shall receive such benefits in one payment.

"(2)(A) Any individual entitled to receive benefits under subsection (a) of this section may elect, in accordance with such rules as the Board may prescribe, to receive such benefits as an annuity payable monthly for life. The Board shall pay an annuity in accordance with an election under this subparagraph.

"(B) The monthly amount of any annuity payable under subparagraph (A) of this paragraph shall be determined as of the date on which the payment of the annuity commences in accordance with generally accepted actuarial principles and standards based on the applicable share of the balance credited to the deceased participant's account.

"(C) The monthly amount of each annuity payable under this section shall be redetermined at the end of each fiscal year as provided in section 8414(e) of this section.

"(c) For the purposes of this section the term 'child' includes a natural child, adopted child, a stepchild (but only if the stepchild lived with the deceased participant in a parent-child relationship), and a child who lived with and for whom a petition of adoption was filed by the deceased participant and who is adopted by the surviving spouse of the deceased participant after the death of the participant.

"§ 8417. Civil Service Pension Fund

"(a) There is established in the Treasury a Civil Service Pension Fund.

"(b) The Fund consists of the sum of all contributions under sections 8412 and 8413 of this title increased by the total net earnings from investments of the Fund or reduced by the total net losses from investments of the Fund.

"(c)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection, the sums in the Fund are appropriated and shall remain available without fiscal year limitation—

"(A) to invest under section 8418 of this title;

"(B) to pay benefits under this subchapter; and

"(C) to loan to participants as provided in subsection (d) of this section.

"(2)(A) The total net earnings from the investment of sums in the Fund are appropriated and shall remain available without fiscal year limitation for—

"(i) the payment of expenses incurred in the administration of the System, subject to subparagraph (B) of this paragraph;

"(ii) investment under section 8418 of this title; and

"(iii) the payment of benefits under this subchapter.

"(B) The Board shall allocate not more than 4 percent of the earnings realized in any fiscal year from the investment of sums in the Fund for the payment of the expenses incurred in the administration of the System in such fiscal year before allocating the remainder of the earnings to credit the account of any participant under section 8419(b) of this title.

"(d) The sums in the Fund attributable to contributions made by a participant under section 8413(a) of this title may be loaned to such participant subject to such terms and conditions as the Board may prescribe.

"(e)(1) Subject to paragraph (2) of this subsection, sums in the Fund are not subject to execution, levy, attachment, garnishment, or other legal process.

"(2) Moneys due or payable from the Fund to any individual shall be subject to legal process for the enforcement of the individual's legal obligations to provide child support or make alimony payments as provided in section 459 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 659).

"(f) Except as provided in section 8455(d)(2)(A) of this title, the sums in the Fund shall not be appropriated and may not be used for any purpose other than the purposes specified in this section.

"§ 8418. Investment of the Fund

"(a)(1)(A) The Board shall invest a portion of the available sums in the Fund, as provided in this section, in interest bearing securities of the United States Government.

"(B) Any sums of the Fund which are required by subsection (c)(1)(A), (c)(2)(A), (c)(2)(B)(ii), or (d) of this section to be invested in public investments shall be invested in such interest bearing securities of the United States as will ensure an annual rate of return of not less than 2 percent in excess of the increase in the price index during the term of the investment.

"(2) The Board shall invest a portion of the available sums in the Fund, as provided in this section, in—

"(A) interest bearing or equity securities of private business concerns; and

"(B) such other assets, including interest bearing securities of any State or political subdivision thereof, as the Board considers appropriate.

"(b)(1) Each participant may elect the general type or types of private investments, as designated by the Board under section 8492(a)(2) of this title, into which the Board shall invest sums in the Fund credited to the account of such participant.

"(2) An election under paragraph (1) of this subsection shall be made in accordance with rules prescribed by the Board.

"(c)(1)(A)(i) At the end of the calendar month during which the participant begins to participate in the System, the contributions made for the benefit of such participant under section 8412 of this title during such month shall be invested in public investments.

"(ii) The contributions made for the benefit of such participant under section 8412 during the sixty calendar months after the month described in clause (i) of this subparagraph shall be invested in public investments.

"(B) Except as provided in subsection (d) of this section, the contributions made for the benefit of such participant after the last calendar month described in subparagraph (A)(ii) of this paragraph may be invested in public or private investments as determined by the Board.

"(2)(A)(i) At the end of the calendar month during which the participant first makes a contribution under subsection (a) of section 8413 of this title, all such contributions and the contributions made for the benefit of such employee under subsection (b) of such section shall be invested in public investments.

"(ii) The contributions made by and for the benefit of the participant under section 8413 of this title during the twelve calendar months after the month described in clause (i) of this subparagraph shall be invested in public investments.

"(B)(i) The contributions made by a participant under subsection (a) of section 8413 of this title during the 48 calendar months after the last calendar month described in subparagraph (A)(ii) of this paragraph may be invested in public or private investments as determined by the Board.

"(ii) The contributions made for the benefit of such participant under subsection (b) of such section during such period of 48 calendar months shall be invested in public investments.

"(C) The contributions made by or for the benefit of a participant under section 8413 of this title after the last calendar month described in clause (i) or (ii) of subparagraph (B) of this paragraph may be invested in public or private investments as determined by the Board.

"(d) Except as otherwise provided in subsection (c)(1)(A) of this section, at the end of each calendar month described under column I of the table below all contributions made into the Fund under section 8412 of this title for the benefit of each participant who begins to participate in the System during a calendar month specified in column I of such table shall be invested as set forth in columns II and III of such table opposite the applicable number of the month:

"Column I	Column II	Column III
Number of the month after the effective date of this section	Percent of the contributions for the benefit of each participant for the month to be invested in public investments	Percent of the contributions for the benefit of each participant for the month to be invested in public or private investments

121 through 132	90	10
133 through 144	80	20
145 through 156	70	30
157 through 168	60	40
169 through 180	50	50
181 through 192	40	60
193 through 204	30	70
205 through 216	20	80
217 through 228	10	90
229 and after	0	100.

"(e) In investing sums of the Fund in equity securities of private businesses the Board shall not acquire such an extensive ownership interest in any private business that the Board, without the concurrence of other owners of the private business, can elect any officer of the private business or require the adoption of any policy for the management of the private business.

"§ 8419. Administrative provisions

"(a)(1) The Board shall establish and maintain an account with respect to each participant in the System. The balance in such account at any time is the sum of all contributions made by or for the benefit of such participant under section 8412 or 8413 of this title, the amounts transferred with respect to such participant under section 8420(c) of this title, and the total net earnings allocable to such participant, reduced by the total net losses allocable to such participant and the amounts paid with respect to such participant under sections 8414 and 8416 of this title.

"(2) The Board shall allocate to the credit of the account of each participant, pursuant to rules prescribed by the Board, a pro rata share of the net earnings and net losses, determined after the allocation under section 8417(c)(2)(B) of this title, from each investment based on the sums from the Fund invested in such investment and attributable to such participant.

"(b) Each employing agency shall report to the Board at the end of each month all amounts contributed by or for the benefit of each participant during such month under section 8412 or 8413 of this title.

"(c) The Board shall provide each participant an annual statement of the balance in the participant's account.

"§ 8420. Transition provisions

"(a)(1) Any employee or Member who—

"(A) is subject to the provisions of subchapter III of chapter 83 of this title, and is employed by the Government on the day before the effective date of this subchapter, or

"(B) is not required by section 8411(b) of this title to be a participant in the System, may elect to become a participant in the System.

"(2) Any election under paragraph (1) of this subsection shall be—

"(A) in writing; and

"(B) filed with the Board and the Director of the Office of Personnel Management not later than two years after the effective date of this subchapter or reemployment, as the case may be.

"(b)(1) Any employee or Member who is described in subsection (a)(1)(A) of this section and is reemployed by the Government, or becomes a Member, after a break in service beginning on or after the effective date of this subchapter, and, on the date such employee is reemployed by the Government, has a lump-sum credit in the Civil Service Retirement and Disability Fund, shall elect—

"(A) that the transfer described in subsection (c)(2) of this section be made for the benefit of such employee or Member; or

"(B) that section 8338 of this title continue to apply with respect to such employee or Member to the extent of the lump-sum credit.

"(2) Any election under paragraph (1) of this subsection shall be—

"(A) in writing; and

"(B) filed with the Board and the Director of the Office of Personnel Management not later than 30 days after the effective date of the reemployment of the employee by the Government or commencement of membership in the Congress after a break in service.

"(c)(1) There shall be transferred, with respect to any participant electing under subsection (a) of this section to participate in the System, from the Civil Service Retirement and Disability Fund to the Civil Service Pension Fund the larger of—

"(A) an amount equal to the sum of—

"(i) the amount of the unrefunded deductions withheld from the basic pay of such participant and the contributions made for the benefit of such participant under section 8334(a)(1) of this title;

"(ii) the amount of the voluntary contributions made by such participant under section 8343 of this title;

"(iii) annual interest on the balance of the amounts described in subclauses (i) and (ii) of this clause in the Civil Service Retirement and Disability Fund on the anniversary of the date on which withholding of deductions under section 8334(a) of this title commenced, computed at 5 percent and compounded annually until the date of the transfer; and

"(iv) an amount equal to 14 percent of the participant's daily rate of basic pay for each day of accumulated sick leave under section 6307(b) of this title; or

"(B) an amount equal to the present value of the benefits payable to such participant under the provisions of subchapter III of chapter 83 of this title, as actuarially determined, based on the length of service (including credit for accumulated sick leave under section 6307(b) of this title) and average pay of such participant on the effective date of the election under subsection (a) of this section, the amount of the voluntary contributions made by such participant under section 8343 of this title, an annual interest rate of 6 percent, and an assumed average annual increase in the price index of 6 percent.

"(2) There shall be transferred, with respect to any participant making the election described in subsection (b)(1)(A) of this subsection, from the Civil Service Retirement and Disability Fund to the Civil Service Pension Fund the larger of—

"(A) the amount described in paragraph (1)(A) of this subsection; or

"(B) an amount equal to the present value of the benefits payable to such participant under the provisions of subchapter III of chapter 83 of this title, as actuarially determined, based on the length of service (including any credit for accumulated sick leave under section 6307(b) of this title) and average pay of such participant on the date the participant last separated from employment by the Government, the amount of the voluntary contributions made by such participant under section 8343 of this title, an annual interest rate of 6 percent, and an assumed average annual increase in the price index of 6 percent.

"(d)(1)(A) Any participant with respect to whom a transfer is made under subsection (c) of this section and who separates from employment by the Government before the date on which the participant becomes entitled to an annuity under section 8414(a) of this title may elect—

"(i) to receive payment under paragraph (2) of this subsection; or

"(ii) to be subject to the provisions of subchapter III of chapter 83 of this title.

"(B) Any election under subparagraph (A) of this paragraph shall be—

"(i) in writing; and

"(ii) filed with the Board and the Director of the Office of Personnel Management not later than 30 days after the date on which the participant separates from employment by the Government.

"(2)(A) The Board shall pay to any participant making an election under paragraph (1)(A)(i) of this subsection an amount equal to the sum of—

"(i) the amounts described in subclauses (i) and (ii) of subsection (c)(1)(A) and the earnings in the Fund attributable to such amounts;

"(ii) any amounts contributed to the Fund by the participant under section 8413(a) of this title and the earnings in the Fund attributable to such amounts; and

"(iii) the applicable percentage, as determined under subparagraph (B) of this paragraph, of the amounts contributed for the benefit of the participant under section 8413(b) of this title and of the earnings in the Fund attributable to such amounts.

"(B) For the purposes of subparagraph (A)(iii) of this paragraph, the term 'applicable percentage' means the applicable percentage determined under section 8413(d)(2) of this title.

"(3) The balance in the account established and maintained with respect to any participant who makes an election described in paragraph (1)(A)(ii) of this subsection shall be transferred from the Civil Service Pension Fund to the Civil Service Retirement and Disability Fund.

"(e)(1) No employee may be subjected to adverse action or discrimination for the purpose of coercing the employee to elect to become a participant in the System.

"(2) Any activity prohibited by paragraph (1) of this subsection is a prohibited personnel practice for the purposes of section 1206 of this title.

"§ 8421. Payment of benefits; commencement, termination, national policy.and waiver of annuity

"(a) Each annuity is stated as an annual amount, 1/12 of which, fixed at the nearest dollar, constitutes the monthly rate payable on the date 30 days after the month for which it has accrued.

"(b) Except as otherwise provided, the annuity of an annuitant commences on the day after he separates from employment by the Government, on the date specified in a notice filed with the Board under section 8415 of this title, or on the day after he is separated from employment by the Government under section 8455(e)(1) of this title.

"(c) The annuity of an annuitant terminates on the date of death or other terminating event provided by law. The annuity of a survivor terminates on the date of the survivor's death or other terminating event provided by law.

"(d) An individual entitled to an annuity from the Fund may decline to accept all or any part of the annuity by a waiver signed and filed with the Board. The waiver may be revoked in writing at any time. Payment of the annuity waived may not be made for the period during which the waiver was in effect.

"(e) Payment payable under the provisions of this subchapter to a minor, or an individual mentally incompetent or under other legal disability, may be made to the person who is designated the guardian or other fiduciary by the law of the State of residence of the claimant or is otherwise legally vested with the care of the claimant or his estate. If a guardian or other fiduciary of the individual under legal disability has not been appointed under the law of the State of residence of the claimant, payment may be made to any person who, in the judgment of the Board, is responsible for the care of the claimant, and the payment bars recovery by any other person.

"(f) The Board shall prescribe regulations to provide that the amount of any monthly annuity payable under this section accruing for any one month period and which is computed with regard to service that includes any service referred to in section 8332(b)(6) of this title performed by an individual before January 1, 1969, shall be reduced by the portion of any benefits under any State retirement system to which such individual is entitled (or on proper application would be entitled) for such month which is attributable to such service performed by such individual before such date.

"(g) An individual entitled to an annuity from the Fund may make allotments or assignments of amounts from his annuity for such purposes as the Board considers appropriate.

"(h)(1) No payment shall be made from the Fund unless an application for benefits based on the service of a former participant is received by the Board before the one hundred and fifteenth anniversary of his birth.

"(2) Notwithstanding paragraph (1) of this subsection, after the death of a participant or annuitant, no benefit based on his service shall be paid from the Fund unless an application therefor is received by the Board within 30 years after the death or other event which gives rise to title to the benefit.

"(i)(1) Payments under this subchapter which would otherwise be made to an annuitant based upon the service of the annuitant shall be paid (in whole or in part) by the Board to another person if and to the extent expressly provided for in the terms of any court decree of divorce, annulment, or legal separation, or the terms of any court order or court approved property settlement agreement incident to any court decree of divorce, annulment, or legal separation. Any payment under this paragraph to a person bars recovery by any other person.

"(2) Paragraph (1) shall apply only to payments made by the Board under this subchapter after the date of receipt by the Board of written notice of such decree, order, or agreement, and such additional information and documentation as the Board may prescribe.

"(3) As used in this subsection, 'court' means any court of any State or any court of the District of Columbia.

"§ 8422. Audit

"The Comptroller General of the United States shall, not less frequently than every two years, conduct such audits of the financial condition and administration of the Civil Service Pension Fund as he considers appropriate.

"SUBCHAPTER III—ILLNESS AND ACCIDENT INSURANCE BENEFITS; DISABILITY COMPENSATION

"§ 8451. Definitions

"(a) For the purposes of this subchapter—

"(1) a participant shall be considered disabled for Federal service if the participant—

"(A) is unable, because of disease or injury, to render useful and efficient service in the participant's position, and

"(B) except in the case of a Member, is not qualified for reassignment, under procedures prescribed by the Office of Personnel Management, to a vacant position which is in the employing agency at the same grade or level and in which the participant would be able to render useful and efficient service;

"(2) the term 'employing agency' means the agency in which the participant was employed on the day before the effective date of the participant's entitlement to illness and accident insurance benefits under section 8452 of this title; and

"(3) the term 'creditable service' means creditable service as provided in section 8332 of this title.

"(b) For the purposes of subsection (a)(1)(B) of this section, an employee of the United States Postal Service shall be considered not qualified for reassignment as provided in such clause if the reassignment is to a position in a different craft or is inconsistent with the terms of a collective bargaining agreement applicable to such employee.

"§ 8452. Illness and accident insurance benefits

"(a) Any participant whose total period of participation in the System and accumulated creditable service is not less than one year is entitled to receive illness and accident insurance benefits, as provided in subsection (c) of this section, each time the participant is temporarily incapacitated, by disease or injury, to perform the duties of his position.

"(b)(1) The entitlement to benefits under subsection (a) of this section shall be effective as of the day after the date on which the participant has been absent from his position for seven workdays because of one disease, injury, or combination of diseases or injuries.

"(2) Except as provided in paragraph (3) of this subsection, the entitlement to benefits under subsection (a) of this section shall terminate upon—

"(A) the restoration of the capacity of the participant to perform the duties of his position;

"(B) the expiration of the applicable recovery period provided in the schedule of impairments prescribed pursuant to section 8455(f) of this title;

"(C) the expiration of the period which the prognosis, determined under section 8455(a) of this title, indicates is required for the restoration of the participant's capacity to perform the duties of his position;

"(D) the expiration of a period of 26 weeks after the effective date of the entitlement; or

"(E) the date on which the participant entitled to such benefits begins to receive disability insurance benefits under section 223 of the Social Security Act or benefits under section 202 of such Act by reason of being under a disability, whichever occurs first.

"(3) Except in the case of a termination of the entitlement to benefits under paragraph (2)(A) or (2)(E) of this subsection, the Office may extend the payment of benefits under subsection (a) of this section in the case of any participant who, as determined by the Office based on a diagnosis and prognosis reported to the Board under section 8455(a) of this title—

"(A) has not, by the date on which the entitlement to such benefits terminates under paragraph (2) of this subsection, sufficiently recovered from the disease or injury to perform the duties of his position; and

"(B) is expected, within such short period as the Office prescribes, to recover sufficiently to perform such duties.

"(c) A participant who is entitled to receive illness and accident insurance benefits under subsection (a) of this section and whose total period of participation in the System and accumulated creditable service, as of the effective date of the entitlement to such benefits, is described under column I of the table below, shall be paid the percentage of the weekly rate of such participant's basic pay applicable as of such effective date, as such percentage is set forth in the headings of columns II, III, and IV of the table, during the weeks described under each such column opposite the applicable description of the period of participation in the System or the accumulated creditable service, until the date such entitlement terminates under paragraph (2) or (3) of subsection (b) of this section.

"Column I	Column II	Column III	Column IV
For a participant whose total period of participation in the System and accumulated creditable service is not less than—	Pay 100 percent of participant's weekly rate of basic pay for each of the first—	Pay 80 percent of participant's weekly rate of basic pay for each of—	Pay 60 percent of participant's weekly rate of basic pay for each week after the first—
1 year, but less than 2 years	1 week	5 weeks after the first week	6 weeks.
2 years, but less than 3 years	2 weeks	6 weeks after the first 2 week	8 weeks.
3 years, but less than 4 years	3 weeks	7 weeks after the first 3 weeks	10 weeks.
4 years, but less than 5 years	4 weeks	8 weeks after the first 4 weeks	12 weeks.
5 years	5 weeks	9 weeks after the first 5 weeks	14 weeks.

"§ 8453. Short term disability compensation

"(a) A participant who receives illness and injury insurance benefits under section 8452 of this title for not less than 26 weeks and who, on the date the payment of such benefits terminates—

"(1) is disabled for Federal service as determined by the Office based on the examination required by section 8455(a) of this title; and

"(2) has applied for disability insurance benefits under section 223 of the Social Security Act or for benefits under section 202 of such Act by reason of being under a disability and is not receiving such benefits, is entitled to receive short term disability compensation for a period of not more than 18 months.

"(b)(1) The entitlement to short term disability compensation under subsection (a) of this section shall be effective on the date on which the payment of illness and injury insurance benefits under section 8452 of this title terminates.

"(2) The entitlement to compensation under subsection (a) of this section shall terminate upon—

"(A) the restoration of the participant to a condition in which he is no longer disabled for Federal service;

"(B) the expiration of the period which the prognosis, determined under section 8455(a) of this title, indicates is required to restore the participant to a condition in which he is no longer disabled for Federal service;

"(C) the date on which the participant entitled to such benefits begins to receive disability insurance benefits under section 223 of the Social Security Act or benefits under section 202 of such Act by reason of being under a disability; or

"(D) the expiration of a period of 18 months after the effective date of the entitlement, whichever occurs first.

"(c) A participant who is entitled to short term disability compensation under subsection (a) of this section shall be paid monthly an amount equal to 60 percent of the monthly rate of the participant's basic pay applicable on the effective date of the entitlement to such compensation.

"§ 8454. Long term disability compensation

"(a) Subject to section 8455(b) of this title, a participant who—

"(1)(A) receives short term disability compensation under section 8453 of this title for a period of 18 months; and

"(B) at the end of such period—

"(i) is disabled for Federal service as determined by the Board based on the examination required by section 8455(a) of this title; and

"(ii) has applied for disability insurance benefits under section 223 of the Social Security Act or for benefits under section 202 of such Act by reason of being under a disability; or

"(2) has been determined to be under a disability for the purposes of title II of the Social Security Act, is entitled to long term disability compensation.

"(b) The entitlement to long term disability compensation under subsection (a) of this section shall—

"(1) be effective on the earlier of—

"(A) the day after the expiration of the maximum period during which short term disability compensation is paid under section 8453(a) of this title; or

"(B) the date on which the participant begins to receive disability insurance benefits under section 223 of the Social Security Act or benefits under section 202 of such Act by reason of being under a disability; and

"(2) terminate when the participant is no longer disabled for Federal service.

"(c)(1) Subject to paragraphs (2) and (3) of this subsection and section 8455(b) of this title, a participant who is entitled to long term disability compensation under subsection (a) of this section shall be paid monthly an amount equal to 60 percent of the monthly rate of the participant's basic pay applicable on the effective date of the entitlement to such compensation. The amount of the long term disability compensation payable to a participant under the first sentence of this paragraph shall be increased by the overall average increase in the rates of pay under the General Schedule each time, after the effective date of the entitlement to such compensation, that such rates of pay are increased under section 5305 of this title (rounded to the nearest multiple of $100, or, if the amount is $50 less than a multiple of $100, to the next higher multiple of $100).

"(2) Subject to section 8455(b) of this title, a participant who—

"(A) is entitled to long term disability compensation under subsection (a)(1) of this section, and

"(B) has been determined not to be under a disability for the purposes of title II of the Social Security Act, shall be paid monthly 40 percent of the monthly rate of the participant's basic pay applicable on the effective date of the entitlement to such long term disability compensation increased as described in the second sentence of paragraph (1) of this subsection.

"(3) Any participant who—

"(A) is paid monthly long term disability compensation in an amount determined under paragraph (1) of this subsection, and

"(B) after the commencement of the payment of such long term disability compensation, is determined not to be under a disability for the purposes of title II of the Social Security Act, shall be paid monthly long term disability compensation in an amount determined under paragraph (2) of this subsection in lieu of the amount determined under paragraph (1) of this subsection effective on the date of the determination described in clause (B) of this paragraph.

"§ 8455. General provisions

"(a)(1)(A) Subject to subparagraph (B) of this paragraph, any participant who is receiving payments of—

"(i) illness and injury insurance benefits under section 8452 of this title;

"(ii) short term disability compensation under section 8453 of this title; or

"(iii) long term disability compensation under section 8454 of this title, shall be examined by a physician under the direction of the Office (in the case of any participant receiving payments referred to in clause (i) or (ii) of this subparagraph) or the Board (in the case of any participant receiving payments referred to in clause (iii) of this subparagraph) at such times as the Office or the Board, as the case may be, may require.

"(B) Subparagraph (A) of this paragraph shall not apply in the case of any participant who—

"(i) is receiving payments described in clause (ii) or (iii) of such subparagraph; and

"(ii) is determined to be under a disability for the purposes of title II of the Social Security Act.

"(C) Notwithstanding any other provision of this subchapter, any participant who fails to submit to the examination required under subparagraph (A) of this paragraph shall not be entitled to the benefits or compensation referred to in such subparagraph.

"(2) A physician examining a participant under paragraph (1) of this subsection shall report to the Office or the Board, as the case may be, the diagnosis and prognosis with respect to such participant.

"(b)(1) Any participant described in section 8454(a) of this title who is determined on the basis of the examination conducted under subsection (a) of this section to be able to perform the work required in any position in the employing agency located within a reasonable commuting distance from the last place the participant worked in the employing agency, as determined by the Director, shall be appointed to such position. If there is no such position in the employing agency, the participant shall be appointed to any position in the Government, located within such reasonable commuting distance, in which the participant is able to perform the work required, as determined by the Director based on such examination.

"(2) Any participant who elects not to accept an appointment under paragraph (1) of this subsection shall not be entitled to compensation under section 8454 of this title.

"(3) Any participant who is appointed to a position under paragraph (1) of this subsection is entitled to appeal to the Merit Systems Protection Board under section 7701 of this title any determination that the participant is able to perform the work required of such position.

"(4) Any participant who is appointed to a position under paragraph (1) of this subsection is entitled to the higher of—

"(A) the maximum rate of basic pay payable with respect to the grade of the position to which the participant is appointed; or

"(B) the rate of basic pay determined pursuant to section 5363(d) of this title.

"(c) Notwithstanding section 8454 of this title, the amount of monthly compensation payable to a participant under such section shall be reduced (but not below $50) by the amount of disability insurance benefits to which the participant is entitled under section 223 of the Social Security Act and the amount of any benefits to which the participant is entitled under section 202 of such Act by reason of being under a disability.

"(d)(1) Illness and accident insurance benefits payable to a participant under section 8452 of this title and short term disability compensation payable to a participant under section 8453 of this title shall be paid by the employing agency from the appropriation or fund used to pay the participant, including, in the case of an employee of the Congress who is paid by the Clerk of the House of Representatives, the contingent fund of the House of Representatives.

"(2)(A) Long term disability compensation payable to a participant under section 8454 of this title shall be paid by the Board from sums appropriated to the Fund for such purpose and from sums reimbursed to the Fund under subparagraph (B) of this paragraph.

"(B) The employing agency of any participant receiving long term disability compensation under section 8454 of this title shall reimburse the Fund, from the applicable appropriation or fund described in paragraph (1) of this subsection, in the amount of the disability compensation paid by the Board to such participant under subparagraph (A) of this paragraph.

"(e)(1) A participant who is entitled to disability compensation under section 8453 or 8454 of this title shall be separated from employment by the Government in any case in which—

"(A) the Board determines, based on the prognosis with respect to such participant, that the participant will continue to be disabled for Federal service indefinitely; or

"(B) no specific prognosis with respect to such participant is available to the Board.

"(2) The amount of disability compensation payable under section 8453 or 8454 of this title to a participant who is separated under paragraph (1) of this subsection is reduced (but not below zero dollars) by the amount of any annuity to which such employee is entitled under section 8414 of this title.

"(f) The Office shall prescribe a schedule of impairments. The schedule shall include a list of diseases and injuries and the typical period required for the recovery from each such disease or injury based on such factors as the Office considers appropriate. The Office may adopt, to the extent that the Office considers appropriate in the administration of this subchapter, any schedule of impairments used by any other agency of the Government in the administration of worker compensation laws.

"SUBCHAPTER IV—CIVIL SERVICE PENSION BOARD

"§ 8491. Establishment of Civil Service Pension Board

"(a) There is established as an independent agency in the executive branch of the Federal Government a Civil Service Pension Board.

"(b) The Board shall be composed of—

"(1) the Secretary of Commerce;

"(2) the Secretary of Labor;

"(3) the Secretary of the Treasury;

"(4) the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board;

"(5) the Executive Director appointed by the President under subsection (c) of this section; and

"(6) six other members appointed by the President.

"(c) The President shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, an Executive Director of the Board. The Executive Director shall have substantial experience, training, or expertise in the management of financial investments.

"(d)(1) The President shall appoint the six members of the Board other than the Executive Director from a list of recommended individuals submitted under paragraph (2) of this subsection.

"(2) Whenever there is a vacancy on the Board to be filled by appointment by the President under subsection (b)(6) of this section, each organization of managers of Government agencies or other instrumentalities, as the President considers appropriate, and each labor organization may submit to the President the name of one individual whom the organization recommends to be appointed to fill such vacancy.

"(e)(1)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B) of this paragraph the term of office of each member of the Board appointed under subsection (b)(6) of this section shall be four years.

"(B) Of the members of the Board first appointed under subsection (b)(6) of this section, three members shall each be appointed for a term of two years.

"(2) Any member appointed under subsection (b)(6) of this section to fill a vacancy occurring before the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed shall be appointed for the remainder of such term.

"(f) The Executive Director shall serve for seven years after the date of appointment unless removed earlier by the Board under section 8493(a)(1)(C)(iii) of this title.

"(g)(1) The Board shall meet—

"(A) not less than four times during each fiscal year at such times as the Board shall establish; and

"(B) at additional times at the call of the Executive Director.

"(2)(A) Except as provided in section 8493(a)(1)(C) of this title, the Board shall perform the functions and exercise the powers of the Board on a majority vote of a quorum of the Board.

"(B) A vacancy on the Board shall not impair the authority of a quorum of the Board to perform the functions and exercise the powers of the Board.

"(h) Six members of the Board shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business.

"(i) Each member of the Board who is not a Federal employee shall be compensated at the daily rate of basic pay applicable to a position described in section 5315 of this title for each day or part thereof during which such member is engaged in performing a function of the Board.

"(j) The accrued annual leave of any employee who is a member of the Board shall not be charged for any time used in performing service for the Board during any work period.

"§ 8492. Functions

"(a) In addition to performing such functions, duties, and responsibilities as are required under subchapter II of this chapter, the Board shall—

"(1) establish policy and prescribe rules for the management of the Civil Service Pension Fund;

"(2) designate the general types of investments which a participant may elect, under section 8418(b) of this title, for the investment of sums in the Fund attributable to such participant;

"(3) review the performance of investments made for the Fund;

"(4) supervise the Executive Director of the Board; and

"(5) review and approve the budget of the Board.

"(b) The Executive Director shall—

"(1) be the executive officer of the Board;

"(2) preside at the meetings of the Board;

"(3) manage the Fund;

"(4) administer the provisions of this chapter; and

"(5) take such other actions as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this chapter.

"§ 8493. Powers and administrative provisions

"(a)(1) The Board may—

"(A) adopt, alter, and use a seal;

"(B) adopt, amend, and repeal rules to carry out the provisions of this chapter;

"(C) upon the concurring votes of seven members—

"(i) disapprove any action of the Executive Director under subsection (b) of this section;

"(ii) except as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection, direct the Executive Director to take such action as the Board considers appropriate to carry out the provisions of this chapter and the policies of the Board; and

"(iii) remove the Executive Director from office for good cause shown; and

"(D) take such other action as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this chapter.

"(2) The Board may not direct the Executive Director—

"(A) to invest or to cause to be invested any sums of the Fund in a specific asset; or

"(B) to enter into a contract under subsection (b)(1)(C) of this subsection with a specific private business concern.

"(b)(1) The Executive Director, subject to subsection (a) of this section, may—

"(A) call meetings of the Board;

"(B) subject to civil service and classification laws, appoint, employ, and fix the compensation of such personnel as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act;

"(C) subject to paragraph (2) of this subsection, and subject to the approval of the Board, negotiate, without regard to the provisions of title III of the Federal Properties and Administrative Services Act of 1949 (41 U.S.C. 251 et seq.), contracts with private business concerns to invest sums of the Fund and to manage such investments;

"(D) enter into such other contracts or other arrangements or modifications thereof, as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this chapter and the policies of the Board;

"(E) obtain from any Federal agency, including any independent establishment or instrumentality of the United States, advice, information, estimates, statistics, and such other assistance as the Executive Director considers necessary to carry out the provisions of this chapter and the policies of the Board;

"(F) make such expenditures from the Fund as the Executive Director determines are necessary to carry out the provisions of this chapter and the policies of the Board;

"(G) pay the compensation, per diem, and travel expenses of personnel from the Fund;

"(H) accept and utilize the services of individuals employed intermittently in the Government service and reimburse such individuals for travel expenses, as authorized by section 5703 of title 5, United States Code, including per diem as authorized by section 5702 of such title;

"(I) except as otherwise expressly prohibited by law or the policies of the Board, delegate any of his functions to such officers and employees under the Board as he may designate and authorize such successive redelegations of such functions to such officers and employees under the Board as he may consider to be necessary or appropriate; and

"(J) take such other action as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this chapter.

"(2) Each contract entered into under paragraph (1)(C) of this subsection by the Executive Director shall—

"(A) specify that the private business concern managing investments for the Fund under such contract shall make, consistent with prudent criteria for financial investment, such investments as, in the judgment of such private business concern, will maximize the return on such investments; and

"(B) provide for the payment of fees to such business concern in an amount not exceeding the amount equal to one-quarter of 1 percent of the sums of the Fund invested by such business concern under the contract.

"§ 8494. Fiduciary responsibilities

"(a) For the purposes of this section—

"(1) the term 'fiduciary' means—

"(A) with respect to the Fund, each member of the Board; and

"(B) with respect to sums from the Fund invested and managed by a private business concern under a contract entered into under section 8493(b)(1)(C) of this title—

"(i) such private business concern; and

"(ii) each owner, director, officer, and employee of such private business concern;

"(2) the term 'party in interest' includes—

"(A) any fiduciary;

"(B) any counsel to a fiduciary;

"(C) any person providing services to the Board;

"(D) a labor organization;

"(E) a spouse, ancestor, lineal descendant, or spouse of a lineal descendant of a person described in subclause (A), (B), or (C) of this clause; and

"(F) a corporation, partnership, or trust or estate of which, or in which, 50 percent or more of—

"(i) the combined voting power of all classes of stock entitled to vote or the total value of shares of all classes of stock of such corporation;

"(ii) the capital interest or profits interest of such partnership; or

"(iii) the beneficial interest of such trust or estate, is owned directly or indirectly, or held by a person described in subclause (A), (B), (C), or (E) of this clause; and

"(3) the term 'person' means an individual, partnership, joint venture, corporation, mutual company, joint-stock company, trust, estate, unincorporated organization, association, or labor organization.

"(b)(1) A fiduciary shall discharge his responsibilities with respect to the Fund or applicable portion thereof solely in the interest of the participants and beneficiaries and—

"(A) for the exclusive purpose of—

"(i) providing benefits to participants and their beneficiaries; and

"(ii) defraying reasonable expenses of administering the Fund or applicable portions thereof;

"(B) with the care, skill, prudence, and diligence under the circumstances then prevailing that a prudent man acting in a like capacity and familiar with such matters would use in the conduct of an enterprise of a like character and with like objectives; and

"(C) to the extent permitted by the provisions of subchapter II of this chapter, by diversifying the investments of the Fund or applicable portions thereof so as to minimize the risk of large losses, unless under the circumstances it is clearly prudent not to do so.

"(2) No fiduciary may maintain the indicia of ownership of any assets of the Fund outside the jurisdiction of the district courts of the United States.

"(c)(1) A fiduciary shall not cause the Fund or any portion thereof to engage in a transaction, if he knows or should know that such transaction constitutes a direct or indirect—

"(A) sale or exchange, or leasing, of any property between the Fund and a party in interest;

"(B) lending of money or other extension of credit between the Fund and a party in interest;

"(C) furnishing of goods, services, or facilities between the Fund and a party in interest; or

"(D) transfer to, or use by or for the benefit of, a party in interest, of any assets of the Fund.

"(2) A fiduciary shall not—

"(A) deal with any assets of the Fund in his own interest or for his own account;

"(B) act, in his individual or any other capacity, in any transaction involving the Fund for the benefit of a party (or represent a party) whose interests are adverse to the interests of the Fund or the interests of its participants or beneficiaries; or

"(C) receive any consideration for his own personal account from any party dealing with such Fund in connection with a transaction involving assets of the Fund.

"(3) For the purposes of this subsection, a transfer of real or personal property by a party in interest to a plan shall be treated as a sale or exchange if the property is subject to a mortgage or similar lien which the plan assumes or if it is subject to a mortgage or similar lien which a party-in-interest placed on the property within the 10-year period ending on the date of the transfer.".

(b) The table of chapters at the beginning of part III of such title is amended by inserting after the item relating to chapter 83 the following new item:

"84. Civil Service Pension System 8401".

COMPENSATION OF EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR

SEC. 102. Section 5313 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"Executive Director, Civil Service Pension Board.".

TITLE II—MISCELLANEOUS AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS

PAY RETENTION FOR CERTAIN DISABLED EMPLOYEES

SEC. 201. Section 5363 of title 5, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in subsection (c) by striking out "preceding"; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) Any employee who is appointed to a position under section 8455(b)(1) of this title by reason of a disability is entitled to basic pay at a rate not less than the higher of—

"(1) the rate of basic pay payable to the employee in the last position the employee formerly held, plus 50 percent of the amount of each increase, after the date of the appointment, in the maximum rate of basic pay payable with respect to the position to which the employee is appointed; or

"(2) 60 percent of the maximum rate of basic pay payable, on the date of the appointment, with respect to the last position that the employee held at the time of the onset of the disability, plus the amount of each increase, after the date of the appointment, in such maximum rate of basic pay.".

SICK LEAVE

SEC. 202. Section 6307 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d)(1) Notwithstanding subsection (a) of this section, an employee who is participating in the Civil Service Pension System under subchapter II of chapter 84 of this title accrues seven days of sick leave on the effective date of the employment of such employee for use during the fiscal year in which such employment commences and on the first day of each ensuing fiscal year.

"(2) Notwithstanding subsection (b) of this section, sick leave which accrues under paragraph (1) of this subsection and is not used during the fiscal year in which the sick leave accrues does not accumulate for use in succeeding fiscal years.

"(3) Notwithstanding subsection (c) of this section, sick leave with pay may not be advanced to an employee described in paragraph (1) of this subsection.".

MISCELLANEOUS AMENDMENTS TO CHAPTER 83 OF TITLE 5

SEC. 203. (a)(1) Clause (17) of section 8331 of title 5, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"(17) 'normal cost' means the entry-age normal cost computed by the Office of Personnel Management in accordance with generally accepted actuarial practice (using dynamic assumptions), and expressed as a level percentage of basic pay;".

(2) Clause (19) of such section is amended to read as follows:

"(19) 'unfunded liability' means the estimated excess of—

"(A) the present value of all benefits payable from the Fund to employees, Members, former employees, and former Members subject to this subchapter, and to their survivors, computed in accordance with generally accepted actuarial practice (using dynamic assumptions), over

"(B) the sum of—

"(i) the present value of deductions to be withheld from the future basic pay of employees and Members currently subject to this subchapter and of future agency contributions to be made on their behalf; plus

"(ii) the Fund balance as of the date the unfunded liability is determined;".

(3) Clause (21) of such section is amended by striking out "and" at the end thereof.

(4) Clause (22) of such section is amended by striking out the period and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon and "and".

(5) Such section is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new clause:

"(23) 'dynamic assumptions' means economic assumptions used in determining actuarial costs and liabilities of a retirement system which anticipate the effects of long-term future—

"(A) investment yields,

"(B) increases in rates of basic pay, and

"(C) rates of inflation.".

(b) Section 8332 of such title is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(n) Any employee electing under section 8420(d)(1)(A)(ii) of this title to be subject to the provisions of this subchapter shall be credited with the service performed while subject to the provisions of chapter 84 of this title.".

(c) Section 8334(a)(1) of such title is amended by striking out the second sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following new sentences: "Except as provided in the third sentence of this paragraph, the employing agency shall contribute for each employee or Member an amount equal to that percentage of the employee's or Member's basic pay which is equal to the excess of—

"(A) the normal cost applicable to such employee or Member, over

"(B) the percentage applicable to such employee or Member under the preceding sentence.

The United States Postal Service shall contribute for each employee of the United States Postal Service an amount equal to such employee's basic pay multiplied by two-thirds of the normal cost applicable to such employee's basic pay. The contributions under this paragraph shall be made from the appropriation or fund used to pay the employee or, in the case of an elected official, from an appropriation or fund available for payment of other salaries of the same office or establishment.".

(d) Section 8338 of such title is amended by striking out subsection (c) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(c)(1) Subject to paragraph (2) of this subsection, an annuity or reduced annuity authorized by this section is computed under section 8339 of this title.

"(2) An annuity or reduced annuity authorized under this section and payable to an employee or Member making the election described in section 8420(b)(1)(B) of this title shall be based on the years of service and average pay of such employee as of the date of the latest separation of such employee from the service before the effective date of chapter 84 of this title. Eligibility for such annuity shall be determined under the applicable provisions of this subchapter considering the participant's total creditable service before, on, and after the effective date of such chapter.

"(d) This section shall not apply to an employee who makes the election described in section 8420(b)(1)(A) of this title.".

(e) Section 8348 of such title is amended—

(1) by striking out subsections (f), (g), and (h) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(f)(1) The Office of Personnel Management shall determine the amount of the unfunded liability of the Fund as of the close of each fiscal year beginning after September 30, 1982, and before October 1, 2022.

"(2)(A) The amount of any unfunded liability determined under paragraph (1) for any fiscal year shall be amortized, in annual installments, over the number of fiscal years between such fiscal year and fiscal year 2022.

"(B) The amount of the first annual installment under subparagraph (A) shall be equal to that percentage of aggregate basic pay which the Office of Personnel Management determines is necessary, when increased and compounded annually by 6 percent, to finance (with interest at the rate used in the most recent valuation) such unfunded liability over the number of years determined under such subparagraph. Each annual installment after the first annual installment shall be increased by an amount equal to 6 percent of the amount of the preceding annual installment.

"(3) At the end of each fiscal year, the Office of Personnel Management shall notify the Secretary of the Treasury of the amount of the annual installment computed under paragraph (2)(B) for such fiscal year. Before closing the accounts for each fiscal year, the Secretary shall credit that amount to the Fund, as a Government contribution, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated."; and

(2) by redesignating subsection (i) as subsection (g).

(f)(1) Chapter 83 of such title is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sections:

"§ 8349. Annual statement

"At the end of each fiscal year, the Office of Personnel Management or the employing agency shall provide each employee and Member who is subject to the provisions of this subchapter an annual statement of the present value of the future benefits payable to such employee or Member under this subchapter. For the purpose of such statement the present value of the future benefits shall be actuarially determined based on the creditable service and average pay of the employee or Member on the last day of such fiscal year.

"§ 8350. Applicability

"Except as otherwise specifically provided in this subchapter or chapter 84 of this title, the provisions of this subchapter shall not apply with respect to an employee, Member, or survivor of an employee or Member who is subject to the provisions of chapter 84 of this title.".

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new items:

"8349. Annual statement.
"8350. Applicability.".

COURT-ORDERED SURVIVOR ANNUITY UNDER CHAPTER 83 OF TITLE 5, UNITED STATES CODE

SEC. 204. (a) Section 8339 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(o)(1) If a decree, order, or agreement described in section 8341(j) of this title requires the payment of a survivor annuity based on the service of an employee or Member who is a party to such decree, order, or agreement and the annuity of such retired employee or Member, as computed under any of subsections (a)-(i) and (n) of this section, is not reduced under subsection (j) or (k) of this section, the annuity of such retired employee or Member shall be reduced by the percentages specified in the first sentence of subsection (j)(1) of this section without regard to any notification authorized by such sentence. Any reduction in the annuity under the first sentence of this subsection shall terminate on the first day of the month after the date of any court decree, court order, or court-approved agreement revoking the requirement under a previous decree, order, or agreement to pay a survivor annuity.".

(b)(1) Subsection (b)(1) of section 8341 of title 5, United States Code, is amended—

(A) by striking out "(o)" and inserting "(n)"; and

(B) by inserting "reduced by the amounts, if any, payable under subsection (j) of this section" after "with respect to the annuitant".

(2) The first sentence of subsection (c) of such section is amended by inserting "reduced by the amounts, if any, payable under subsection (j) of this section" after "Member".

(3) The first sentence of subsection (d) is amended—

(A) by striking out "(o)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(n)"; and

(B) by striking out "Member, except" and inserting "Member reduced by the amounts, if any, payable under subsection (j) of this section, except".

(4) Such section is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(j)(1) Subject to paragraph (2) of this subsection, if a retired employee or retired Member dies after having retired under this subchapter or an employee or Member dies after having completed at least 18 months of civilian service and the retired employee, retired Member, employee, or Member is survived by a spouse or former spouse who is a party to a court decree of divorce, annulment, or legal separation, or a court order incident to or court-approved property settlement agreement incident to any court action for or decree of divorce, annulment, or legal separation, to which the retired employee, retired Member, employee, or Member was a party before death, a survivor annuity shall be payable to such spouse or former spouse in accordance with the terms of such decree, order, or agreement. The survivor annuity payable to any spouse or former spouse under the first sentence of this subsection shall commence on the day after the retired employee, retired Member, employee, or Member, as the case may be, dies and shall terminate on the earlier of—

"(A) the date on which the survivor annuity terminates in accordance with the terms of the decree, order, or agreement; or

"(B) the last day of the month before the spouse or former spouse dies.

"(2)(A) Survivor annuities shall be payable under paragraph (1) of this subsection in the order in which the decree, order, or agreement is received by the Office of Personnel Management.

"(B) The total amount of survivor annuities payable under paragraph (1) of this subsection shall not exceed the amount of the survivor annuity that is payable to a widow or widower under—

"(i) subsection (b) of this section in the case of a retired employee or retired Member who dies after retiring under this subchapter; or

"(ii) subsection (d) of this section in the case of an employee or Member who dies after having completed at least 18 months of civilian service.".

AMENDMENTS TO CHAPTER 89 OF TITLE 5

SEC. 205. Chapter 89 of title 5, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in section 8903—

(d) The amendments made by this section shall apply to services performed after December 31, 1982.

TITLE IV—AUTHORIZATION AND EFFECTIVE DATE

FIRST YEAR EXPENSES OF THE SYSTEM

SEC. 401. (a) Notwithstanding section 8417(c)(2) of title 5, United States Code (as added by section 101 of this Act), the expenses incurred in the administration of the Civil Service Pension System described in section 8411(a) of such title (as added by section 101 of this Act) during fiscal year 1983 shall be paid from appropriations.

(b) There are authorized to be appropriated to the Civil Service Pension Fund established by section 8417 of title 5, United States Code (as added by section 101 of this Act), for fiscal year 1983 such sums as may be necessary to pay the expenses incurred in the administration of the Civil Service Pension System during such fiscal year.

EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 402. Titles I and II of this Act and the amendments made by such titles shall take effect January 1, 1983.

By Mr. HUMPHREY:

S. 2906. A bill to amend the Strategic and Critical Materials Stockpiling Act to provide that the National Defense Stockpile Transaction Fund shall be an off-budget activity, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Armed Services.

NATIONAL DEFENSE STOCKPILE TRANSACTION FUND REORGANIZATION ACT OF 1982

● Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I am seriously concerned over repeated reports of problems with the national defense stockpile. To determine the extent of these problems, the Subcommittee on Preparedness held a series of hearings this summer on the status of the stockpile.

These hearings revealed that serious problems exist with the national defense stockpile. Instead of providing a ready and adequate supply of raw materials for a national emergency, the stockpile has been used, or rather abused, for political and economic reasons, Additionally, witnesses at these hearings revealed that the stockpile is being mismanaged and alleged that materials in the stockpile necessary for defense purposes have deteriorated.

Here are some examples of defense stockpile abuse. This summer, a proposal was introduced mandating that revenues accrued from the sale of excess stockpile materials be used to purchase copper, a priority three commodity, in spite of the fact that nearly half of the 10 billion dollars' worth of critical materials needed to meet stockpile requirements are priority one or two commodities.

Perhaps the most disturbing revelation at the hearings is that the revenues accrued in the stockpile transaction fund are used to offset the Federal budget deficit, resulting in serious shortfalls in materials inventories. This appears to be a clear violation of the Strategic and Critical Materials Stockpiling Act, which states: "The purpose of the stockpile is to serve the iterest of national defense only and is not to be used for economic or budgetary purposes."

Two separate Federal agencies manage the defense stockpile. The Federal Management Agency (FEMA) consolidates stockpile requirements established by other Federal departments and agencies, while the General Services Administration (GSA) oversees the stockpile commodities, transactions, and budget. Differing perspectives and cumbersome coordination between the two agencies result in awkward and inefficient management of this integral part of our national defense preparedness structure.

After completing hearings this summer, I notified President Reagan of the findings. The administration subsequently completed an emergency mobilization preparedness review of the defense stockpile that recommends the National Security Council as the final authority of the National Defense Stockpile. This recommendation, when implemented, should streamline the currently convoluted dual stockpile management system. As such, I fully endorse this recommendation.

To insure good physical condition of stockpile commodities, I am preparing legislation to require regular and thorough administration reports to the Congress on the physical status of the stockpiled materials.

In addition, I am now introducing legislation that will establish the stockpile transaction fund as a true revolving fund, independent from the budget process and of efforts to use the fund to offset the Federal deficit.

Mr. President, much time and effort on the part of the President, his national security advisers, and the Congress have been expended in the interest of restoring our national defense. At the very foundation of these efforts is the presumption that in a national emergency materials would be available to support a combined mobilization of military and defense-related industries. This has been shown to not be the case, and I believe that it is time that a national resolve is established to clear up the problems uncovered in the hearings this summer. I am encouraged by the administration's attention and efforts in this direction and hope that my colleagues will respond in a similar fashion.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that my proposed bill, S. 2906, to establish the stockpile transaction fund as a true revolving fund, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2906

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "National Defense Stockpile Transaction Fund Reorganization Act of 1982".

SEC. 2. Section 9 of the Strategic and Critical Materials Stock Piling Act (50 U.S.C. 98h) is amended by striking out subsections (b) and (c) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(b)(1) All moneys received from the sale of materials in the stockpile under paragraph (4), (5), or (6) of section 6(a) shall be covered into the fund and shall remain in the fund until expended.

"(2) Moneys covered into the fund under paragraph (1) shall be available only for the acquisition of strategic and critical materials, including replacement materials for materials rotated under section 6(a)(4) or disposed of under section 7(a), and for the expenses of transportation, processing, refining, storage, security, maintenance, rotation, and disposal of materials contained in or acquired for the stockpile.

"(c)(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the appropriate level of total budget authority and total budget outlays and the recommended level of Federal revenues contained in any concurrent resolution on the budget adopted under title III of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 shall not include the budget authority, outlays, revenues, and receipts for the fund.

"(2) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the President shall not include in the Budget submitted under section 201(a) of the Budget and Accounting Act, 1921, proposed budget authority and estimates of outlays, revenues, and receipts for the fund.

"(3) Budget authority and budget outlays for the fund shall not be subject to any general limitation imposed by statute on expenditures of the United States.

SEC. 3. (a) The Strategic and Critical Materials Stock Piling Act (50 U.S.C. 98 et seq.) is further amended—

(1) by striking out section 3(c);

(2) in section 5—

(A) by striking out subsections (a) and (b); and

(B) by striking out "(c)" in subsection (c);

(3) in section 6—

(A) by striking out "subject to the notification required by subsection (d)(2)," in subsection (a)(5);

(B) by striking out subsection (a)(6) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(6) dispose of such materials or quantities of materials in the stockpile as the President determines not to be necessary to continue to maintain in the stockpile in carrying out this Act.";

(C) by striking out "is authorized by law and" in subsection (c)(1);

(D) by striking out the first comma and "the disposition of which is authorized by law," in subsection (c)(2); and

(E) by striking out subsection (d) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(d) The President may waive the applicability of any provision of subsection (b) to any acquisition of material for, or disposal of, material from the stockpile.";

(4) in section 7—

(A) by striking out "(a)" in subsection (a); and

(B) by striking out subsection (b); and

(5) in section 11—

(A) by striking out "(a)" in subsection (a);

(B) by striking out "by barter, as provided for in section 6(c) of this Act," in subsection (a)(2);

(C) by striking out "appropriations" in subsection (a)(3) and inserting in lieu thereof "expenditures"; and

(D) by striking out subsection (b).●

By Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD (for Mr. KENNEDY for himself, Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD, Mr. RANDOLPH, Mr. METZENBAUM, and Mr. RIEGLE)

S.J. Res. 245. Joint resolution making an urgent supplemental appropriation for the Department of Labor for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1982; read twice and placed on the calendar by unanimous consent.

(The text of the joint resolution appears earlier in today's RECORD.)

EMERGENCY JOBS INITIATIVE

● Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, there is no more urgent or important business facing the Congress and the country than putting Americans back to work. It has been over a year since the President's economic recovery program became law. In that time 3 million Americans have lost their jobs. The program that was designed to produce "jobs, jobs, jobs," has instead brought about the highest unemployment in over 40 years.

The American people have waited patiently for the President to deliver on his promises. They have waited patiently for the recovery to begin. They have waited patiently for pay checks to replace pink slips. But their patience has been rewarded with record business failures, lengthening unemployment lines and the knowledge that one of every three Americans will be without work sometime during this year.

The American people have been patient for too long, it is time for us to act.

The program I am introducing offers new hope and opportunity to 200,000 workers who have exhausted their unemployment benefits. These men and women know what it is to work hard. Most have worked their entire lives.

I believe we owe these workers who are jobless through no fault of their own the chance to put their skills and talents to work rebuilding their communities.

In cities and towns across this country, our public buildings are in disrepair. Our roads and bridges are deteriorating, our water systems need fixing. Our schools and hospitals and public housing need repairs. The jobs are there.

The challenge is to put the skills and talents of the unemployed to work rebuilding their communities.

My bill is targeted. It provides help to those communities with the highest unemployment. It provides jobs to those that have been without work the longest. No job would last longer than 6 months. No one could earn more than $10,000. It is an emergency measure designed to respond to the national unemployment crisis now facing the country.

There is still time if we act now. I urge my colleagues to join in sponsoring this important measure.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a more detailed description of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the detailed description was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEMOCRATS EMERGENCY JOBS INITIATIVE

THE NEED

Unemployment stands at 9.8, a 40 year high.

10.8 million Americans can't find work.

$20 billion will be paid out this year alone in U.I. checks.

140,000 workers each month are exhausting these benefits.

1 in 6 unemployed workers are not even receiving U.I.

These idled men and women can be put to work rebuilding the deteriorating public facilities in their communities.

THE PROGRAM

Resources—5 percent ($1 billion) of the fiscal year 1982 expenditure for Unemployment Insurance would be appropriated in an urgent one time supplemental for the Department of Labor.[1]

Jobs—200,000 unemployed workers would be hired to repair and maintain public facilities and improve public lands in such jobs as: bridge and street repair; rehabilitation of public buildings; repair of water systems; flood and erosion control; harbor and port improvement; forestry and rangeland conservation; and energy conservation;

Eligible Areas—83 percent of funds go out by formula to State and local communities with unemployment in excess of the national average for 3 consecutive months. 2 percent to Native American tribes. 15 percent by formula to local areas suffering high unemployment as a result of plant closings, natural disasters or other severe economic dislocations.

Eligible Individuals—85 percent of funds go to workers unemployed at least two weeks with priority for long term unemployment and those who've exhausted U.I.

---

[1] CBO estimates that 20 percent of cost ($200 million) would be recouped through reduced transfer payments, increased revenues and other budgetary "feedback" effects.

15 percent of funds are earmarked to employ 16-19 year olds in community improvement projects.

Duration—jobs would be temporary, not to exceed 6 months for any individual.

Wages—prevailing wages, not to exceed $10,000 a year.●

By Mr. LONG (for himself, Mr. JOHNSTON, and Mr. MOYNIHAN):

S.J. Res. 246. Joint resolution to authorize and request the President of the United States to issue a proclamation designating the first week in October for the calendar years 1982, 1983, and 1984 as "National Port Week"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NATIONAL PORT WEEK

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, today, I am joining with Senator JOHNSTON and Senator MOYNIHAN in introducing a joint resolution authorizing President Reagan to proclaim the first week in October in calendar years 1982 through 1984 as "National Port Week." I am happy to say that the Congress has payed tribute to our Nation's ports by designating this week as "National Port Week" since 1978.

From the early days of our Nation, attempts were made to convert our waterways into tools of civilization, and, since that time, ports have played a central role in our development. Our Nation's economics, commerce, and industry depend heavily on our network of waterways which links the industrial centers of our country. Commerical ports annually contribute more than $66 billion in national income and $12 billion in Federal, State, and local taxes to our presently unstable economy in addition to helping create over 1 million jobs nationwide.

Just as our forefathers met the challenge of building flourishing ports, we must continue to expand them. The total amount of goods carried by water in the State of Louisiana alone will more than double by the year 2000. We must stand behind our ports and encourage them to grow as waterborne transportation is the most fuel-efficient mode of shipping in our Nation's domestic and international commerce. We, as a nation, must utilize the energy options which are available to us.

Since there must be a port of origin as well as a port of destination, the ports throughout our Nation have long realized the vested interest which they have in each other. It is this spirit of cooperation that has made this Nation the great maritime trade center that it is. Just look around at any port site. You will see goods from many distant points of origin—grain from Iowa, steel from Pittsburgh, sugar from Louisiana—not to mention imports and exports from other parts of the world.

U.S. international trade has grown to over $300 billion annually, contributed to by deep-draft commercial ports, inland river ports, and over 25,000 miles of navigable waterways. One out of every six jobs in agriculture, manufacturing, and services in America is dependent upon international sea-born trade.

Mr. President, each one of us reaps the benefits or our Nation's ports. I think we should all take the time to recognize the important contribution of this industry to our country's well-being and join together to pay tribute to our Nation's ports.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. RES. 246

Whereas the past development of the public ports of the United States is the result of a fruitful partnership with the Federal Government constructing and maintaining the navigable waterways and harbors of the United States, and local municipalities assuming major responsibility for land-based port development;

Whereas our Nation's commercial seaports and inland river ports are indispensable to foreign and domestic waterborne commerce and to the economic well-being and national security of the United States;

Whereas the maintenance and development of our national network of commercial ports is vital to expanded international trade and to the attainment of a favorable trade balance;

Whereas commercial ports serving the waterborne commerce of the United States are responsible for the continued employment of more than one million workers and in 1981 generated a total of $70,000,000,000 in direct and indirect benefits to the United States economy;

Whereas there is a continuing need to focus public attention upon the value of a viable and competitive system of commercial ports; and

Whereas the National Port Week observance promotes public recognition of the vital role that our ocean and inland ports have played in the economic growth and national security of the United States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President of the United States is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation in each of calendar years 1982, 1983, and 1984 designating the first week in October as "National Port Week" and to invite the Governors of the several States, the chief officials of local governments, and the people of the United States to observe that week with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

AMENDMENT NO. 2035

At the request of Mr. METZENBAUM, the names of the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD), the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY), the Senator from Maryland (Mr. MATHIAS), the Senator from Maryland (Mr. SARBANES), the Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON), the Senator from Arizona (Mr. DECONCINI), the Senator from Illinois (Mr. PERCY), the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. RANDOLPH), the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. EXON), and the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. DURENBERGER) were added as cosponsors of amendment No. 2035 intended to be proposed to House Joint Resolution 520, a joint resolution to provide for a temporary increase in the public debt limit.

SENATE RESOLUTION 462—RESOLUTION RELATING TO CERTAIN TRADE BARRIERS

Mr. BENTSEN (for himself and Mr. DANFORTH) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

S. RES. 462

Whereas, the U.S. and Japan are among the signatories to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade; and

Whereas, the U.S. has worked for an open world trading system within the framework of the GATT and has allowed Japan open access to U.S. markets; and

Whereas, Japan has enjoyed this open access and has achieved a dominant position in many U.S. markets and now has an $18 billion annual trade surplus with the U.S.; and

Whereas, Japan has used a system of import quotas and other tariff and non-tariff trade barriers to restrict imports of 22 categories of agricultural products, including beef and citrus in which the U.S. has a comparative advantage in production; and

Whereas, this system of import restritions has forced Japanese consumers to pay unreasonably high prices for beef, citrus, and other foods produced in the U.S. while denying U.S. farmers and ranchers reasonable access to these markets and denying U.S. farmers and ranchers the opportunity to sell their products at these higher prices; and

Whereas, consultations between the U.S. and Japan on liberalization of trade in beef and citrus are scheduled to begin in Honolulu on October 20; therefore be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the U.S. in such consultations should seek completely open access to the Japanese market for U.S. beef and citrus, including the removal of all trade barriers to the export of such agricultural products to Japan.

SEC. 2. It is further the sense of the Senate that in the event such consultations do not result in open access to the Japanese market for U.S. beef and citrus, then the Government of the United States should evaluate what remedies under United States law and international agreements are appropriate under the circumstances.

JAPANESE AGRICULTURAL TRADE BARRIERS

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I am today submitting a resolution designed to help open the Japanese market to American agricultural products, particularly beef and citrus. I am pleased to be joined in this effort by my distinguished colleague the Senator from Missouri (Mr. DANFORTH) who is the chairman of the International Trade Subcommittee.

American workers, citrus growers, and cattlemen are being cut off at the knees by unfair Japanese trade practices. These practices are straightforward: Japan has erected insurmountable walls against the free trade of many citrus products and U.S. beef. These Japanese barriers clearly and flagrantly violate international trade agreements and obligations which Japan has under GATT—the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. And Japanese officials have dragged their feet repeatedly in response to world pressure to reduce or eliminate those trade walls.

JAPAN'S STEEL CURTAIN AGAINST BEEF IMPORTS

Japan—with only a literal handful of domestic ranchers—has erected a tall three-tiered wall against beef imports which hold U.S. exports to a ridiculously low level. The Japanese combination of a strict quota, a 25-percent tariff, and an additional variable import surcharge has held U.S. imports to only 9 ounces per person per year—about one steak or two hamburgers—and pushed meat prices in Japan sky high. The average price of meat consumed in Japan in 1981, for example, was $6.93 per pound—almost triple the U.S. average of $2.39 per pound. Last November, a chuck roast costing $1.49 per pound here cost $10.15 per pound in Tokyo. And a sirloin steak costing $3.46 per pound here went for $14.35 per pound in Tokyo supermarkets. Transportation costs account for only 50 cents per pound of this wide price difference, with the balance due entirely to the tight lid Japan keeps on U.S. beef imports.

Japanese consumers, U.S. ranchers, and U.S. workers in the meat processing industry are being needlessly penalized by this glaring Japanese violation of GATT. The U.S. Department of Agriculture has projected that U.S. beef sales to Japan in the absence of trade barriers could increase sevenfold to 200,000 metric tons within 5 years—which would roughly triple total U.S. beef sales abroad compared to 1981. Based on last Friday's beef prices these additional exports would boost cattle industry income by $370 million annually.

JAPAN'S FREEZE ON CITRUS IMPORTS

American citrus growers, especially grapefruit growers in Texas, are being victimized by illegal Japanese trade barriers, as well. Only four groups in Japan are permitted to import citrus, and two of the groups are Japanese growers with a strong interest in locking the freezer door on U.S. citrus exports. Their success can be measured by comparing world figures on orange juice consumption. In 1981, U.S. consumption averaged 17 liters per person, followed by 16 liters in Canada, and 15 liters in Sweden. Yet, Japan's trade barriers so successfully suppressed imports that consumption there was a scant 2.5 liters per capita.

It is argued that Japanese citrus quotas do not suppress consumption, but past experience tells us something else. When Japanese barriers against lemon imports were relaxed, for example, U.S. exports soared 30-fold to 246 million pounds in 1981 from only 8.3 million pounds when the quotas existed.

One of the most unreasonable Japanese citrus barriers is against U.S. grapefruit juice, where imports are capped at a paltry 6,000 metric tons, or 13.2 million pounds in 1982. This is in spite of the fact that Japan does not produce grapefruit and does not impose quotas on imports of fresh grapefruit. Experience with lemons show us that Japanese consumers would eagerly import many times the amount of grapefruit juice and other citrus products now permitted by the Japanese quotas if these illegal barriers were removed. But those quotas and the barriers against U.S. agricultural products can only be reduced or eliminated in government-to-government negotations—which brings me to the need for prompt passage of this resolution.

QUOTA REDUCTIONS ARE NEEDED

The United States maintains the most open and free trade posture of any nation. Our free trade policy has deep roots in our national history because unfair tariffs were a rallying point for our "War of Independence." For generations, we have tried to show by example that free trade benefits every nation. For example, the United States is a leading beef producing nation, yet we import more beef than any other major beef-producing country. The international economic principle of comparative advantage would result in every nation being better off with trade—a principle which especially favors our internationally competitive farmers and ranchers. Yet, our open trade policy has been misunderstood and even called naive. Japan and other foreign governments routinely violate GATT and other agreements without fear of retaliation by Uncle Sam.

Well, it is time we begun to play by the same trade rules that Japan plays by. Every month, billions of dollars worth of Japanese TV's, autos, computers, and toys crowd into our ports and stores as fast as Japanese producers can pile them onto ships. A lot of those ships return empty, however, because we could scarcely fill one small steamer with the beef and grapefruit juice going the other way which Japan permits to squeeze under its trade wall.

Negotiations with Japan in the past on trade issues have not been very productive. For example, the Japanese have increased the U.S. beef import quota only enough, since 1978, to add one hamburger per year to the diet of each Japanese. And that is the result of 3 years of bargaining.

A sizable share of Japan's wealth is tied to the production and export of goods to Americans. It is time that Japan met its obligations, both under GATT and as the free world's second biggest economy, to hold high the principle of open trade. A good opportunity for the United States to pry open Japan's trade doors will occur in October when United States and Japanese officials meet specifically to discuss Japan's beef and citrus trade barriers. It is high time that the State Department began to work for our farmers and ranchers, not vice versa.

I believe it is up to Congress to hold the administration's feet to the fire on agriculture exports to Japan. It must understand and understand clearly that Japan's trade barriers against beef and citrus violate GATT and that Congress wants the playing field of world trade leveled. Congress wants those barriers down and it wants them down now or Japan runs the terrible risk of facing trade barriers on her own exports.

EXPLANATION OF RESOLUTION

Mr. President, these are harsh words, but they need saying. The clock is running down and patience is running very thin in Congress with unfair Japanese agricultural trade practices. I am submitting a resolution today which is designed to make that point clearly and forcefully. The resolution is intended to stiffen the administration's back in these upcoming Japanese trade neogtiations. It is time for the administration to prove its ability and willingness to go to bat and produce results for U.S. farmers and ranchers—to show the rest of the world that they take unfair and illegal trade practices seriously—before any more jobs and paychecks are lost due to unfair foreign trade barriers.

NOTICES OF HEARINGS

SUBCOMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS AND RESERVED WATER

Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, I would like to announce for the information of the Senate and the public the scheduling of a public hearing before the Subcommittee on Public Lands and Reserved Water to consider S. 2801 (H.R. 6542), the Wilderness Protection Act of 1982. The hearing will be held on Thursday, September 23, beginning at 9 a.m. in room 3110 of the Dirksen Senate Office Building.

Those wishing to testify or who wish to submit testimony for the hearing record should write to the Subcommittee on Public Lands and Reserved Water, Room 3104, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C. 20510.

Witnesses are requested to provide the subcommittee with 100 copies of their written statements 24 hours in advance of the hearing, as required by the rules of the committee. Witnesses will be arranged in panels and may be limited in number due to the amount of requests to testify which are expected. Witnesses are requested to limit their oral testimony to 5 minutes and to submit their full written statement for the record.

For further information regarding this hearing, please contact Mr. Tony Bevinetto of the subcommittee staff at 224-5161.

SUBCOMMITTEE ON ENERGY AND MINERAL RESOURCES

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I would like to announce for the information of the Senate and the public that the subcommittee hearing scheduled for Thursday, September 23, at 9:30 a.m., on America's role in the world coal export market, will be held in room 5300 instead of room 3110.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

ABOLITION OF TECHNOLOGY TRANSFER GROUP

● Mr. JEPSEN. Mr. President, I find it odd that at a time when President Reagan is stressing the importance of the technology transfer issue, nominees for key policy positions at the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency are abolishing the relevent section at that agency.

I would like to submit for the RECORD a memorandum written by Norman Terrell, Acting Assistant Director, Bureau of Nuclear Weapons Control, abolishing the Technology Transfer Group as of August 30, 1982. I ask that the memorandum be included in the RECORD following my statement.

I hope, Mr. President, that some nominees can be found to fill these positions who are more supportive of the arms control and technology transfer agenda of our President, Ronald Reagan.

The memorandum follows:

ASSISTANT DIRECTOR,
U.S. ARMS CONTROL AND DISARMAMENT AGENCY,
August 26, 1982.

MEMORANDUM

To: NWC Staff
From: NWC—Norman Terrell
Subject: Abolition of Technology Transfer Group

Effective the opening of business, Monday, August 30, 1982, the Technology Transfer Group is abolished. The technology transfer and Commerce Department license review functions of the Group are assigned, together with Mr. William Searle and Dr. Gerhard Mally, to the Arms Transfer Division. Space policy responsibilities, together with Mr. James Chamberlin and Mrs. Esther Jones, are assigned to the Defense Program Analysis Division. Colonel Tim deGavre will be given a new assignment by the Senior Military Advisor.

I want to express my great appreciation to Colonel deGavre for the fine leadership he provided to the Technology Transfer Group, and to the other members of the Group for the important contributions they have made.

PROPOSED ARMS SALES

● Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, section 36(b) of the Arms Export Control Act requires that Congress receive advance notification of proposed arms sales under that act in excess of $50 million or, in the case of major defense equipment as defined in the act, those in excess of $14 million. Upon such notification, the Congress has 30 calendar days during which the sale may be prohibited by means of a concurrent resolution. The provision stipulates that, in the Senate, the notification of a proposed sale shall be sent to the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee.

In keeping with my intention to see that such information is available to the full Senate, I ask to have printed in the RECORD the notifications which have been received.

The notifications follow:

DEFENSE SECURITY ASSISTANCE AGENCY,
Washington, D.C., September 10, 1982.

In reply refer to: I-02939/82ct.

Hon. CHARLES H. PERCY,
Chairman, Committee on Foreign Relations, U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Pursuant to the reporting requirements of Section 36(b) of the Arms Export Control Act, we are forwarding herewith Transmittal No. 82-76, concerning the Department of the Navy's proposed Letter of Offer to France for defense articles and services estimated to cost $97 million. Shortly after this letter is delivered to your office, we plan to notify the news media.

Sincerely,

PHILIP C. GAST,
Lieutenant General, USAF.

POLICY JUSTIFICATION

FRANCE—VERY LOW FREQUENCY (VLF) TRANSMITTERS

The Government of France (GOF) has requested the purchase of four VLF transmitters with spare parts, publications, training, and support at an estimated cost of $97 million.

This sale will contribute to the foreign policy and security objectives of the United States by improving the defensive capabilities of an ally. Although French forces are not committed to NATO command, France nevertheless bases its defense on cooperation and interoperability with NATO. As a further potential benefit, this sale will contribute to the standardization and interoperability of French and U.S. equipment, as well as demonstrate the seriousness of the U.S. commitment to cooperative programs with alliance partners. France's commitment to this program may well have positive effects on French willingness to participate in other multinational, cooperative arms programs.

The GOF has decided to build a new communications system based upon a hardened network and on relay aircraft which will be able to retransmit the orders of the French President to submerged submarines as well as to other strategic components even in a high interference environment. Acquisition of these VLF transmitters will provide France with communication facilities operable under adverse conditions.

The sale of this equipment and support will not affect the basic military balance in the region.

The prime contractor will be the Rockwell International Corporation of Richardson, Texas.

Implementation of this sale will not require the assignment of any additional U.S. Government or contractor personnel to France until 1987. At that time there will probably be several contractor representatives in France on a year to year basis.

There will be no adverse impact on U.S. defense readiness as a result of this sale.

DEFENSE SECURITY ASSISTANCE AGENCY,
Washington, D.C., September 10, 1982.

POLICY JUSTIFICATION

KOREA—AIRCRAFT SPARE PARTS

The Government of Korea has requested the purchase of a cooperative logistics supply support arrangement, requisition case (FMSO II), for follow-on spares and supplies to support aircraft and other systems and subsystems of U.S. origin at an estimated cost of $60 million.

This sale will contribute to the foreign policy and national security of the United States by helping to improve the security of a friendly country which has been and continues to be an important force for political stability and economic progress in Eastern Asia. This sale will help to ensure that aircraft previously obtained by Korea from the U.S. are maintained in a mission-ready status to the maximum extent practicable.

This cooperative logistics supply support arrangement is necessary to ensure an uninterrupted flow of spare parts to support the C-123K, F-4D/E, F-5A/B/E/F, T-33, and A/T-37 aircraft, and other systems and subsystems of U.S. origin. The Korean Air Force will have no difficulty in absorbing the articles.

The sale of this equipment and support will not affect the basic military balance in the region.

Procurement of these items and services will be from the many contractors providing similar items and services to the U.S. forces.

Implementation of this sale will not require the assignment of any additional U.S. Government or contractor personnel to Korea.

There will be no adverse impact on U.S. defense readiness as a result of this sale.●

POLICY JUSTIFICATION

EGYPT—E-2C AIRCRAFT

The Government of Egypt (GOE) has requested the purchase of four E-2C aircraft with spare parts, support equipment, training, and publications at an estimated cost of $689 million.

The proposed sale supports the American foreign policy and national security objectives of assisting the GOE in its program of modernizing its armed forces so that it may provide for its own security and self-defense and contribute to regional security and stability. A strong and independent Egypt will be able to participate in the Middle East peace process and resist incursions of Soviet client states in the region.

The sale of these four aircraft will provide the Egyptian Air Defense Force with extended early warning as well as command and control capabilities. The E-2C aircraft will be used to augment ground radar units.

The sale of this equipment and support will not affect the basic military balance in the region.

The prime contractor will be the Grumman Aerospace Corporation of Bethpage, New York.

Implementation of this sale will require the assignment of 21 additional U.S. contractor representatives to Egypt for two years.

There will be no adverse impact on U.S. defense readiness as a result of this sale.●

PRELIMINARY NOTIFICATION OF PROPOSED ARMS SALES

● Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, section 36(b) of the Arms Export Control Act requires that Congress receive advance notification of proposed arms sales under that act in excess of $50 million, or in the case of major defense equipment as defined in the act, those in excess of $14 million. The provision stipulates that, in the Senate, notification of proposed sales shall be sent to the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee.

Pursuant to an informal understanding, the Department of Defense has agreed to provide the committee with a preliminary notification 20 days before transmittal of the official notification. The official notification will be printed in the RECORD in accordance with previous practice.

I wish to inform Members of the Senate that such notifications have been received.

Interested Senators may inquire as to the details of these preliminary notifications at the office of the Committee on Foreign Relations, Room 4229, Dirksen Building.

SALUTE TO PERCY V. WILLIAMS

● Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, Marylanders today enjoy substantially better educational opportunities thanks to the pioneering efforts of Percy V. Williams. During his 20 years with the Maryland State Department of Education, Dr. Williams has demonstrated great compassion and initiative as he has assumed the increased responsibilities of advanced leadership.

A native of Perryman, Md., Dr. Williams was educated in the public schools of Harford and Cecil Counties. His decision to pursue a career in education was prompted by an early concern for the poor and disadvantaged, complemented by continued encouragement from his father. He completed Bowie Normal School and began using his outstanding teaching abilities at Havre de Grace Elementary School. His professional qualifications were further enhanced by his attainment in 1938 of a bachelor of science degree from Virginia State College, and 3 years later a master of education degree from Temple University.

Dr. Williams interrupted his career for 3 years to serve his Nation in the Army during World War II. After the war he returned to Harford County, where he was appointed supervisor of black schools, a position he held until 1950, when he became principal of Central Consolidated School in Hickory. His outstanding work at Central formed a sound foundation for further advanced study, culminating in the doctor of education degree he received in 1955 from New York University.

In 1962 Dr. Williams joined the Maryland State Department of Education, where he has served as a supervisor, assistant director, director, and finally assistant State superintendent of compensatory, urban and supplementary programs, a post he held with distinction from 1970 through this year. He has also instructed students at Morgan State University and Coppin State College, and has served as a highly respected consultant to many educational, professional, and governmental organizations. He is a member of the National Education Association, the Maryland State Teachers Association, and the National Alliance of Black Educators, among many other prominent professional groups. He has even succeeded in coordinating his teaching skills with his deep religious convictions through his efforts as a lay teacher and speaker at the teenage church school of Union Methodist Church.

Mr. President, Percy Williams retired from the Maryland State Department of Education on June 1. His many friends have reserved the evening of September 16 to honor him for his long and distinguished record of accomplishments, and I ask my colleagues to join my fellow Marylanders and I in saluting this great educator.

LAUNCHING THE COLUMBIAN DECADE—ADDRESS BY SENATOR MATHIAS

● Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, recently, our colleague, Senator MATHIAS, was asked to address the biennial conference of the Italian American Foundation International Relations Workshop regarding the upcoming 500th anniversary of the Christopher Columbus' discovery of America. "Launching the Columbian Decade" is a wonderful historical perspective of why the deeds and accomplishments of Columbus deserve to be retold and honored.

Mr. President, I ask that the speech of the senior Senator from Maryland be printed in the RECORD.

The speech follows:

LAUNCHING THE COLUMBIAN DECADE

(By Senator CHARLES MCC. MATHIAS, Jr.)

It is a great honor to participate in the 1982 Biennial Conference of the National Italian American Foundation and to help you launch the Columbian Decade.

When Ben Palumbo asked me to open this international relations workshop, he graciously offered to let me pick my own subject. I suspect Ben had in mind something that dealt with U.S. foreign policy, so he is not to blame that, instead, I want to talk about "Launching the Columbian Decade."

Actually, my subject is not as far afield as it may appear to be. In fact, when you consider the tremendous challenges that confront the United States right now and those that lie ahead, it seems particularly appropriate to begin this workshop by reflecting a little on Christopher Columbus' achievements.

Today, we live in one of the great transitional periods of human history, just as Columbus did. Very little is certain in our world. But we can be perfectly certain of one thing: If the United States is to grasp the miraculous future that is within its reach, this Nation must summon up the same kind of faith and courage and vision that sustained Christopher Columbus on his extraordinary voyages of discovery.

Columbus' voyages of discovery, taken as a whole, may very well be the greatest event in the history of the secular world. Let your mind search back through the centuries of human endeavor to find another single deed that has had such far-reaching historical significance. What momentous battle or invention can compare with the discovery of a New World?

Columbus paved the way for the greatest migration of peoples this world has ever known. He opened the door on a new ERA which allowed for the steady march of civil and religious liberty.

It does not obscure his achievement that other Europeans may have reached our shores years or even centuries earlier than Columbus, for it was Columbus alone who broke the rigid barriers of ignorance and fear to allow the Old World to meet the New. Columbus not only led the way to new places, he opened the mind to new vistas, to new hopes, to new challenges.

Columbus died without realizing the full significance of his voyages, but he did at least have a hint of the magnitude of his achievement. The journal he kept of his third voyage, the one on which he first spotted the mainland, contains this entry:

"I believe that this is a very great continent, until today unknown . . . and if this be a continent, it is a marvelous thing, and will be so among all the wise. . ."

These are the words of a prophet. And like the proverbial prophet, who is "without honor in his own country," Columbus died discredited and alone.

It took the wry wit of Baltimore's Ogden Nash to sum up the ironies of Coumbus' career. He wrote:

So Columbus said, Somebody show me the sunset and somebody did and he set sail for it.
And he discovered America and they put him in jail for it,
And the fetters gave him welts,
And they named America after somebody else.

October 12, 1992, will mark the 500th anniversary—the quincentenary—of the day land was sighted by one of the ships sailing on Christopher Columbus' maiden voyage to find a westward passage to the Orient. Instead of the Orient, however, Columbus reached a New World—what he called "the other world." His contemporaries neither appreciated nor acknowledged the enormous contribution Columbus had made to the expansion of European civilization, and to the creation of a new one. But we, who are the ultimate beneficiaries of his vision, courage and travail, must see that the memory of Columbus and his achievement does not suffer the same fate in 1992 as it did in his lifetime.

Although the anniversary is still 10 years away, it is not too soon to begin to plan for the observance of such an unprecedented event—the birthday of the New World. The National Italian American Foundation will undoubtedly play a pivotal role in organizing and preparing to make this the greatest celebration the world has ever known. And you will not be alone. Groups across the Nation are already gearing up to meet the challenge of this celebration.

The Federal Government, too, must do all it can to see that this anniversary is observed appropriately and thoughtfully. To spur that effort, I have introduced legislation in the Senate to establish the Christopher Columbus Quincentenary Jubilee Commission. The Commission would be charged with planning, encouraging, coordinating, and conducting local, national and international observances and activities.

Its 31 members, most of whom would be private citizens, would be responsible for preparing comprehensive programs to commemorate the quincentenary of the voyages Columbus embarked on in 1492. Books, films, lectures, exhibits, ceremonies, and all manner of celebrations would be planned and coordinated by the Commission. Columbus' travels are well documented, and there is much to learn from him about the human spirit and the quest to discover new frontiers. The age of discovery is far from over. The Commission would work in conjunction with State, local, and foreign governments, public agencies, and private organizations to plan the 1992 celebration.

A particularly important aspect of the observance must be to consult and work with our friends and neighbors in other nations of the Western Hemisphere who share with us the Columbian legacy, and whose heritage of culture, scholarship, and creative art can contribute so much to the value and significance of the event. Italy and Spain, too, will surely wish to take a special role in our observance as they plan their own.

A celebration of the dimensions we contemplate dictates that the Federal Government play a role. My bill devises what I think is an appropriate role for Government and I hope you will help me see that it is enacted quickly.

Now, if you wonder why a Marylander of Welsh descent is leading this congressional charge, let me remind you that Baltimore boasts one of the most active, lively and civic-minded Italian-American communities in the entire United States of America. Furthermore, Baltimore is the only city in the country that, in 1792, marked the 300th anniversary of Columbus' landing by erecting a monument in his honor. That monument to Columbus, dating back to the earliest days of the Republic, still stands as a constant reminder to all Marylanders of what we owe to this very great man.

Now, to close on a note that brings us back to the realm of international relations, it is well to remember that essential to Columbus' genius was his ability to absorb the records of the past and give vitality to them in the present. Columbus was propelled and guided by history and he repaid the past by launching the future. The breadth of his knowledge is reflected in what he wrote in 1501:

"Withersoever men have sailed to this day, thither I have also sailed. I have held traffik and converse with the wise and prudent, churchmen and laymen, Latins and Greeks, Jews, and Moors. . . . During this time I have seen and made it my study to see, all writings, cosmography, histories, chronicles, philosophy, and other arts, so that the hand of the Lord plainly opened my understanding to see that it was possible to sail from hence to the Indies, and set on fire my will for the execution thereof."

Clearly, what Columbus undertook and accomplished was no mere accident. He had an indomitable will to achieve the impossible in spite of tremendous opposition and unimaginable odds. His knowledge of the past, and his belief in himself and his mission were enough to change the course of history.

I am confident that we, too, can change the course of history in our time, if we absorb the dreadful lessons of the past and if we determine that in a world haunted by the specter of nuclear war, a passage to a better New World can be discovered.●

EASTON LITTLE LEAGUE ALL STARS

● Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, baseball has often been called the All-American Sport because its energy and team cooperation capture so much of the American spirit. I am proud to note that a group of young people from the Eastern Shore of my own State of Maryland has demonstrated an abundance of that spirit.

The Easton Little League All Stars is more than a ball team—it is a collection of highly talented young people whose athletic skills have brought enormous pride to their families and to their community.

Under the careful direction of their manager, Bill DelBiondo, and his tournament coach, Paul Gawel, these youngsters have grown in strength and maturity, overwhelming all challengers to become one of the eight top teams in the world and earning them contender status in the coveted Little League World Series. Although they ultimately did not win the series, their sportsmanship remains an inspiration to us all.

Mr. President, I ask that the articles from the Baltimore Evening Sun be printed in the RECORD to recognize these outstanding young citizens.

The articles referred to follow:

EASTON KIDS GO FOR THE SERIES

(By Frank Megargee)

EASTON—It just could be the biggest thing to hit this historic town, this self-styled "Colonial Capital of the Eastern Shore," since powdered wigs and silver-buckled shoes went out.

It has everyone all but dancing in the streets. It's the Easton Little League All Stars, whose string of victories has propelled them into that boyhood dreamland—the Little League World Series at Williamsport, Pa.

Just by getting into the series, the boys become one of the top eight teams in the world.

All of which has turned this town of about 7,800 souls, normally relaxed amid antique charms, into a nearly community-wide fan club cheering on a bunch of 11- and 12-year-olds.

"Easton is bursting at the seams with pride," said Mayor George P. Murphy.

The mayor and Police Chief Edward Blessing were due to lead a motorcade of 11 cars packed with fans early today on the long drive to Williamsport, where the Easton team was scheduled to play a Michigan team today if the rain holds off.

"I expect half the town will be going," the mayor said with pardonable hyperbole.

Actually, there may be quite an exodus. Besides the mayor's motorcade, two charter buses departed this morning for the central Pennsylvania town that is the home of Little League baseball.

Some fans left yeaterday. One businessman, Ron J. Wanner, a vice president of a local manufacturing firm, was flying up with family and friends in the company Cessna.

Expected to ride in the mayor's caravan was County Councilman Richmond W. Hill, grandfather of All Star first baseman, Maury Newman, 12. Granddad had a message to read at the game's opening ceremonies from Gov. Harry R. Hughes, praising the players as "most worthy representatives of our state in this international competition."

Those who are left at home can follow the game's play-by-play on Easton and Cambridge radio stations. At the Talbot County Community Center, bleachers will be set up in the big arena and the radio broadcasts will be amplified over the sound system.

Fans are invited to come and "celebrate together," said Pat Kerns, the center's manager.

If the team makes it to the series finals Saturday, Kerns plans to set up a wide-screen television to take advantage of national network coverage.

Win or lose, the 14 Easton All Stars will be feted as champs when they return Sunday. After all, said one fan, "the worst that can happen is that they wind up the fourth best in the U.S. and eighth in the world."

They are competing against teams from Michigan, Florida and Washington state, as well as teams from Europe, Canada, Venezuela and Taiwan.

When their returning bus approaches town on Sunday they will be met by a police car and escorted to a town park for a brief tribute. "They'll be anxious to get home and we won't keep them long," said Chief Blessing. "Just long enough to show our appreciation."

Later, a bigger celebration will be held, probably Sept. 18, the chief said. There will be a parade and awards, and there is even talk of inviting Little League teams from throughout the state to march in their uniforms.

Lou E. Satchell, an accountant and father of Steve, 12, a left fielder on the All Stars, recalled that he also played left field on the Easton All Stars in the 1956-57 season and almost reached the regional competition.

"But the World Series is the ultimate goal of every little boy who ever played Little League," he said. "It's something they'll remember all their lives."

At Swann's Tire Center here yesterday, where several fans were buying charter bus tickets, two of the mothers talked about sportsmanship.

"The boys show a degree of maturity unusual for youngsters of that age," said Wadella Chase, a high school teacher whose son, Kurt, is a pitcher.

"They're confident, but not cockey," she added. "And they've set fine examples of good sportsmanship wherever they've gone."

Nina Niskey, also a teacher and the mother of Brian, another toprated pitcher, had a good word for the example set by the coaches and managers. "Even when the boys make a mistake," she said, "they always give them a pat on the back that raises up their heads again."

Norman J. Moore, superintendent of schools, is confident the youngsters will be able to handle all the media attention and the pressure of being instant celebrities. "I know those kids from school, and I've watched the games here. I'm sure they'll settle back in their normal pattern after it's over. Meantime, they deserve all the credit they're getting."

"Sure they're under pressure, but once the game is over they become little boys again," said Margie H. Callahan, president of the Easton Little League.

Callahan said the team was getting considerable financial support from the community. So far, she said, business and individuals have donated about $3,000 to help defray travel and other expenses. Parents were paying their own way.

Two businessmen, Donald J. Swann and W. Wayne Lewis, canvassed local companies for donations for the charter buses so that fans could ride up and back at reduced rates.

Help also came from the Star Democrat, the local newspaper, which was getting out a special supplement saluting the players. Ten percent of the proceeds from that will go to the team.

As might be expected in historic Easton, even the Talbot County Historical Society got into the act by donating miniature Talbot County flags for fans to wave during the games.

"What we are seeing here," explained a spokesman for the society, "is a bit of Talbot history in the making."

A LIFETIME MEMORY IN THE MAKING

(By Dan Rodricks)

WILLIAMSPORT, PA.—Fourteen boys from Maryland's Eastern Shore, bubble gum brothers in baseball since a July victory over Homerun Baker, were scheduled to take a giant step into a dream today. They are playing some kids from up in Michigan and, win or lose, they'll leave this Boys Town of Baseball with sugar plum memories of their 12th summer.

They've been traveling together since early July and winning baseball games along the way. From that first 23-0 parade past Homerun Baker of Oxford, to their regional championship in New York last weekend, to this—the Little League World Series—the boys from Easton have been casting a sterling memory for themselves.

Theirs is one of the eight best Little League teams between Talbot County and Chia-Yi-Hsien, Taiwan. And this, in the mind of every 12-year-old who lived close enough to town to learn the game, is a very big deal.

This is a dream, the kind that doesn't sink in right away, but comes back to comfort the memory way down the line, long after pot bellies and mortgage payments.

But let us cut the philosophy.

Right now, there is this game against Wyoming, Mich. (Pop., 58,000). The first pitch was scheduled for 2 p.m., and only farmers around here are hoping the weather forecast is accurate. Showers could put the game off a day, but no matter. The boys can handle it, it seems, in any climate. They're as cool as the seeds in an Eastern Shore cantaloupe.

Their manager, Bill DelBiondo, says he's never seen such a relaxed, mature and quietly determined group of seventh-graders. No bragging, he says. No swelled heads. When these boys came up for Little League as 9-year-olds, DelBiondo and other sideline adults knew there was something special here.

"It was a cold March day when we had tryouts," DelBiondo recalled yesterday. "And they had snow jackets on. They were special, you could tell right away. They were special athletes. They could throw the ball. They could hit. They could run. They could field. They had no fear of the ball. They were all starters as 9-year olds."

This is the generation that knows DiMaggio as Mr. Coffee. They were born in 1969 or 1970, good years for Bay oysters and Easton baseball players. DelBiondo, who works for Black & Decker, is a happy man these days; he seems privileged to have inherited so much talent from a town of 7,800.

Best of all, he likes being part of the memories. The boys are having a ball. Last night, his left fielder, Tyrone Camper, was chumming it up with a couple of kids from Taiwan.

Taiwan is an occupying force here, having won the World Series each of the last five years and 10 of the last 13. They got off to a fabulous start yesterday, too, beating curly-haired Venezuelans from Maracaibo, 8-2.

Tyrone was asked how he communicates with the Taiwanese players, who are from the small town of Pu-Tzu. "Like when they say something," he explained, "I say the same thing back at them and they laugh." Simple enough. American-Taiwan relations among big people should be so good.

The kids from Easton have had a marvelous summer. No school. Baseball.

There were eight teams of 14 boys in the Easton Little League back in the spring. At the end of the season, DelBiondo and his tournament coach, Paul Gawel, selected an all-star team. The journey to the World Series started with that win over Homerun Baker. Any gang to kids that beats a team called Homerun Baker deserves champagne-flavored bubblegum.

There were fourteen more games, and the Easton gang won them all—beating Federalsburg, Greensboro, East Salisbury, Cambridge, Harundale, St. Mary's, Hagerstown, Morristown, N.J., Seaford, Del., and, finally, Millis, Mass. The last victory was the Eastern Regional Championship.

The numbers on the Easton entry show that their top pitchers, Kurt Chase (8-0) and Brian Niskey (6-0), are also the top hitters, with Chase batting .658 in tournament action and Niskey batting .525. Kelly Hawkins, the lead-off hitter and right fielder, bats .419. Niskey hit six of the team's 18 tournament home runs. Easton averaged nine runs a game to their opponents two. They hit for extra bases 40 percent of the time. Chase pitched a no-hitter in the regional championship.

These are numbers of fleeting importance, but they tell part of a summer story. The other part is that in America, baseball players come from towns like Easton; they are the sons of farmers and teachers and choir directors, accountants and doctors and truck drivers. DelBiondo's son, Mike, is the catcher. Matt Saulsbury plays second, Maury Newman is first baseman, Doug Shaw plays third. Steve Satchell, Ray Anderson and Tyrone Camper; David Derr plays the infield.

They come out of back yards and fields of dry summer grass. Tyrone used to play in a field behind a Methodist church in a place he called "the alley." He played there with his friends, his brother and father. Some of the other boys followed their brothers into Little League.

And the talent here is at times dazzling. A 12-year-old pitcher throws a ball 70 miles an hour. Shortstops scoot across second base, across the infield, making plays to first. Catchers hop and stop bad pitches. Outfielders make long, strong throws; they gaze up at fly balls, gauge them, get under them, clamp them in their gloves. The glove of a pitcher snaps back as he casually takes a return from his catcher. A third baseman attacks a bunt, barehanding it from the grass.

They have learned the game and, in their 12th summer, the game has given them an eternal dream which begets a sugar plum memory, which is all any Little Leaguer should hope for.●

LITERACY VOLUNTEERS OF AMERICA

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, Literacy Volunteers of America celebrates its 20th birthday in 1982 with 2,300 tutors and students currently working in 26 States and two Canadian Provinces.

In 1962 Ruth Colvin discovered a need for a literacy program in her community of Syracuse, N.Y. As the literacy program developed, new teaching methods, tutor training and materials were designed and published in close cooperation with educator professionals.

In 1967, the State of New York approved Literacy Volunteers as a nonprofit organization. By 1972 Literacy Volunteers had become Literacy Volunteers of America with the stated purpose "to foster literacy in the United States" (and Canada).

Today the national headquarters of LVA remains in Syracuse. A volunteer national board of directors, representing diverse Literacy Volunteer units and occupations, now works in close cooperation with the State organizations and individual units throughout the United States. Recognition and support for training, development, and programs have come from corporations, foundations, individuals, and the Office of Education. As an example, the State of New York assisted in the preparation of Read On, an instructional series, which like all other Literacy Volunteers of America publications are shared with other literacy organizations, schools, and individuals.

In 1974 Literacy Volunteers of America expanded to meet the needs of the foreign born. The "English as a Second Language" course materials were written. As with all basic reading programs, the ESL was and continues to be a 1-to-1, teach-tutor method with trained Literacy Volunteers supplying their expertise at no cost to the student. Literacy Volunteers devote themselves to the teaching of the 23,000 Americans who are functional illiterates.

Only last week in the Washington Post, a news story indicated that four Cambodian children drowned in Florida because they could not interpret the danger signs.

I applaud Literacy Volunteers of America in their efforts to eradicate illiteracy in New York State and throughout the country.

I salute in particular the 40 units in the New York State organization, the extensive New York City program and the pioneering spirit of Ruth Colvin of Syracuse on the 20th birthday of Literacy Volunteers of America.

I join with them and the national organization in their drive to eliminate illiteracy in the State of New York and throughout the Nation.●

STATUS REPORT ON THE BUDGET FOR FISCAL YEAR 1982

● Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I hereby submit to the Senate a status report on the budget for fiscal year 1982 pursuant to section 311 of the Congressional Budget Act. This report reflects completed action on the Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act (H.R. 4961, Public Law 97-248), the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act (H.R. 6955, Public Law 97-253), and the 1982 Supplemental Appropriation Act (H.R. 6863, Public Law 97-257).

REPORT TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE U.S. SENATE FROM THE COMMITTEE ON THE BUDGET

REFLECTING COMPLETED ACTION AS OF SEPTEMBER 10, 1982

[In millions of dollars]

	Budget authority	Outlays	Revenues
Second budget resolution level	777,672	734,100	628,400
Current level	769,462	733,004	628,600
Amount remaining	8,210	1,096	200

BUDGET AUTHORITY

Any measure providing budget or entitlement authority which is not included in the current level estimate and which exceeds $8,210 million for fiscal year 1982, if adopted and enacted, would cause the appropriate level of budget authority for that year as set forth in S. Con. Res. 92 to be exceeded.

OUTLAYS

Any measure providing budget or entitlement authority which is not included in the current level estimate and which would result in outlays exceeding $1,096 million for fiscal year 1982, if adopted and enacted, would cause the appropriate level of outlays for that year as set forth in S. Con. Res. 92 to be exceeded.

REVENUES

Any measure that would result in revenue loss exceeding $200 million for fiscal year 1982, if adopted and enacted, would cause revenues to be less than the appropriate level for that year as set forth in S. Con. Res. 92.●

JUSTICE ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1982

● Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, today in the Judiciary Committee we favorably reported the Justice Assistance Act of 1982. This is a bill that I have worked on with Senator SPECTER, the original sponsor of the bill, to move through the Judiciary subcommittee and full committee in hopes that this vitally needed program can be considered by the full Senate this Congress.

I would at this point like to commend Senator SPECTER who has worked very hard on developing this proposal that will help State and local law enforcement. As the ranking member of the Judiciary Committee, I can honestly say that politics have been put aside by Senator SPECTER and myself in a truly bipartisan effort to move this legislation through the Senate.

The Justice Assistance Act of 1982 has been developed with the fullest intention that law enforcement and the operation of criminal justice systems are primarily State and local responsibilities. Ninety-four percent of all violent crime occurs within the local or State criminal law jurisdiction, and the Federal Government should avoid possible infringement on the State and local law enforcement responsibilities. Sheer economic limitations preclude the Federal Government from offering assistance funds that would be used to subsidize local or State criminal justice programs.

Too often in the past, under the old LEAA program, assistance money was used to purchase equipment or pay salaries. Also, the former program resembled a scattershot approach with few dollars being spread so thin that achievement of success was difficult to measure.

Instead, this bill would take into account the lessons learned from the old LEAA program. Using a modest annual investment of $125 million, this program would enable State and local governments to make criminal justice improvements by implementing effective program approaches in criminal justice operations.

PROGRAMS OF PROVEN EFFECTIVENESS

One of the features of this bill, similar to a bill I introduced last June, would be funding programs of proven effectiveness such as: Career criminal prosecution; integrated criminal apprehension program (ICAP); "sting"; treatment alternatives to street crime (TASC); victim-witness assistance; arson prevention and control; prosecutor's management information system (Promis); violent juvenile offenders program (New Pride); and comprehensive crime prevention, et cetera.

We further intend that this program link research and program operations by having the National Institute of Justice be responsible for testing, evaluating, and recommending adjustments in the types of programs to be funded. This will be done with the practitioner's needs in mind. This type of evaluation will be geared to the realities of the day-to-day operations and political constraints that make up the real world of police officers and prosecutors. These reports are to be useful documents, not scientific manuscripts, which often collect dust on bookshelves. It is our intent that this program be streamlined administratively and avoid a return to previous LEAA mistakes, when limited Federal dollars were often spent in an ineffective manner.

TRAINING AND TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE

One provision of this bill calls for the Federal Government to provide grants up to 100 percent of the cost to State and local jurisdiction that request specific training or technical assistance. The intent is to provide the requesting jurisdictions with written material, training workshops, direct on-site technical assistance, so that new concepts and programs of proven effectiveness can be started. It will be the responsibility of the requesting jurisdiction to cover the operating and day-to-day costs of the program.

Training and technical assistance will also be available for management problems or specific concerns that may not necessarily entail the development of one of the concepts listed above.

Another program in the bill will be the emergency assistance funding program. When there occurs a crime problem of such a serious or epidemic proportion such as the Atlanta child murders or the drug-related violence in south Florida, the prompt support by the Federal Government to local and State agencies should be available.

We have carefully written this language to insure that the Federal Government does not needlessly intervene in matters of State and local concern. This program will only be implemented for crime emergencies or extraordinary circumstances and when State and local resources are not geared to expeditiously resolve the problem. In all situations in which these funds are used, primary responsibility for responding to the situation rests with the local or State jurisdiction. These funds are to be used to help coordinate and expediate resolution of the crime problem, following the request for assistance by the local jurisdiction.

This proposal represents a very modest authorization of $125 million a year. It is a far cry from $1 billion a year investment that was going into Federal criminal justice assistance only a few years ago. It is important that assistance funds be made available to States and cities, but in a streamlined and efficient manner. This bill is intended to do just that.

Mr. President, let me urge the Senate leadership to bring this bill before the full Senate as soon as possible. There has been a great deal of rhetoric on the crime issue that has not been followed up by action. I am tired of statements about the administration's commitment to fight crime and then having to fight budget cuts to Federal law enforcement agencies and assistance to State and local police that OMB proposes each year. The administration has yet to support any criminal justice assistance program or offer an alternative to this or the House-passed version. On the House side, Congressman HUGHES' criminal justice assistance bill was overwhelmingly passed out of the House in February by a vote of 289 to 73. It is very possible that when the Specter/ Biden assistance bill comes to the Senate floor and is passed, a conference on the House version could be worked out in short order.

It is clear that those directly involved working in our local and State criminal justice agencies recognize that the Federal Government can play a role in assisting State and local law enforcement. The President's own Task Force on Violent Crime recommended in August 1981 that funds be available for implementing demonstration programs of proven effectiveness that require a reasonable match of State and local funds. I believe that is precisely what this bill calls for.

Finally, Mr. President, this summer Senator THURMOND and I sent out over 12,000 questionnaires to criminal justice professionals across the country asking for their opinions on pending crime legislation. The response to the questionnaire has been extraordinary, with over 4,000 filled out questionnaires returned so far. Question 3 of the questionnaire reads as follows:

Federal assistance to State and local criminal justice agencies is necessary if we are to find new successful crime fighting and crime prevention techniques?

Eighty-eight percent responded favorably to this question. This further documents that those patrolling our city streets, prosecuting arrested defendents, and working in our jails and prisons realize that technical assistance and training is a means to bettering our criminal justice system.

I ask my colleagues to join with Senator SPECTER and myself in cosponsoring this bill and seeing that it is considered for final passage as soon as possible.●

HUMAN RIGHTS IN THE PHILIPPINES

● Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, on September 15, President Ferdinand Marcos of the Philippines will arrive in the United States for a 6 day state visit. President Reagan will receive him at a time when human rights are being seriously violated in the Philippines. Reports of persecution, arbitrary detention, torture and disppearances in that country are all too familiar—including the crackdown of security forces presently underway in order to quell dissent at home while President Marcos is in the United States.

My friends and colleagues, Senators CRANSTON, MOYNIHAN, PELL, and TSONGAS joined me yesterday in writing to President Reagan to express their concern that President Marcos' stay here could be misinterpreted as a sign that the United States condones the violation of human rights in the Philippines. We called on the President to reverse the impression of U.S. indifference to repression in the Philippines created by last year's visits to Manila by Vice President Bush and then Secretary of State Haig, and urged the administration to take advantage of the Marcos visit to demonstrate support for the people of the Philippines in their struggle for true democracy and human rights.

In this connection, I commend to my colleagues the important article by A. Whitney Ellsworth which appeared in the September 13 New York Times. Mr. Ellsworth, who led an official delegation from Amnesty International to the Philippines in November 1981, suggests that the administration at least ask President Marcos why investigations of human rights violations by his security forces so often come to naught.

Mr. President, I ask that the full text or our letter to President Reagan be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks, together with articles by Whitney Ellsworth in the New York Times and by William Branigin in the Washington Post.

The material follows:

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, D.C., September 13, 1982.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House
Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: We are concerned that your decision to welcome President Marcos of the Philippines for a state visit to the United States will be misinterpreted as a sign that your Administration condones the repression of the Marcos Government in the Philippines and its continuing violations of basic human rights.

We share the warm feelings of friendship by the overwhelming majority of Americans for the Filipino people. Americans and Filipinos fought side-by-side with great courage in World War II, and our shared dedication to freedom and human rights led to full independence and democracy for the Philippines after the war.

Unfortunately, there is convincing evidence, confirmed by the Department of State, that the government of President Marcos has been far from faithful to these ideals. Martial law, imposed ten years ago this month, endured for nearly a decade, only to be replaced in January 1981 with equally repressive national security measures. Throughout this period, the Marcos Government has engaged in persistent persecution of the press, labor, church, students and business leaders. There have been numerous reports of arbitrary detention, torture and disappearances; current instances of these cruel practices are described this week in the U.S. press.

The visit of President Marcos is an opportunity for you and your Administration to demonstrate America's support for the brave citizens of the Philippines in their struggle for true democracy and against the serious violations of human rights by the Marcos Government. We believe that this message is an essential reflection of the fundamental values of our nation—and is necessary to neutralize the unfortunate impression of indifference to repression created by the visits to Manila last year by Vice President Bush and Secretary of State Haig.

We strongly agree that an important element of our national security is the stability of nations that are our allies. But our allies are ultimately the peoples in those countries. It is their pleas we must hear and their rights we must heed when their government becomes their oppressor instead of their protector. The security of the United States does not require our support for the repression of the Filipino people.

We hope, therefore, that you will make the Marcos visit an occasion to enhance the cause of human rights in the Philippines. This visit can be an important signal to all peoples who look to the United States for leadership and hope, but who all too often see only the news reports of American officials embracing and toasting their oppressors.

Sincerely,

CLAIBORNE PELL.
ALAN CRANSTON.
EDWARD M. KENNEDY.
PAUL E. TSONGAS.
DANIEL PATRICK MOYNIHAN.

ABUSING FILIPINOS' RIGHTS

(By A. Whitney Ellsworth)

After President Ferdinand E. Marcos arrives in Washington on Wednesday for a state visit, perhaps our Government could stretch the bounds of hospitality and ask him why investigations of human rights violations by Filipino security forces so often come to naught.

There are repeated reports of "disappearances" of political opponents and suspected subversives, of torture and killings. A few investigations of the military for such abuses have led to dismissal, demotion and transfer, but most have not even gone that far despite clear Government policy against such abuses and laws designed to prevent them. Also, there have been reports of massacres, allegedly by paramilitary units, but investigations into them fizzle out.

One massacre occurred a year ago, Sept. 15, 1981, In early morning, 18 armed men entered the village of Sagod, near Las Navas, northern Samar. They rousted inhabitants from their houses and separated them into two groups: men and older children "who could write" in one line, women and younger children in another. Two armed men led the women and younger children across a river. They heard gunfire from the village. The other armed men soon joined the guards. All resumed their march away from the village. While crossing a ditch, three women and two children escaped. The line of march was halted in a forest.

Although some villagers recognized three armed men and their guides as having come from a nearby lumber company, the leader said he was a member of the New People's Army, the Communist Party's armed wing. He asked if the women knew where another New People's Army commander could be found and accused them of supporting the army. The women denied this but to no avail. The men opened fire, killing almost all the women and children. The few surviving children later found carnage in the village: The men and older children had been gunned down and left in piles. Then they discovered one woman who had survived; she and some children had fled in canoes up river to the next settlement. Overall, 45 men, women and children were murdered.

Hours later, a unit of the 14th Infantry Battalion arrived and burned some of the houses after placing bodies in them. They sealed off the village, declaring it a "no man's land."

The massacre was not reported in the Manila press until nine days later. The next day, Defense Minister Juan Ponce Enrile called for a thorough investigation. The official results have never been made fully public, but the general in charge of the investigation told a provincial council that he had determined that the New People's Army had been responsible and that the matter was closed.

Survivors of Sag-od told human rights groups that they had recognized some of the men as members of the lumber companys security force. On Sept. 29, a news story in Bulletin Today by a reporter in Samar mentioned the allegation about the security force, reported its reputation for viciousness and identified the commander as a lieutenant colonel. The newspaper was taken to the house of Lieut. Col. Carlos Lademora in San Francisco, eastern Mindanao. Colonel Lademora is the leader of a paramilitary group based in Mindanao known as the Lost Command. Many of its 250 members are convicted military and civilian criminals and deserters, although about 15 officers and men, including the lieutenant colonel, are members of the Philppines Constabulary, the largest military service charged with internal security. The Government does not admit that the Lost Command is part of the armed forces, but Colonel Lademora claims that his group is a special unit of the armed forces engaged in counter-insurgency operations.

The Lost Command reportedly runs protection rackets and serves as security guards for agricultural corporations, and numerous complaints about their activities, particularly killings attributed to them, have been made to Mr. Marcos by provincial authorities and church officials but to no avail.

When Colonel Lademora saw the news story, he called a family meeting, put his son in charge and instructed him to assassinate various political leaders in the province if he did not return in seven days, and left for Manila the next day. After two days there, he reportedly disguised himself and went to Samar. When he return to San Francisco, he contacted friends to establish an alibi for himself about his presence in Mindanao on Sept. 15. The Lost Command unit in Samar was ordered to return to Mindanao by the military authorities.

Even if the Lost Command has avoided responsibility for Sag-od, Mr. Marcos should be asked why such a paramilitary group is able to operate with impunity when it could be so easily found and forced to disband. A year after Sag-od is a good time to ask these questions.

MARCOS' VISIT HERE AIMS AT BASES PACT, IMPROVED IMAGE

(By William Branigin)

MANILA, Sept. 12—Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos goes to Washington this week for his first U.S. state visit in 16 years in the wake of a crackdown that has weakened his domestic opponents but given more ammunition to his critics abroad.

While he has played down the visit as little more than a social call on President Reagan, it is clear that Marcos attaches much more importance to it as a major milestone of his 17 years in power. Preparations for the visit have been frenetic and advance teams have been working on it in the United States for four months.

The prime mover behind the visit is the new Philippine ambassador to Washington, Benjamin Romualdez, who is also the president's brother-in-law and governor of a southern province.

When Marcos arrives in Washington for talks Thursday with Reagan, officials here say, his entourage will include at least a dozen Cabinet ministers and several hundred other persons serving in some capacity, private, or official.

Among the subjects Marcos plans to discuss with Reagan are the role of the United States in the Pacific region's security, new agreements governing two major American military bases here and economic and trade matters. But at least as important as these to Marcos will be the image he wants to project back home as leader of a former American colony meeting the American president in Washington on equal terms.

"It's important for him to show that he's a close ally of the United States, but that he's going there as an equal, not like in the past," a Western diplomat said. He recalled Marcos' last state visit to the United States in 1966, when, nervous and inexperienced in his first year in office, he went more or less hat in hand "looking for money and support" from a somewhat patronizing then-president Johnson.

Marcos had been in the United States since then but only on private and ceremonial visits.

In this perspective, the visit goes to the core of the legacy Marcos is trying to build for himself, contributing to the aura of a leadership that has already taken on some of the characteristics of a monarchy.

But while Marcos will be meeting a president considered here to be the best friend he has ever had in the White House, the visit also is fraught with dangers.

Marcos' supporters worry that opponents here and in the United States will embarrass and discredit him with massive demonstrations.

Especially irksome were plans by opposition labor leaders to stage strikes and protests this month, while the Philippine economy is suffering from sharp drops in world commodity prices affecting its leading exports.

In response, Marcos last month ordered the arrests of three leftist labor leaders and scores of antigovernment agitators. They were accused of involvement in a communist plot to carry out strikes, bombings, assassinations and the armed overthrow of the government by 1983.

In a news conference last Monday, Marcos said investigators had found handwritten evidence of such plans and had captured hundreds of firearms and explosives. He said the government's "preemptive action" had thwarted the alleged plot. Nevertheless, security forces have been alerted to guard against disturbances, especially while the president is away on the trip, which is expected to last 10 days.

Saturday, a bomb exploded in front of an overseas employment agency on a busy downtown street, killing three persons and injuring more than 20, police said. But the motive was not immediately clear.

According to Western diplomats and other independent observers, the crackdown so far generally seems to have worked. In addition to the arrests of the labor leaders and antigovernment agitators—42 are now detained and 26 others are being sought—Marcos at the same time created a 1,000-strong force of "secret marshals" empowered to kill suspected common criminals. At least 47 suspects were killed in two weeks last month before the marshals' powers were restricted.

In some ways the tough policies and charges of a plot against the government reminded Filipinos of the days before Marcos declared martial law in 1972, a year ahead of his scheduled departure from office at the end of his second presidential term. Marcos ruled under martial law until January 1981, when he lifted it and secured constitutional changes allowing him to run for a new, six-year term. He won reelection handily in June 1981 in a contest boycotted by most opposition groups.

"Now Marcos is giving a signal to people in the Philippines that he is still in control," a Western diplomat said. Marcos also could be signaling Washington that there is a potential threat to him, he added.

A Marcos aide agreed that the crackdown "served as a reminder to everyone concerned of who is in charge, whether he [Marcos] is in the country or abroad."

Diplomats and other observers said the action appeared to have taken the wind out of an increasingly militant part of the labor movement and had discouraged moderate opponents, who scheduled but then called off several protests.

"I think the real purpose of Mr. Marcos was just to generate a climate of fear so that in his absence people would be too scared to do anything," said former senator Salvador Laurel, the head of a moderate opposition grouping. However, he noted that Marcos opponents among the estimated 750,000 Filipinos living in the United States were using the crackdown as a rallying cry for demonstrations against the state visit.

Laurel said a major test for the moderate opposition would come Tuesday, when a "massive demonstration" is planned in front of the Manila cathedral. He said organizers hope to attract 25,000 to 50,000 people to protest the state visit. The only demonstration against the trip so far has been the gathering of about 70 students in front of the U.S. Embassy here last week.

Besides the domestic opposition, Philippine authorities also are concerned about the activities of opponents in the United States led by former senator Benigno Aquino, who was jailed under martial law for eight years before Marcos freed him to undergo heart treatment in Texas. Aquino later took up a fellowship at Harvard.

Armed forces Chief of Staff Fabian Ver accused Aquino Friday of collaborating with Philippine "criminals" in organizing anti-Marcos demonstrations.

Laurel said that besides their aim to end U.S. support for the Marcos government, opponents here also opposed the state visit because "it's not worth all that expense at a time when we're broke." He claimed it would cost "$20 million at least." Government officials dismissed criticism of the visit's cost, which they refused to estimate.

A Western diplomat said, however, "Whatever the trip costs, they'll get it back in compensation for the bases."

He was referring to what is expected to be a main subject for discussion during the visit: the review of a 1979 agreement on the use of huge American naval and air bases here until 1991.

The talks are not expected to go into great detail, but Marcos has indicated that he wants agreement soon on a date to begin "renegotiating" the accord before its five-year review in 1984. Officials here have said they would like to start the talks by January 1983.

The Philippine side also is expected to raise the issue of U.S. compensation for use of the bases. The current arrangement provides for a $500 million U.S. aid package during the five years, a figure that Philippine authorities consider far too low. No revised figure has been proposed officially, but the numbers mentioned informally have ranged as high as $2 billion, informed sources said.

The higher "rent"—as the Filipinos prefer to call the compensation—undoubtedly would bolster the economy, which is sagging under a $16 billion foreign debt and low prices for the principal exports of coconut, oil, copper, sugar and lumber.

The poor economic conditions in depressed rural areas have fueled the slow but steady growth of the communist New People's Army, which has been conducting an insurgency against the Marcos government.

While the bases agreement is considered the most important issue in Philippines-American relations, Marcos has indicated that he is most interested in assessing during his U.S. trip how the United States envisions its future role in Asia and its commitment to the security of the Philippines.●

MEXICAN TIME BOMB

● Mr. EAST. Mr. President, in a column carried in the Colorado Springs, Colo., Gazette Telegraph on September 5, 1982, Prof. Jeffrey Hart warns that the Mexican economic crisis poses a long-term threat to the very existence of the United States. I ask that this cautionary article be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

SITUATION IN MEXICO SERIOUS THREAT TO UNITED STATES

(By Jeffrey Hart)

Mexico, unable to come up with either interest payments or principal on its massive $22 billion debt, nearly went down the drain taking major banks with it. That ought to concentrate the mind.

From Poland to Tanzania, Third World and communist nations have accumulated colossal debts which have little or no chance of being repaid and which have the potential for disaster in the financial structure of the advanced nations.

The Mexican financial disaster indicates a long-term threat to the very existence of the United States as a nation.

We hear a great deal these days about an atomic holocaust, with the United States and the Soviet Union exchanging thousands of the big bombs, and Jonathan Schell in "The Fate of the Earth" has even written a spine-tingling best seller about it.

But there is a much more likely scenario for disaster.

A communist regime exists, of course, in Cuba. Marxists are in control in Nicaragua, and both El Salvador and Guatemala are battling communist insurgencies. Consider the situation if both countries, in fact, fall to the guerrillas.

The next country northward of Guatemala is Mexico.

Mexico's population growth is out of control and in consequence the country has both widespread poverty and heavy unemployment. Despite its revolutionary rhetoric, the Mexican government consists of an utterly corrupt and politically rickety one-party system. The current lame-duck president, Lopez Portillo, has outraged even his political colleagues by the size of the bundle he is taking with him as he leaves office.

Mexico would certainly be ripe for de-stabilization. With communists in control of Guatemala on its southern border, and a communist bastion off its shores in Cuba, Mexico would be an easy target for penetration and a mounting insurgency based in the mountains and the wretched barrios.

Moreover, Mexico's petroleum resources are concentrated in the southern portion of the country, where they would be strategically vulnerable from Guatemala.

Let us indulge in a bit of long-range speculation, despite the fact that it may initially seem far-fetched.

Suppose the de-stabilization of Mexico succeeds and communist guerrillas seize power, installing a Mexican Castro in the presidential palace. We then confront the fact of a communist state on our southern border, a border which we have shown little capacity to seal. The large Hispanic population in the American Sunbelt would be ripe for infiltration, and might well develop its own Marxist component. Demands that portions of the American Southwest and West be returned to Mexico might meet with widespread sympathy.

Terrorists infiltrated from Mexico and Cuba would conduct attacks throughout the Sunbelt. Guerrilla attacks would take place in Los Angeles, San Diego and El Paso. Riots would break out in Miami. With economic breakdown threatening in the United States, the federal government declares martial law, and with the United States crippled by its domestic problems the international situation deteriorates.

Communist China seizes Taiwan and opens negotiations with Japan on economic and defense matters. Castro seizes the Panama Canal. The Soviets turn off the Euro-Siberian gas pipeline, and, at an emergency energy summit conference in Moscow, demands that Germany leave NATO.

It could happen here.

In fact, something very much like it is implicit in the world view of those in this country and Europe who support, for example, the Salvadoran communist insurgents.

The socialization of the world requires that America be defeated, and the most lethal threat to America's survival comes not from Soviet missiles but from the deterioriating economic and political situations south of the Rio Grande.●

UNANIMOUS CONSENT AGREEMENT REGARDING CLOTURE VOTE ON THURSDAY

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that notwithstanding the provision of rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, the roll-call vote occur on the cloture motion on the Helms amendment No. 2038 (to the Helms modified amendment No. 2031) to the debt limit bill at 2 p.m. on Thursday, September 16, and that the automatic quorum under rule XXII be waived.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, the net effect of that is to say that if cloture is not invoked tomorrow at 5 p.m. on the Helms amendment, there will be another vote at 2 p.m. on Thursday to invoke cloture on the Helms amendment.

REMOVAL OF INJUNCTION OF SECRECY—TAX CONVENTION WITH AUSTRALIA, TREATY DOCUMENT NO. 97-28

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the injunction of secrecy be removed from the Tax Convention with Australia signed at Sydney on August 6, 1982 (Treaty Document No. 97-28), transmitted to the Senate today by the President of the United States; and ask that the treaty be considered as having been read the first time; that it be referred, with accompanying papers, to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed; and that the President's message be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The message of the President is as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

I transmit herewith, for Senate advice and consent to ratification, the Convention between the Government of the United States of America and the Government of Australia for the Avoidance of Double Taxation and the Prevention of Fiscal Evasion with Respect to Taxes on Income signed at Sydney on August 6, 1982. I also transmit the report of the Department of State on the Convention.

The Convention, based on the OECD and draft United States model income tax conventions, takes into account changes in the income tax laws and tax treaty policies of the two countries. It provides limits on the tax at source with respect to taxes on investment income and provides rules for the taxation of capital gains, business profits, personal service income and other income. It also specifies the method used to avoid double taxation and provides for administratives cooperation between the tax officials of the two countries to avoid double taxation and prevent fiscal evasion.

I recommend that the Senate give early and favorable consideration to the Convention and give advice and consent to its ratification.

RONALD REAGAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, September 14, 1982.

ORDERS FOR WEDNESDAY

RECESS UNTIL 11 A.M.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today it stand in recess until the hour of 11 a.m. on tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECOGNITION OF SENATORS CHILES AND BUMPERS

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that after the recognition of the two leaders under the standing order the distinguished Senator from Florida (Mr. CHILES) be recognized under special order for not to exceed 15 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I am advised that the distinguished Senator from Arkansas (Mr. BUMPERS) desires time on special order tomorrow and, therefore, I ask unanimous consent that after the recognition of the distinguished Senator from Florida (Mr. CHILES) that the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. BUMPERS) be recognized in sequence on special order for not to exceed 15 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PERIOD FOR ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I further ask unanimous consent, after the recognition of the two leaders under the standing order, and the recognition of the Senators from Florida and Arkansas on special orders, that there be a brief period for the transaction of routine morning business to extend not past the hour of 12 noon in which Senators may speak for not more than 5 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I have no further business to transact. I inquire of the minority leader if there is anything further he wishes to do during this period for the transaction of routine morning business.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I have nothing. I hope I am not being repetitious in asking the majority leader, as I understand it, the only remaining "must" legislation is the debt limit, the continuing resolution, and appropriations bills.

Mr. BAKER. Yes, Mr. President, those are the "must" items. There are a number of other things we could take up and would take up given the opportunity, but those are the "must" items. If those are disposed of and assuming that we have those available from the House of Representatives—I am referring now to the appropriations bills—I think I would not insist on the other items that may be on the list.

If we cannot finish, particularly if we come back after the election, there are a whole host of measures that must be dealt with. But the minority leader correctly states the situation as I perceive it.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I thank the majority leader.

RECESS UNTIL 11 A.M. TOMMORROW

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I see no Senator seeking recognition. I move, in accordance with the order previously entered, that the Senate stand in recess until the hour of 11 a.m. tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to and, at 4:51 p.m., the Senate recessed until tomorrow, Wednesday, September 15, 1982, at 11 a.m.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate September 14, 1982:

THE JUDICIARY

James C. Fox, of North Carolina, to be U.S. district judge for the eastern district of North Carolina, vice a new position created by Public Law 95-486, approved October 20, 1978.

EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT

Martin S. Feldstein, of Massachusetts, to be a member of the Council of Economic Advisers, vice Murray L. Weidenbaum, resigned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Tuesday, September 14, 1982

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. WRIGHT).

DESIGNATION OF SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the Speaker:

WASHINGTON, D.C.,
September 10, 1982.

I hereby designate the Honorable JIM WRIGHT to act as Speaker pro tempore on Tuesday, September 14, 1982.

THOMAS P. O'NEILL, Jr.,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Rev. James David Ford, D.D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord, God of all creation, as You have created us with Your love and nurtured us in all good ways, we earnestly pray that Your spirit of understanding and reconciliation will mark our lives and be our daily beacon. As You have loved us, so may we express that love in ways that bring joy and blessing and respect one to another. May we experience Your spirit not only in heaven above, but in our associations with those near and dear to us. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

SUNDRY MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House by Mr. Saunders, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Sparrow, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 3835. An act for the relief of Rutherford K. Clarke and his wife Ida T. Clarke.

EXPORT-IMPORT BANK LOAN TO COMMUNIST CHINA A DISGRACE

(Mr. PAUL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PAUL. Mr. Speaker, recently, the administration extended a $68,425,000 credit to the Communist dictator of Red China through the Export-Import Bank.

It is outrageous that the American taxpayers are being forced to subsidize Communist China while domestic programs like social security are in jeopardy. Though the administration claims this loan credit is "in the national interest," commonsense alone tells us that is not true.

Our own economy is in recession. Over 10 million Americans are unemployed. American small businesses are failing in record numbers. The American steel industry is in a depression, and tens of thousands of steelworkers have been laid off. Yet the administration contends that it is in our "national interest" to make a $68 million subsidized loan to help Communist China build steel plants which will then unfairly compete with our own steel industry. This kind of action is an insult to the American people. The Communist Chinese will receive these loans at below-market interest rates and yet our struggling American businesses must pay market rates.

These terrible foreign aid boondoggles should be ended immediately. If we really want to make significant cuts in the Federal budget, here is the ideal place to start.

Communist China is not one of our friends. Their repressive and tyrannical regime is the very opposite of everything America stands for. It is against our best interests, in every way, to use our tax dollars to help prop up Communist dictatorships. This $68 million Export-Import loan guarantee is a tragedy and a disgrace.

SPENDING AND TAXING ADVERSELY AFFECTING ECONOMY STILL

(Mr. WALKER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, in the last 24 hours, there has been a good deal of comment about the fact that consumer spending did as well as was anticipated after taxes were cut. There also has been a lot of talk about the fact that as taxes were dropped, consumers have not seemed to spend the money.

Of course not, Mr. Speaker. At the same time that the tax cuts appeared on the American scene, we were talking about the largest single tax increase in history and naturally the American people were not willing to spend the money when they did not know how much additional tax they would have to pay.

So, in fact, that tax increase has hurt the economy already.

We also have heard some talk recently about the fact that the spending bill that we passed the other day was not going to hurt the economy. The stock market immediately reacted. It fell as a result of that spending increase and that drop was blamed specifically on the fact that Congress was overspending and was increasing the deficit.

So, as we approach the kind of economic buffoonery that is going to be foisted upon this House this week, I think we need to understand that spending and taxing are still adversely affecting the economy, as they have adversely affected the economy in the past.

REDUCTION OF 30-PERCENT WITHHOLDING TAX IN VIRGIN ISLANDS

(Mr. DE LUGO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DE LUGO. Mr. Speaker, today, I introduce a bill which will reduce the 30-percent withholding tax in the Virgin Islands to 10 percent for U.S. citizens and residents of the United States and for corporations organized in the United States, and allowing the Virgin Islands Legislature to reduce the tax further as it sees fit. This legislation was introduced earlier as H.R. 5113 and then as H.R. 5985. The present bill reflects the changes in the previous bills which the administration suggested. This legislation, therefore, has full administration support.

The bill addresses the need in the U.S. Virgin Islands for direct measures to attract new investment. With the numerous trade agreements the United States has entered into, the Virgin Islands is finding it increasingly difficult to compete for offshore business. Several businesses have declined with Virgin Islands government's efforts to get them to locate in the territory, citing the 30-percent withholding tax as their sole impediment. Furthermore, the 30-percent withholding tax has not produced resounding tax benefits for the Virgin Islands treasury. The burden of paying the 30-percent tax on interest has stifled business expansion due to reluctance by mainland banks to lose 30 percent of their interest on loans to Virgin Islands taxes. On the other hand, dividends have not been declared by many businesses who chose to avoid the tax by accumulating earned surplus instead of declaring dividends.

To quote the Virgin Islands Commissioner of Commerce:

With the exception of the Virgin Islands' competitors, no one wins under the existing withholding tax. The losers include Virgin Islands workers and entrepreneurs and the strangely enough Virgin Islands treasury itself.

This bill is important for the people of the Virgin Islands. It provides investment incentive that should lead to a better circulation of capital, more available mortgage money, and potential for funding a much needed housing development, but most importantly, it will provide jobs for our people.

For these reasons, I ask for your support of this bill.

MIGRANT AND SEASONAL AGRICULTURAL WORKER PROTECTION ACT

(Mr. PANETTA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join my colleagues, Mr. MILLER and Mr. ERLENBORN, in introducing the Migrant and Seasonal Agricultural Worker Protection Act. This bill repeals the Farm Labor Contractor Registration Act and puts in its place compromise legislation that is supported by a consensus of the interested organizations, including the Department of Labor, unions, farmers, migrant worker groups and food processors. I commend the diligent and devoted efforts of the members and staff of the Subcommittee on Labor Standards for developing this piece of legislation that eliminates undue redtape and harassment for farmers and other agricultural employers, while at the same time, provides real protection to migrant agricultural workers.

Mr. Speaker, my interest in the issues confronted by this legislation is longstanding. I introduced legislation in this Congress and in the 96th Congress to correct problems existing in the implementation of FLCRA. The bill we are introducing today addresses those same problems and provides a workable solution that I urge my colleagues to support.

The Farm Labor Contractor Registration Act was enacted in 1963 to protect both farmers and farmworkers from abuse by unscrupulous farm labor contractors and crew leaders. The strict requirements of FLCRA were necessary to deal with the potential problems posed by farm labor contractors who generally move with the harvest and serve as independent labor suppliers to more than one farm operation at a time. Since FLCRA's enactment, however, the Department of Labor has misconstrued the terms of the act and has imposed the act's requirements on farmers and agricultural employers who were never intended to be covered by the act. Because farm labor contractors and crew leaders are often transient and difficult to locate, the Department unfortunately began to enforce the stringent terms of the act against fixed site agricultural employers, such as farmers and processors, who were easily located at their farms or plants. These fixed site employers, however, are already held accountable for the treatment of migrant and seasonal workers under the Fair Labor Standards Act, the Wagner-Peyser Act, the Federal Unemployment Tax Act, the Occupational Health and Safety Act, the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide and Rodenticide Act, as well as several State laws. To impose the additional and unjustified burdens under FLCRA is simply unnecessary and unfair.

The legislation we are introducing today is designed to resolve the issue of who is, and who is not, a farm labor contractor under the law. At the same time, the bill guarantees significant rights and protections to migrant and seasonal agricultural workers. The bill imposes on all agricultural employers, whether or not they are required to register as farm labor contractors, certain duties and standards in their treatment of migrant agricultural employees, including requirements to provide adequate housing and transportation.

I believe this legislation provides a viable solution to the problems of the past, and effectively protects the rights and interests of agricultural employers and migrant and seasonal farm employees. Enactment of this bill is much needed by the agricultural community of this country, and I urge adoption of this bill in the form being introduced today.

TRANSFER OF CERTAIN FEDERAL PROPERTY TO CITY OF HOBOKEN, N.J.

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 3620), transferring certain Federal property to the city of Hoboken, N.J., with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 1, lines 4 and 5, strike out "transfer at a price to be negotiated and which may be less than fair market value," and insert:

Transfer for the fair market value as determined by the General Services Administration under the guidelines set forth in this Act, at a price to be negotiated,

Page 3, after line 6, insert:

SEC. 2. In making its determination of fair market value, the General Services Administration shall recognize that the fair market value of the property is determined by the market in which it shall be sold, with the city of Hoboken being the only potential purchaser. The General Services Administration shall make every effort to expedite the sale and transfer of the property to the city of Hoboken, recognizing the hardship which would result in any undue delay in lengthy negotiations. The General Services Administration shall give full consideration to the right of the Federal Government to be compensated for the property while considering the city of Hoboken's ability to pay for the property. Furthermore, the General Services Administration shall give consideration and recognition to whatever funds and costs the Federal Government has invested in the property. The General Services Administration shall also give consideration to the fact that the city of Hoboken has been deprived of tax revenue from the property since its acquisition by the United States, in 1917, but has been required, despite its loss of tax revenue, to provide municipal services to the property.

Page 3, line 7 strike out "SEC. 2." and insert "SEC. 3."

Mr. BIAGGI (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate amendments be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the original request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is the gentleman going to have an opportunity to explain to us what this is?

This was a rather controversial bill as I recall, when it was brought up before. Is the gentleman going to have an opportunity to explain to us what we are now doing to clean up the bill?

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BIAGGI. I did not realize that this was controversial. Clearly it was a subject of discussion when we brought it up before.

This is a question of transferring some land to the city of Hoboken. It is a question of the cost.

The Senate amendment to our bill originally would deal with the question of negotiating for the price at somewhat near fair market value. It was the original intention of the bill to cede the property entirely without cost to Hoboken for a number of historical reasons.

But we have no objection to the Senate amendment.

Mr. McCLOSKEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. Further reserving the right to object, I will be glad to yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. McCLOSKEY. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Essentially the Senate added a Republican-inspired amendment to require when this Federal property goes to the city of Hoboken that it go at the fair market value.

There are other provisions in the bill but, in effect, they protect the Government rather than any other party.

Mr. WALKER. Further reserving the right to object, I understand what we are doing is we are going to allow the city of Hoboken to assume the property, but they will have to pay fair market value for the property under the Senate amendment?

Mr. McCLOSKEY. There are certain conditions about that fair market value negotiation, but essentially that was what the other body required.

When the House passed the bill it merely authorized the transfer of the property to the city of Hoboken. The other body added amendments in effect requiring that if Hoboken gets it that it pay the fair market value.

There are certain conditions about that, but that is essentially the nature of the Senate amendments.

From the Republican side, the gentleman from Kentucky, GENE SNYDER, has asked me to advise that there is no Republican committee opposition to the Senate amendments.

Mr. WALKER. Further reserving the right to object, do I understand, and maybe the gentleman from California can answer, or the distinguished gentleman from New York can answer, will this mean that there now will be no cost to the Government with regard to this ceding of the property.

Mr. McCLOSKEY. It means at least that, as I understand it.

The only reservation I have is whether the U.S. Government will get full market value or full value less something. Whatever it gets will be more than under the House bill.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman, and I withdraw my reservation of objection.

● Mr. GUARINI. Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased that Chairman JONES and Chairman BIAGGI and the House leadership have placed on the Consent Calendar a bill of great importance to the economic revitalization of my home county of Hudson and the city of Hoboken. This measure, H.R. 3620, as amended by the Senate, authorizes the transfer of the Hoboken pier terminals to the city of Hoboken by a negotiated sale at fair market value as determined by the General Services Administration.

The Hoboken pier terminals have been in the hands of the Federal Government since 1917. This parcel of property constitutes about 30 percent of the entire shoreline of the city of Hoboken and 50 acres of land and piers in a city that is barely larger than 1 square mile.

H.R. 3620, the bill I sponsored which seeks this negotiated return of the piers, has undergone some important revisions since it was first introduced. This noncontroversial measure was passed by the House of Representatives on March 18 of this year by a better than 7-to-1 margin. On August 19, the Senate passed a slightly amended version of H.R. 3620 by voice vote. The Senate-passed version of the bill before us today should be adopted so that this measure can become law at the soonest possible date.

The return of these piers, which have sat useless and deteriorating since 1978, will be a catalyst in the continued drive by the city of Hoboken to renovate itself. Under the outstanding leadership of Mayor Stephen Cappiello, Hoboken has become engaged in an urban revitalization of recognizable scope. By passing H.R. 3620, and allowing the negotiated transfer of this pier property back to the city of Hoboken for incorporation into the city's development plans, we would be helping a city which is helping itself.

The benefits of H.R. 3620 are many. The Federal Government will be relieving itself of responsibility for piers which are currently useless because of the revolution in the container shipping industry.

The Government would gain revenue through the sale of these piers, free itself of the responsibility to future repairs and liabilities, while at the same time allowing Hoboken the opportunity of restoring its waterfront for nonmaritime use.

There has been a great deal of talk in this Chamber about the need to sell surplus Government property. However, in few cases would the advantage be as great to the two parties involved. Hoboken is ready to find a developer who can shape this area consistent with both the nonmaritime use and the growth of the New Jersey shoreline on the New Jersey side of the Hudson River. Through incorporation of this previously unusable land, the city can continue its great renaissance.

I can assure my colleagues that this measure enjoys the full support of the administration, the Department of Transportation, the General Services Administration, the State of New Jersey, the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey, and the city of Hoboken. And as I have mentioned, H.R. 3620 was passed in the Senate by voice vote.

I ask the Members of this body for their support for this measure today. It means so much to the future development of Hoboken and Hudson County.

I want to thank Chairman JONES and Chairman BIAGGI for their efforts in leading this important legislation through the legislative process. I also want to thank Senator BRADLEY and Governmental Affairs Chairman ROTH for their work in getting this measure through the Senate.●

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the original request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill just considered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the provisions of clause 5 of rule I, the Chair announces that he will postpone further proceedings today on each motion to suspend the rules on which a recorded vote or the yeas and nays are ordered, or on which the vote is objected to under clause 4 of rule XV.

Such rollcall votes, if postponed, will be taken on Wednesday, September 15, 1982.

SUBSISTENCE ALLOWANCE AND INSTITUTION OF COMMODORE RANK

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 6804) to provide subsistence allowances for members of the Coast Guard officer candidate program, and for other purposes, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 6804

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 705 of title 14, United States Code, is amended by adding a new subsection (f) as follows:

"(f) A member of the Coast Guard Reserve not on active duty who is enrolled in an officer candidate program authorized by section 600 of title 10 leading to a commission in the Coast Guard Reserve, and is a full-time student in an accredited college curriculum leading to a bachelor's degree may be paid a subsistence allowance for each month of the member's academic year at the same rate as that prescribed by section 209(a) of title 37.".

SEC. 2. That title 14, United States Code, is amended as follows:

(1) Section 41 is amended by inserting "commodores;" after "rear admirals;".

(2) Subsection (b) of section 42 is amended by striking out "0.75;" and inserting in lieu thereof ".375; commodore .375;".

(3) Subsection (a) and (b) of section 256 are each amended by striking out "rear admiral" and inserting in lieu thereof "commodore".

(4) Subsection (b) of section 259 is amended by striking out "rear admiral" and inserting in lieu thereof "commodore".

(5) Section 271 is amended—

(A) by inserting a comma after "may" in subsection (c);

(B) by redesignating subsections (d) and (e) as subsections (e) and (f), respectively; and

(C) by adding after subsection (c) the following new subsection;

"(d) When a vacancy in the grade of rear admiral occurs, the senior commodore serving on the active duty promotion list shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to fill the vacancy. The appointment shall be effective on the date the vacancy occurred."

(6) Subsection (d) of section 275 is repealed.

(7) Subsection (a) of section 288 is amended by striking out "rear admiral" and inserting in lieu thereof "commodore".

(8) Subsection (a) of section 289 is amended to read as follows:

"(a) The Secretary may, whenever the needs of the service require, but not more often than annually, convene a board consisting of not less than six officers of the grade of commodore or rear admiral to recommend for continuation on active duty officers on the active duty promotion list serving in the grade of captain, who during the promotion year in which the board meets will complete at least three years' service in that grade and who have not been selected for promotion to the grade of commodore. Officers who are subject to retirement under section 288 of this title during the promotion year in which the board meets shall not be considered by this board.".

(9)(A) Section 290 is amended—

(i) by amending the catch line thereof to read as follows:

"§290. Read admirals and commodores; continuation on active duty; involuntary retirement";

and

(ii) by amending subsection (a) to read as follows:

"(a) The Secretary shall from time to time convene boards to recommend for continuation on active duty the most senior officers on the active duty promotion list serving in the grade of commodore or rear admiral who have not previously been considered for continuation in that grade. Officers serving for the time being or who have served in the grade of vice admiral or in the position of Chief of Staff are not subject to consideration for continuation under this subsection, and as to all other provisions of this section shall be considered as having been continued in the grade of rear admiral. A board shall consist of at least five officers serving in the grade of vice admiral or as rear admirals previously continued. Board shall be convened frequently enough to assure that each officer serving in the grade of commodore or rear admiral is subject to consideration for continuation during a promotion year in which he completes not less than four or more than five years combined service in the grades of commodore and rear admiral.".

(B) The item relating to section 290 in the table of sections at the beginning of chapter 11 is amended to read as follows:

"290. Rear admirals and commodores; continuation on active duty; involuntary retirement.".

(10) Subsection (b) of section 421 is amended by striking out "rear admiral" and inserting in lieu thereof "commodore".

(11) Section 462a is repealed.

(12) Subsection (b) of section 724 is amended—

(A) by striking "rear admiral" in the first sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "commodore"; and

(B) by striking "grade of rear admiral" in the last sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "combined grades of commodore and rear admiral".

(13) Subsection (e) of section 729 is amended—

(A) by striking "the grade of rear admiral" and substituting "the grades of commodore and rear admiral"; and

(B) by inserting "for promotion to the grade of commodore" after "consideration".

(14) Subsection (b) of section 736 is amended to read as follows:

"(b) Notwithstanding any other law, when the running mate of a reserve officer serving in the grade of commodore is promoted to the grade of rear admiral, the reserve officer shall also be promoted to that grade.".

(15) Subsection (a)(2) of section 740 is amended by striking "rear admiral" and substituting "commodore".

(16) Subsection (b) of section 742 is amended by inserting "or commodore" after "rear admiral".

(17)(A) Section 743 is amended to read as follows:

"§ 743. Rear admiral and commodore; maximum service in grade

"Unless retained in or removed from an active status under any other law, a Reserve rear admiral or commodore shall be removed from an active status on the day that officer completes four years combined service in the grades of rear admiral and commodore.".

(B) The item relating to section 743 in the table of sections at the beginning of chapter 21 is amended to read as follows:

"743. Rear admiral and commodore; maximum service in grade.".

SEC. 3. (a) Section 202 of title 37, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"§ 202. Pay grades: commodores, retired list

"An officer of the Coast Guard holding a permanent appointment in the grade of commodore on the retired list, and who in time of war or national emergency has served satisfactorily on active duty for two years in that grade or in a higher grade, is entitled when on active duty to the basic pay of a rear admiral.".

(b) the item relating to section 202 in the table of sections at the beginning of chapter 3 of title 37 is amended to read as follows:

"202. Pay grades; commodores, retired list.".

SEC. 4. (a) An officer of the Coast Guard who on the day before the effective date of this Act—

(1) was serving on active duty in the grade of rear admiral and was receiving the basic pay of a rear admiral of the upper half; or

(2) was serving on active duty in the grade of admiral or vice admiral, shall after that date hold the permanent grade of rear admiral.

(b) An officer who on the day before the effective date of this Act was serving on active duty in the grade of rear admiral and was receiving the basic pay of a rear admiral of the lower half shall after that date hold the permanent grade of commodore, but shall retain the title of rear admiral.

(c) An officer who on the day before the effective date of this Act was on an approved list of officers recommended for promotion to the grade of rear admiral shall, upon promotion, hold the grade of commodore with the title of rear admiral.

(d) An officer who on the day before the effective date of this Act—

(1) was serving on active duty in the grade of rear admiral and was entitled to the basic pay of a rear admiral of the lower half; or

(2) was on an approved list of officers recommended for promotion to the grade of rear admiral, shall, on and after the effective date of this Act, or in the case of an officer on such a list, upon promotion to the grade of commodore, be entitled to wear the uniform and insignia of a rear admiral.

(e) An officer of the Coast Guard who on the day before the effective date of this Act held the grade of rear admiral on the retired list retains the grade of rear admiral and is entitled after that date to wear the uniform and insignia of a rear admiral. Such an officer, when ordered to active duty—

(1) holds the grade and has the right to wear the uniform and insignia of a rear admiral; and

(2) ranks among commissioned officers of the Armed Forces as and is entitled to the basic pay of—

(A) a commodore, if his retired pay was based on the basic pay of a rear admiral of the lower half on the day before the effective date of this Act; or

(B) a rear admiral, if his retired pay was based on the basic pay of a rear admiral of the upper half on the day before the effective date of this Act.

(f) Unless entitled to a higher grade under another provision of law, an officer who on the day before the effective date of this Act—

(1) was serving on active duty, and

(2) held the grade of rear admiral;

and who retires on or after the effective date of this Act, retires in the grade of rear admiral and is entitled to wear the uniform and insignia of a rear admiral. If such an officer is ordered to active duty after his retirement, he is considered, for the purposes of determining his pay, uniform, insignia, and rank among other commissioned officers, as having held the grade of rear admiral on the retired list on the day before the effective date of this Act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. STUDDS) will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from California (Mr. MCCLOSKEY) will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. STUDDS).

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

H.R. 6804 was introduced on July 20 by myself, Mr. JONES of North Carolina, and Mr. YOUNG of Alaska.

Both parts of this legislation were requested by the administration in July and the bill should, I suspect, be utterly without controversy. Its purpose is to create for the Coast Guard a scheme somewhat similar to the Marine Corps platoon leader program, and the ROTC program used by the other armed services. Briefly, it would permit the Coast Guard to enlist candidates in the Coast Guard Reserve between their sophomore and junior years in college, and require them to serve on active duty for 2 months both immediately following enlistment and during the summer between their junior and senior years. While in school, participants would be provided a subsistence allowance of $100 per month, and upon graduation, they would be commissioned and expected to serve at least 3 years active duty.

This program is intended to help the Coast Guard compete with the other services in attracting certain categories of officers with special training in fields such as engineering and computer science, and to recruit officers from minority groups.

Quite obviously given the fact it has been approved by OMB, the cost of this legislation will be miniscule—approximately $100,000 a year.

The other purpose of the bill is to provide for a new grade of commodore in the officer corps of the Coast Guard. This legislation would bring the Coast Guard's officer rank structure into line with that now in use by the U.S. Navy. It would also eliminate the practice of dividing the rear admiral grade into an upper half and a lower half.

As I have said, this legislation was originally proposed by the administration. It is supported by the Coast Guard and was approved unanimously by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

I want particularly to thank the ranking minority member of the subcommittee, Mr. YOUNG of Alaska, the chairman of the full committee, Mr. JONES of North Carolina, and the sponsor of the amendment which added the commodore section to the bill, Mr. SNYDER, for their support of this legislation.

H.R. 6804 is a simple, but necessary bill, and I trust it will be approved today without controversy.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. MCCLOSKEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 6804 contains two provisions regarding the personnel management and administration within the Coast Guard.

Section 1 authorizes the payment of a subsistance allowance to individuals enrolled in an officer candidate program which would be completed during two summers of training on active duty prior to graduation from college. The subsistance allowance would be paid during the 18 academic months of the junior and senior years for these individuals. This program is similar to a Marine Corps program currently in use in the Department of Defense. The program gives the Coast Guard one more tool in trying to overcome the severe shortage of officers they are experiencing in certain specialities. As such, the Coast Guard will be able to offer an incentive to individuals, particularly with engineering and computer science backgrounds as well as those in minority groups, to enter the Coast Guard and fill the critical need for these specialties.

One concern that the subcommittee had in reporting out this bill was the administration of the program by the Coast Guard. The announced sanctions that the Coast Guard would use if a person disenrolled from the program seem to be excessive. Two years of active duty is proposed. It is the intent of the committee that should the Coast Guard implement this program, the sanctions for disenrollment from this officer candidate program should be no greater than those for disenrollment from other training programs that provide similar benefits. The report which we filed on this bill gives some guidance in this regard.

The remaining sections of the bill contain amendments to title 14 of the United States Code which would create a new rank of commodore within the Coast Guard's officer corps. These provisions would conform the Coast Guard flag officer rank designations to those used by the U.S. Navy. In time of war, the Coast Guard is to be transferred as a service in that Department. The provisions address the promotion and retention practices regarding these personnel as well as the pay and certain other transitional matters needed to fully achieve the creation of the grade of commodore. Additional questions which arose after the provision was reported by our committee, will be addressed in the other body, if I understand correctly.

Both the officer candidate subsistence allowance provision and the creation of the commodore rank are proposals that have been developed and submitted by the administration. They are noncontroversial in nature and serve to improve the personnel laws of the Coast Guard.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I recommend that we enact these provisions in H.R. 6804 today.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

● Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, this bill, H.R. 6804, will allow the Coast Guard to more effectively compete with the other military services for officer candidates as well as establish a new flag rank of commodore.

This legislation will allow the Coast Guard to offer Reserve enlistment to college juniors and seniors who would participate in officer candidate school during two, 2-month summer programs, and receive a monthly stipend of $100 during the school year. Candidates would have a 3-year active duty commitment upon graduation. While overall officer enlistment is satisfactory at this time, recruitment of minorities as well as those in certain professional areas, is seriously deficient. Implementation of this program will improve this situation and provide a solid basis for future recruitment.

H.R. 6804 also creates a new rank of commodore. Under present promotion procedures, a captain is promoted directly to two star rear admiral, which is divided for pay purposes, into upper and lower halves. This change would not increase the number of flag officers in the Coast Guard or make any substantive difference, but would bring the rank structure into conformity with that now used by the Navy.

The administration has requested this legislation and I urge you to support it.●

● Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in support of H.R. 6804, particularly sections 2 through 5 of the bill, which create the Coast Guard commodore rank, replacing the rear admiral (lower half) designation. These changes will conform the Coast Guard's officer grade structure to that of the U.S. Navy.

The commodore provisions were added by amendment to H.R. 6804 at committee markup on August 3. The amendment adopted by the committee was a technically improved version of H.R. 6909 which I introduced, along with the chairman of the committee and the gentleman from New York, on July 29. H.R. 6909 was virtually identical to legislation requested by the administration with minor changes. Those changes have been developed in close consultation with the Coast Guard and Members on both sides of the aisle. I particularly wish to acknowledge and thank the chairman of the committee, the subcommittee chairman, the subcommittee ranking minority member, and the gentleman from New York for the assistance rendered by their staffs in preparing this piece of legislation.

The subcommittee chairman has accurately described this bill's provisions creating the rank of commodore within the Coast Guard and I feel no need to add to this discussion. The bill is straightforward and without any controversy that I am aware of. I am pleased to support this measure and urge its adoption.●

● Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, H.R. 6804 is a bill to provide assistance allowances for members of the Coast Guard officer candidate program and to establish the grade of commodore within the Coast Guard.

This bill provides for a new officer candidate program which permits the payment of $100 a month to junior and senior year college students who enlist in the program. These students would be required to complete officer candidate school during two summers of active duty. The program is designed to attract college students in critical specialties to meet severe shortages in those areas in the officer corps of the Coast Guard.

Mr. Speaker, although this may be a needed program to attract qualified officers to the Coast Guard, the announced 2-year active duty requirement for disenrollment in the administration's letter of transmittal for this program is excessive in view of the benefit received compared to the benefit and sanctions in other officer programs. For example, disenrolled cadets can receive 3 to 4 years of college and $528 per month and have no active duty requirement. We have examined the various officer candidate programs and their sanctions for disenrollment. Only active duty enlisted personnel must complete their enlistment if they drop out of an officer program. Thus, the disenrollment sanction for the program we are considering today seems to be disproportionate and inconsistent. The proposal is designed to attract highly talented and motivated individuals needed by the Coast Guard. Thus, as proposed the announced sanction would be self-defeating because the 2-year active duty requirement would, in fact, be a disincentive. Thus, it is the recommendation of the committee that any sanction for disenrollment from an officer candidate program of the Coast Guard shall be no greater than that for disenrollment from any other officer candidate program of equal benefit to the individual.

The remainder of the bill provides for the grade of commodore in the Coast Guard. This change would conform the Coast Guard's officer structure to the other military services. The bill makes the necessary amendments to title 14, United States Code and includes some transition sections needed to institute this new rank.

During the course of the committee's consideration of this bill, additional questions arose regarding some of the changes to title 14 in the commodore sections of this bill. Attached are the responses I have received to the questions noted above which I submit for the record.

Mr. Speaker, on the basis of the above I urge that we approve this bill today.

The attachments follow:

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORTATION,
U.S. COAST GUARD,
Washington, D.C., September 9, 1982.

Hon. DON YOUNG,
House of Representatives
Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. YOUNG: Enclosed are the responses to the questions forwarded with your letter of August 17, 1982 concerning the amendment to H.R. 6804 which would establish the grade of commodore in the United States Coast Guard.

I will be glad to provide any additional information which would expedite final passage of this legislation.

Sincerely,

J. S. GRASEY,
Admiral, U.S. Coast Guard, Commandant.

QUESTIONS BY MR. YOUNG OF ALASKA

Question 1. Section 2 of H.R. 6804 amends Section 290 of Title 14, United States Code. This section would provide for the consideration of commodores and rear admirals for continuation on active duty. Further, it would provide that officers serving in the position of Chief of Staff are not subject to consideration under this section. This version of Section 290 read with Section 41(a) of Title 14 seems to preclude the assignment of a commodore to the position of Chief of Staff. Section 41(a) provides that the rear admiral designated by the Commandant to the position of Chief of Staff shall be the senior rear admiral for all purposes other than pay.

Is it the intention that Section 290 exclude commodores from assignment to the position of Chief of Staff?

If not, is it intended that commodores who would have served as Chief of Staff would be considered to be continued in the grade of "rear admiral" and not in the grade of commodore as the new provision is currently drafted? If this language remains the same, would it be possible that a commodore who has served in the position Chief of Staff would be considered on a continuation board prior to being promoted to the grade of rear admiral?

The exemption of the position of Chief of Staff from continuation boards in Section 290 and the senior rear admiral designation in Section 41(a) were enacted in Public Law 96-322 to recognize the organizational prominence in terms of military protocol that the position of Chief of Staff holds and to protect junior flag officers from the scrutiny of a continuation board so that they could make decisions in that sensitive position with the degree of autonomy necessary for that position. If the junior flag officers, i.e., commodores, are not intended to be assigned to the position of Chief of Staff, is it necessary to continue these provisions in Title 14?

Answer. Section 41a(b) of Title 14 and Section 290 as contained in H.R. 6804 preclude the appointment of a commodore as Chief of Staff of the Coast Guard. Given the increasingly broad managerial responsibilities of the position, future Chiefs of Staff will be chosen from among those officers serving in the grade of rear admiral. The recognition of the organizational prominence of the position of Chief of Staff in section 41a(b) and the protection from continuation board scrutiny in Section 290 continue to be necessary to aid junior rear admirals who may serve as Chief of Staff. The most junior rear admiral could still be several years junior, by date of rank, to the most senior rear admiral.

Question 2. Section 724 authorizes the number of Coast Guard Reserve officers and prescribes the percentage of that number for each grade of officer except for flag officers. Subsection (a) sets the authorized number of reserve officers at either 5,000 or a greater number determined by the Secretary of Transportation if necessary for planned mobilization requirements. Subsection (b) provides for the number of officers in each grade as a percentage of 5,000 or the greater number set by the Secretary. Flag officers are set at a fixed number of two. Accordingly, the Secretary has the discretion to increase the number of officers in the grades of O-6 and below by increasing the overall number of Reserve officers, but has no discretion with regard to the number of flag officers. Would it not be desirable to vest the Secretary with similar discretionary authority, to increase the authorized number of flag officers for the Reserve if required for mobilization purposes?

Answer. Although the authorized number of two reserve rear admirals in Section 724(b) is adequate at this time, in the context of your question, it is reasonable to vest the Secretary with the discretionary authority to increase the authorized number of flag officers for mobilization purposes. This could be accomplished by revising the last sentence of 14 U.S.C. 724(b) to read as follows (deleted matter is in brackets, new matter is in italic): "The authorized number of Reserve officers in an active status not on active duty in the grade of rear admiral is two[.]; however, the Secretary may authorize additional officers in the grade of rear admiral as necessary to meet mobilization requirements."

Question 3. What was the rationale for settling on the title of "commodore"? Since some flag officers and particularly some district commanders will no longer be referred to as "admiral", do you perceive any public relations problems or decrease in public confidence in the Coast Guard because of this new designation? Will certain flag or district commander billets be designated as junior flag officer billets and thus have only commodores assigned to fill them? If so, which billets are these? Would the Coast Guard have any objection to the use of the term "commodore admiral" or other similar designation to overcome some of these problems?

Answer. The Commandant at the time the DOPMA was under active consideration by the Congress requested the Congress not make the majority of the provisions of the DOPMA applicable to the Coast Guard. In return, he committed the Coast Guard to recommending certain conforming changes to Coast Guard personnel laws. One of those commitments involved a new designation for rear admirals of the lower-half. Under the Defense Officer Personnel Management Act (DOPMA), officers of the U.S. Navy serving in the O-8 paygrade were designated rear admirals, and those in the O-7 paygrade were designated commodore admirals. A subsequent amendment to that Act redesignated commodore admirals as commodores. In accordance with the Commandant's commitment, the proposal currently before the Congress recommends designating future rear admirals of the lower-half of the Coast Guard as commodores, so as to have Coast Guard grade designations match Navy grade designations. It is this desire for uniformity with the Navy that leads us to recommend the designation commodore.

We perceive that no public relations problems or decrease in public confidence will result from the designation commodore. We are not aware of any public relations problems encountered by the Navy in the use of this designation.

We would prefer not to designate the applicable flag billets as being either commodore or rear admiral billets. Assignment decisions will be based on an evaluation of the future requirements of a billet and the individuals qualified to assume that billet, as each vacancy occurs. We may well need to have a given billet filled by a rear admiral at one time and by a commodore at another, and would prefer to retain the management flexibility to allow this type of change.

We prefer the designation commodore to the designation commodore admiral. Should the designation commodore prove to be unacceptable, one solution is to retain the current upper-half/lower-half system and the designation rear admiral, but have rear admirals of the lower-half wear one star, and rank with the one star flag and general officers of the other services, etc.

QUESTIONS BY MR. SNYDER

Question 1. The legislation has no explicit provision regarding effective date, thereby making it effective as of the date of enactment.

a. Does the Coast Guard require a deferred effective date in order to gear up for, and put into effect, the changes brought about?

b. If so, what would you recommend?

Answer. The Coast Guard does not require a deferred effective date for H.R. 6804. The transition provisions of the bill allow immediate implementation without adverse effect.

Question 2. If the commodore legislation is enacted, a certain lack of uniformity will still exist between Coast Guard and Navy continuation board reviews conducted between the grades of captain and rear admiral. Please explain the exact nature of those differences and why they should or should not continue, given the individual needs of the two services.

Answer. The continuation provision for flag officers in the Coast Guard is Section 290 of Title 14. That section as contained in H.R. 6804 provides that each commodore or rear admiral who has not previously undergone continuation board review would be subject to mandatory continuation board review between his fourth and fifth years of service as a flag officer. Under Section 290(b), not less than 50 percent or more than 75 percent of those officers undergoing continuation board scrutiny may be continued in grade.

The continuation provision for flag officers in the Navy is contained in the Defense Officer Personnel Management Act, in Section 638 of Title 10, United States Code. Under that section, officers who have served at least three and one-half years as commodore and whose names are not on a list of officers recommended for promotion to rear admiral may be considered for early retirement by a board convened at the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy.

The primary substantive difference between these continuation provisions is that Coast Guard continuation board review is mandatory, while Navy continuation boards are convened at the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy.

The mandatory continuation board review for Coast Guard flag officers and the percentages of those officers who may be continued on active duty best serve the present personnel management needs of the Coast Guard, by forcing attrition within the junior flag grades. We would prefer to maintain this mandatory system of forced attrition, rather than adopt the non-mandatory Navy system.●

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MONTGOMERY). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. STUDDS) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 6804, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was not objection.

FEDERAL BOAT SAFETY ACT AMENDMENTS

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 6813) to amend the Federal Boat Safety Act of 1971, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 6813

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Federal Boat Safety Act of 1971 (Public Law 92-75, 85 Stat. 213) is amended as follows:

(1) By inserting "contract with, and" immediately after "The Secretary may" in the second sentence of section 25(a) (46 U.S.C. 1474(a)) and in section 26(a) (46 U.S.C. 1475(a)) immediately after "promulgate, may".

(2) In section 26 (b) and (c) (46 U.S.C. 1475 (b) and (c)):

(a) by striking "appropriated" and inserting "authorized to be expended"; and

(b) by adding at the end thereof the following: "His action in doing so shall be deemed a contractual obligation of the United States for the payment of the proportional share of the cost of implementing the program.".

(3) In section 26(d) (46 U.S.C. 1475(d))—

(a) by inserting immediately after the third sentence the following: "Approval of those elements of a combined program shall be deemed a contractual obligation of the United States for the payment of the proportional share of the cost of implementing State recreational boating safety programs pursuant to this Act."; and

(b) by adding at the end thereof the following: "Approval of those elements of a combined program shall be deemed a contractual obligation of the United States for the payment of the proportional share of the cost of implementing State recreational boating facilities programs pursuant to this Act.".

(4) In section 30 (46 U.S.C. 1479)—

(a) by striking "of Appropriations" in the section heading and inserting "Contract Spending Authority";

(b) by striking "there is authorized to be appropriated" and inserting "The Secretary is authorized to expend" in subsections (a) and (b);

(c) in subsection (a) by striking "such appropriations to remain available until expended." and inserting "subject to such amounts as are provided in appropriations Acts for liquidation of contract authority, to remain available until expended. Any funds released by payment of final voucher or modification of program acceptance shall be credited to the balance of unobligated authorizations and shall be immediately available for expenditure."; and

(d) in subsection (b) by striking "such appropriations to remain available until expended." and inserting "subject to such amounts as are provided in appropriations Acts for liquidation of contract authority to remain available until expended. Any funds released by payment of final voucher or modification of program acceptance shall be credited to the balance of unobligated authorizations and shall be immediately available for expenditure.".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. STUDDS) will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from California (Mr. MCCLOSKEY) will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. STUDDS).

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

The purpose of H.R. 6813 is to facilitate the implementation of recreational boating safety programs in a manner consistent with the public interest and the intent of Federal law. The bill amends the Federal Boat Safety Act of 1971, as amended by the Recreational Boating Safety and Facilities Improvement Act of 1980, to enable the Committee on Appropriations to appropriate funds from the boating trust fund without causing a corresponding reduction in overall Department of Transportation budget authority.

This is accomplished by converting the existing grant authority to contract spending authority effective in fiscal year 1983 (the final year of an existing multiyear authorization), subject to the provision of liquidation of contract authority in subsequent appropriation acts.

Under the language of this legislation, the manner of review and consideration of State boating safety programs by the Committee on Appropriations will conform to those procedures utilized to provide appropriations for similar programs administered by the Federal Aviation Administration and the Federal Highway Administration in the Department of Transportation.

The Federal Boat Safety Act of 1971 represented the first attempt by the Federal Government to adopt a comprehensive approach to the improvement of recreational boating safety. To accomplish this, the act required manufacturers to build recreational boats in accordance with performance standards and provided Federal financial assistance to States to encourage the development of comprehensive State boating safety programs. The program of categorical grants developed under the 1971 statute was designed to encourage States to undertake additional responsibilities in boating safety education and enforcement, including modification of existing vessel numbering reporting systems and expansion of boating education and law enforcement. To insure consistency among the various State boating safety programs developed pursuant to the act, cooperative agreements were entered into between the States and the Federal Government.

Between 1972 and 1980 the grants-to-States program resulted in 51 of the 55 eligible jurisdictions establishing or expanding their boating safety programs in full compliance with the criteria set forth in the 1971 act. During that same time period the boating population increased from 7 million to over 14 million, yet the fatality rate from numbered vessels decreased by more than half. Significant benefits in lives saved and the prevention of property damage resulted from congressional appropriations over the 8-year period of just under $40 million.

The authorization for the 1971 statute was slated to expire at the end of 1979. Because of the tremendous success of the grants-to-States program, the committee reviewed methods to build on these achievements as well as alternative methods of funding. This resulted in what is known as the Recreational Boating Safety and Facilities Improvement Act of 1980. This act replaced the State boating safety grants programs of the 1971 law with a new fund in the Treasury called the national recreational boating safety and facilities improvement fund. The act provided for the diversion of a portion of the Federal marine fuels tax receipts into the fund so that those who benefit from the boat safety and facilities improvements rather than other taxpayers would finance the costs of such programs. A cap of $20 million was placed on the fund.

Unfortunately, no money has yet been made available from the fund for the purposes envisioned by the Congress. The goal of H.R. 6813 is to make sure that the boating safety effort does indeed go forward.

There are two simple points I wish to emphasize with respect to this legislation. First of all, we are talking here about a user fee program. The boating safety fund does not cost the general taxpayer a penny; it is financed entirely by those who benefit from boating safety projects and who pay the Federal tax on motorboat gasoline.

Second, the boating safety program has been a tremendous success. During the decade it has been in place, it has made a major contribution to the prevention of loss of life and property resulting from recreational boating accidents.

This bill was approved unanimously by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, and I would particularly like to thank the bill's sponsors, Representatives MARIO BIAGGI and TOM EVANS, for the fine work they have put into this legislation, and into the entire area of recreational boating safety.

This is a good bill, and I hope it will be approved without any problem by the House.

Mr. McCLOSKEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this is bipartisan legislation. H.R. 6813, introduced by Representatives BIAGGI, EVANS, STUDDS, and LENT on July 27, amends the Federal Boat Safety Act of 1971 as amended by the Recreational Boating Safety and Facilities Improvement Act of 1980, converts the recreational boating safety and facilities improvement fund from a discretionary spending authority to a direct (contract) spending authority.

The purpose of this change is to enable obligation of Federal moneys derived from the 4-cent-per-gallon motorboat fuel tax to support State boating safety programs—$10 million annually—and State boating facilities improvement programs—$10 million annually. The bill would eliminate having such expenditures scored, for budget purposes, against Department of Transportation appropriations ceilings. In the past a problem has occurred in appropriation actions wherein appropriations for Coast Guard operating expenses would have been reduced to offset the amount appropriated from the boating fund.

For the record, the administration opposes enactment of H.R. 6813 because it would remove expenditures from the national recreational boating safety and facilities improvement fund from the normal budget process. I think the administration is wrong.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. WALKER).

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a couple of questions of the subcommittee chairman or the committee chairman with regard to the bill and particularly the reason for the administration's opposition.

When they say that they oppose it because it would remove the expenditures from the normal budget process, does that imply that this is an area where they have achieved some cost savings, in their opinion, in the past year?

Mr. BIAGGI. If the gentleman will yield, if the gentleman will note, the administration objected to the legislation only as a matter of procedure rather than substance. And clearly the bill provides that the $10 million outlay and the $20 million contract authority will not come within the purview of the first budget resolution. So it will not be sent to the President until September 30. Hence, it will go over in the next resolution. But that is the only reason the administration has entered that opposition.

Frankly, the Secretary of Transportation has stated that it is consistent with the President's concept of federalism and, in addition to that, we have a user tax proposition here, which again is consistent with what the President is seeking. That clearly is the only area of opposition.

The gentleman is performing a service in raising the point so that it is clear for everyone to understand. There was no substantive opposition on the part of the administration. Only procedural. I hope my explanation was satisfactory. These expenditures will not take place within the purview of the first budget resolution.

Mr. WALKER. Well, my problem is that the administration does seem to have some concern with the budgeting process. As I say, does that mean that this is an area where they have achieved budget savings in the past and they are afraid that by taking it out from under the normal budget processes they will not be able to achieve those same savings in the future?

Mr. BIAGGI. No; it is not. The money that has been under discussion at this point, one of the questions on this point, really, comes out of the 4 cents a gallon that is charged that is obtained and flows into a fund similar to the highway trust fund and the airport and airway development fund. And these moneys are being used. No additional funding is required. We are just talking about an appropriation process. These moneys already have been collected. Really, they are dedicated funding. The problem has always been a question within the process of appropriations in the House, as to whether it should be subjected to the appropriation process, or should it automatically come out of the funds. We have preferred that it would automatically come out of the fund, but the Ways and Means Committee insisted on it coming through the regular appropriation process, and that is where we find ourselves in this case.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman. It sounds to me, though, as though this is something similar to what we have in some of the other trust funds.

Mr. BIAGGI. That is right.

Mr. WALKER. Where there has been some controversy about withholding of the money as a way of keeping down budget deficits. So what the gentleman is saying is that by moving this off budget, we would still continue to spend the money, but that the money in the trust fund could not be used as a way of mitigating to some extent the budget deficit.

Mr. BIAGGI. That is right.

Mr. WALKER. And that would be the issue that the administration is raising, that they would hope to be able to hold the money at some point as a way of keeping the budget deficit down. Is that really where the argument lies?

Mr. BIAGGI. Yes, that is true. The administration requested this appropriation process.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. McCLOSKEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Delaware (Mr. EVANS).

Mr. EVANS of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, in the 95th Congress, we passed, and the President signed, the Recreational Boating Safety and Facilities Improvement Act. Public Law 95-451 reaffirmed the intent of the Congress to continue a program which has proved to be a model of Federal-State cooperation resulting in the saving of many lives on our Nation's waterways.

As a result of the original Boating Safety Act of 1971, most States have implemented boating safety programs. While the numbers of boats and boaters have increased dramatically over the last decade, the total number as well as the rate of boating-related fatalities have both declined. The Federal contribution to the States under the Boating Safety Act never exceeded $10 million in any one year, but this was money that was very well spent. I am one who believes an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure, and money spent to prevent boating accidents is money we do not have to spend for costly and traumatic search and rescue missions and all the other problems related to accidents.

User fees are much discussed these days, and it is important to note that our boaters presently pay a tax on motorboat fuels. Public Law 95-451, earmarked $20 million from this tax to be used to provide matching grants to the States for safety and facilities programs. This action stemmed in part from the frustration of the boating community that they were being taxed, with little of the money being returned in the way of services to those people actually bearing that tax.

Under current law, expenditures from the recreational boating safety and facilities improvement fund compete against appropriations for other Coast Guard functions.

I might add that the functions of the Coast Guard have greatly expanded, because we in the Congress have mandated additional missions for the Coast Guard that go much beyond the original mission of search and rescue.

So H.R. 6813 would simply grant the Secretary of Transportation contract authority to make expenditures from the fund to assist State boating safety programs. The growth of the Coast Guard's responsibility has far outstripped the growth of its funding, as I have said before.

H.R. 6813 recognizes that this already tight funding for the Coast

Guard's search and rescue and law enforcement activities will not compete with similarly important, and in the long run very cost effective, funding for State boating safety programs.

Let me suggest again that while the number of recreational boats over the last decade or so has increased dramatically, the number of accidents and fatalities has actually gone down, so we are truly spending the taxpayers' dollars, and in this case the user fees from the boat owners' themselves in a cost-effective manner.

Safety on the Nation's waterways is very much a concern of both Federal and State governments. H.R. 6813 will make certain that highly successful State boating safety programs will continue. The money, as I have noted, is to be derived from the existing tax on motorboat fuels, and it would permit the boating public to realize direct benefits from a tax they have been paying for many years.

I urge my colleagues to support this bipartisan and very responsible legislation.

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. BIAGGI).

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 6813—which I authored along with my good friend and colleague from Delaware, Mr. EVANS, and the distinguished chairmen of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries and the Subcommittee on Coast Guard and Navigation.

The bill amends the Federal Boat Safety Act of 1971. It would substitute contract spending authority for categorical grant authority as the mechanism for providing Federal financial assistance to State recreational boating safety and facilities improvement programs under that act.

These programs are supported by appropriations from the recreational boating safety and facilities improvement fund. This is a user fee supported trust fund—financed with excise taxes paid by recreational boaters in the form of the 4-cent-per-gallon Federal motorboat fuel tax.

This modification to existing law is necessary to preclude appropriations from the trust fund from precipitating corresponding reductions in the Coast Guard operating expense account—further contributing to that agency's chronic fiscal shortfalls. It will insure that funds earmarked for State recreational boating safety and facilities access programs are expended for those programs—subject to authorization and obligational ceilings.

The amendment would result in the outlays of $10 million in fiscal year 1983. This is a small price to pay for preserving intact a unique Federal/State partnership that provides essential marine law enforcement and recreational boating safety education services to the boating public.

In requesting appropriations for this program in fiscal year 1983, the administration specifically endorsed it as consistent with the President's "New Federalism Initiative" in that it results in the shift of existing Federal responsibilities to the States, along with a source of matching funds to facilitate the assumption of those functions.

A decade of experience has demonstrated that federally supported, State-administered boating safety programs have resulted in the saving of thousands of lives and millions of dollars in property damage. This has been achieved at minimal cost through this unique Federal/State partnership arrangement under which the Federal Government—through Coast Guard supervision and direction—has maintained requisite national uniformity, while the States have been responsible for providing education and enforcement services.

This historic leveraging of Federal tax dollars has resulted in a 3-to-1 ratio of State in comparison to Federal expenditures.

The enactment of this legislation in this, the third and final year of a 3-year authorization of this program, is necessary to insure the continuation of this valuable program with tangible results out of all proportion to the magnitude of expenditures invloved. It will effectuate implementation of changes incorporated in 1980 amendments to this act—which I authored—designed to shift the funding responsibility for these programs, benefitting recreational boating from the general taxpayer to the boating public.

Failing enactment of these procedural amendments, in my judgment, Federal financial support for recreational boating safety may terminate. This will inevitably be reflected in higher boating accident and fatality statistics in every State.

I would point out to my colleagues that this amendment is consistent with those funding mechanisms employed in similar transportation safety-related programs financed through the highway trust fund and the airport and airway development fund.

Statutory authority for this shift in funding approach is specifically provided for in the Congressional Budget Act of 1974. Moreover, until late last week, the proponents of this measure operated on the assumption that the administration was not opposed to this shift in approach to program funding. This was based upon earlier comments received from the Secretary of Transportation and from discussions between the Department and the committee.

The administration now lodges a pro forma objection to the legislation, because it removes expenditures from the dedicated trust fund from the operation of the normal budget process, presumably, this procedural objection has no impact upon underlying administration support for the substantive program itself. I would expect then that, following successful implementation of this new funding approach this fiscal year, the committee will recommend its subsequent incorporation on a permanent basis—along with several administration-proposed amendments—as it considers necessary reauthorization of the act next year.

I, therefore, urge the support of my colleagues for this procedural amendment which is necessary to insure funding for a small user fee supported program of vital importance to the 60 million recreational boaters throughout the United States. Absent this program, recreational boating on the 25,000 miles of navigable waterways in our Nation will inevitably become an increasingly hazardous and far less enjoyable experience.

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HUGHES).

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I want to commend the chairman of the Subcommittee on the Coast Guard, the chairman of my committee, as well as my good friend and colleague, the gentleman from New York, (MARIO BIAGGI), who has been in the forefront of this fight to provide moneys for the Federal Boat Safety Act.

This is the only act in town. It seems to me it makes sense to provide this independent authority so that we can spend the moneys that are needed for Federal boating safety programs.

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Puerto Rico (Mr. CORRADA).

Mr. CORRADA. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 6813, the Federal Boat Safety Act amendments, which is directed to assist financially in the implementation of State recreational boating safety programs.

By shifting the existing grant authority to a contract operating authority, the provisions of the bill would do away with unwarranted competition of this program against various Coast Guard budget categories. As we all know, given the present budget constraints, the Coast Guard's crucial activities, even though inadequately funded, have taken the bulk of the appropriations leaving unfunded this also very important program designed to aid in the proper and safe operation of recreational boats.

Our 50 million recreational boaters have been paying a Federal tax of 4 cents on the gallon of marine fuel since 1980 in the belief it would return to them in the form of boating safety and facilities improvement grants. Let us not keep our fellow Americans waiting for the funds Congress intended for them 2 years ago and could be the difference between life and death for the millions of Americans who venture into the sea in search of good time and not a calamity.

We must solve the inequity and unfreeze the more than $40 million that have accrued in the national recreational boating safety and facilities improvement fund since its creation during the 96th Congress. The action we take today is of vital importance for continuing our boating safety programs all across the Nation which have been successful in substantially reducing the rate of boating accidents and fatalities.

I urge my colleagues to vote for the passage of this legislation.

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, just so the record will reflect, the committee report notes under departmental reports the following: H.R. 6813 was referred to the Department of Transportation for a report. No report has been returned to the committee.

The administration has not taken a formal position or had not when the committee report was issued.

Let me just observe that this is a good program. It works. It saves lives. It is inexpensive, and not only that, but it is a user fee, a concept being urged upon this committee and this subcommittee in particular practically hourly by this administration. Here is an instance where we are willing to give it a try and I urge Members to do so.

Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time.

● Mr. LENT. Mr. Speaker, as a cosponsor, I rise in strong support of H.R. 6813 and urge its prompt passage by this body. In addition, I want to commend my colleague from New York (Mr. BIAGGI) for his support and assistance in bringing this legislation before us today.

This bill gives me a sense of déjà vu. Two years ago, we passed the Recreational Boating Safety and Facilities Improvement Act. We set up a fund in the Treasury into which Federal motorboat fuel taxes were to be transferred with the idea of funding State boating safety programs with those taxes already paid by motorboat fuel users.

Even though the motorboat fuel taxes were earmarked for boating safety programs, the 1980 law has a built-in budgetary stumbling block which prevents the fund from being tapped without triggering cuts in other Department of Transportation spending categories. As a result, our pledge to the Nation's recreational boaters to support State boating safety and facilities improvements has not been fulfilled.

H.R. 6813 will help us keep the promise we made 2 years ago to the millions of Americans who own boats and enjoy the sport of recreational boating. It should be noted that this bill is not a budget buster for it will free up tax money already paid by boaters for boating safety programs. As a matter of fact, recreational boaters paying the 4-cents-per-gallon Federal motorboat fuel tax have paid well in excess of the $20 million fund established for boating safety programs.

Safe boating saves lives. Passage of this bill today will help resolve the "Catch 22" situation we have experienced in the past and make sure tax funds already paid for boating safety and facilities improvement are used as Congress intended. This bill accomplishes that and I urge my colleagues to vote for its passage.●

● Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, approval of these amendments to the Federal Boat Safety Act of 1971 as contained in H.R. 6813, will put an end to a situation where an unnecessary competition for limited funds has resulted in the deprivation of recreational boating programs.

The 1979 amendments to the Boat Safety Act, the Recreational Boating Safety and Facilities Improvement Act, established a dedicated trust fund made up of the already collected 4-cents-per-gallon marine fuel taxes, to support State boating safety and facilities improvement projects. The fund was authorized at $20 million per year—which is its current level—for 3 years ending in fiscal year 1983.

Attempts to move forward with the appropriation of moneys from the fund have been unsuccessful as this transaction, for budget purposes, is "scored" against the budget authority of the Department of Transportation and would result in a correspondingly lower appropriation for Coast Guard operating expenses. This legislation, H.R 6813, would correct this situation by changing the existing grant authority of the fund to contract spending authority, subject to the provision of liquidation of contract authority in subsequent appropriations acts. This reflects the procedures used to administer similar programs. Also within the Department of Transportation at the Federal Aviation Administration and the Federal Highway Administration.

Without this change, the 14 million recreational boaters in this country will continue to see their fuel taxes go unused for their stated purpose: the development and enhancement of boating facilities and safety programs. I urge your favorable vote.●

● Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, H.R. 6813 is a bill to amend the Federal Boat Safety Act of 1971 and more specifically the national recreational boating safety and facilities improvement fund contained within that law.

The purpose of this bill is to correct the fiscal distortion in the boating trust fund's administration. It assures funding of safety and facility programs without a reduction in the Coast Guard budget authority which was attempted by the Office of Management and Budget this past year. The important result of this bill is that the funding for the Coast Guard search and rescue and law enforcement programs will not have to suffer because expenditures were made from the boating safety trust fund.

Mr. Speaker, I urge that we enact this bill today.●

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. STUDDS) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 6813, as amended.

The question was taken.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 5 of rule I and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks, and to include extraneous matter, on the bill just debated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

SAILING SCHOOL VESSELS ACT OF 1982

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 6580) to reform the regulation of sailing school vessels, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 6580

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Sailing School Vessels Act of 1982".

SEC. 2. The Act entitled "An Act to require the inspection and certification of certain vessels carrying passengers", enacted May 10, 1956 (46 U.S.C. 390 et seq.; 70 Stat. 151), is amended as follows:

(1) Subsection (a) of the section is amended by inserting ", or any guest on board a sailing school vessel," after "purposes" in paragraph (5). Such subsection is further amended by striking out "or" at the end of paragraph (5), by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (6) and inserting in lieu thereof "; or", and by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(7) any sailing school instructor or sailing school student.".

(2) Section 2(a) is amended by striking out "and each freight-carrying vessel," and inserting in lieu thereof ", each freight-carrying vessel, and each sailing school vessel". Section 2(a)(3) is amended by striking out "and the crew" and inserting in lieu thereof ", crew, sailing school students and sailing school instructions".

(3) Section 3 is amended by striking out "and freight-carrying vessels" and inserting in lieu thereof ", freight-carrying vessels, and sailing school vessels". Section 3 is further amended by striking out "and crew," and inserting in lieu thereof ", crew, sailing school students, and sailing school instructors," and by inserting after "number of passengers" the following: ", sailing school students, and sailing school instructors".

(4) Sections 4(a), 4(b), and 5 are each amended by striking out "or freight-carrying vessel" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof ", freight-carrying vessel, or sailing school vessel".

(5) The first section is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(f) The term 'sailing instruction' means teaching, research, and practical experience in the operation of vessels propelled primarily by sail and may include any subjects related thereto and to the sea, including but not limited to seamanship, navigation, oceanography, other nautical and marine sciences, and maritime history and literature.

"(g) The term 'sailing school vessel' means a vessel of less than five hundred gross tons which carries six or more individuals who are sailing school students or sailing school instructors and which the Secretary finds is principally equipped for propulsion by sail, whether or not the vessel has any auxiliary means of propulsion, and is owned or demise chartered and operated by an organization described in section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 and exempt from tax under section 501(a) of such Code, as now or hereafter amended, or by any State or political subdivision thereof, during such times as the vessel is operated by such organization or State or political subdivision exclusively for the purposes of sailing instruction. For purposes of this subsection, 'auxiliary means of propulsion' means mechanical propulsion equipment, not exceeding four horsepower, or such larger amount as the Secretary, by regulation, may permit, for each displacement ton of the vessel.

"(h) The term 'sailing school instructor' means any person who is aboard a sailing school vessel for the purpose of furnishing sailing instruction. Such term does not include any operator or member of the crew of such a vessel who is among those required to be aboard the vessel to meet requirement establishing under section 3 of this Act.

"(i) The term 'sailing school student' means any person who is aboard a sailing school vessel for the purpose of receiving sailing instruction.".

SEC. 3. Sailing school students and sailing school instructors shall not be considered to by seamen under the provisions of titles 52 and 53 of the Revised Statutes of the United States and any Act amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto, or for the purposes of the maritime law doctrines of maintenance and cure or warranty of seaworthiness.

SEC. 4. Each owner or charterer of a sailing school vessel shall maintain evidence of his or her financial responsibility to meet any liability incurred for death or injury to sailing school students or sailing school instructors on voyages aboard the vessel, in an amount not less than $50,000 for each student or instructor. Such financial responsibility may be evidenced by policies of insurance or other adequate financial resources.

SEC. 5. For purposes of sections 3, 4, and 6 of this Act, the terms "sailing school students", "sailing school instructor", and "sailing school vessel" have the meaning given such terms in the first section of the Act entitled "An Act to require the inspection and certification of certain vessels carrying passengers", enacted May 10, 1956, (46 U.S.C. 390).

SEC. 6. (a) The Secretary of the department in which the Coast Guard is operating shall, after consultation with representatives, of the private sector having experience in the operation of vessels likely to be certified as sailing school vessels, prescribed rules and regulations to carry out this Act and the Act entitled "An Act to require the inspection and certification of certain vessels carrying passengers", enacted May 10, 1956 (46 U.S.C. 390b), as it related to sailing school vessels. Such rules and regulations shall reflect the specialized nature of sailing school vessel operations, and the character, design, and construction of vessels operating as sailing school vessels. Any manning requirement imposed with respect to sailing school vessels shall take into account the participation of sailing school students and sailing school instructors in the operation of such vessels. Such rules and regulations shall be prescribed not later than eighteen months after the date of enactment of this Act.

(b) Subsection (a) of this section shall take effect on the date of enactment of this Act. This Act (other than subsection (a) of this section) and the amendments made by this Act shall take effect eighteen months after the date of enactment of this Act or on the date upon which the rules and regulations referred to in subsection (a) take effect, whichever is earlier; except that if such rules and regulations take effect more than eighteen months after the date of enactment of this Act, the amendment made by section 2(4) of this Act to section 4(a) of the Act of May 10, 1956, shall take effect three months after the effective date of such rules and regulations.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. STUDDS) will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from California (Mr. MCCLOSKEY) will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. STUDDS).

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of H.R. 6580 is to require the Coast Guard to develop marine safety regulations which are suitable to the unique nature of sailing school vessels. Sailing school vessels are operated by nonprofit educational institutions for the exclusive purpose of teaching students a variety of maritime-related subjects.

The legislation would amend section 46 U.S.C. 390 to include sailing school ships within a category now limited to small passenger and small freight carrying vessels. At present, sailing school ships are regulated either as if they were oceanographic research or large passenger carrying vessels.

The Coast Guard would be required to issue final regulations within 18 months to provide as necessary for the design, construction, alteration, or repair of sailing school vessels, and for their operation, including manning requirements and crew qualifications. More specific regulations in the areas of vessel stability, compartmentation, and utility systems, where sailing ships may differ significantly from other vessel types, may also be necessary.

Federal inspection regulations currently do not provide for sailing school vessels. Under U.S. law, sailing school ships, if not owned by a Government agency, are considered to be passenger vessels. Although regulations applicable to small passenger vessels are to some extent compatible with the operation of sailing vessels, many sailing school ships are larger than 100 gross tons and hence are governed by regulations applicable to larger passenger vessels. Many of these regulations are not appropriate for sailing school vessels, including both the requirement for vessels over 100 gross tons to be constructed of steel, and stability and compartmentation standards better suited to very large vessels.

Some sailing school ships operate under inspection regulations applicable to oceanographic research vessels, but such vessels are required to be engaged exclusively in oceanographic research or instruction. The Coast Guard has interpreted this as prohibiting formal instruction in navigation and seamanship, two primary courses of education on sailing school vessels. Merchant vessel requirements, as well as nautical school ship regulations, are similarly not appropriate for sailing school ships.

The possibility that students or instructors aboard school vessels may be viewed by the courts as seamen entitled to recover damages for injuries under maritime legal doctrines also hampers school ship operations. Wide-ranging liability for injuries to seamen has historically been justified on the grounds that seamen are in need of special protection because they are at the mercy of the vessel's master, and that the vessel operator who derives a profit from their employment should bear the costs of compensating them for their injuries. These justifications do not support the imposition of such broad liability on the operator of a sailing school ship, which operates to provide an educational opportunity for students.

H.R. 6580 would establish a new class of vessels under maritime statutes to be called sailing school ships. The new classification would remove the school ships from certain other vessel classifications, and would also remove students and instructors, although not the crew, from classification as seamen.

The committee held a hearing on this legislation on June 17, and reported the bill without controversy on August 3. Every effort was made to accommodate suggestions from the Coast Guard for clarifying and improving the bill, and I am confident that the legislation as reported is both a sound and a necessary proposal.

I hope very much that it will be approved by the House today.

Mr. McCLOSKEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I think the chairman of the Coast Guard Committee has adequately and accurately stated the situation; but for the record, it should be noted that the Coast Guard and the administration have indicated their opposition to the bill on two grounds; one, that they see no reason or benefit to be gained from treating sailing vessels or sailing school vessels differently from other passenger vessels. I think that argument has been answered by the comments of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Second, the bill provides the Coast Guard with no guidance with respect to the regulatory treatment these tall sailing ships are to receive, and that is certainly true, but it does not seem to me again that the Coast Guard is beyond the talent or the capacity to write adequate regulations; but I wanted those matters noted for the record.

□ 1245

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 minute.

Again, I would like the record to reflect that the administration did not testify in opposition to this bill. Hearings were held, the Coast Guard did testify; there was no great controversy at the hearing.

I would think even the administration would concede we ought not to require sailing vessels to be made of steel.

Mr. Speaker, I urge adoption of the bill.

● Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, the Sailing School Vessels Act of 1982, H.R. 6580, is intended to correct inhibitions on existing law which deter the development and operation of sailing schools by requiring vessels used in these educational programs to meet unnecessary Federal regulations.

Currently, sailing school vessels are not specifically addressed in Federal regulations, but are instead covered by either those designed for passenger vessels or ships involved in oceanographic research. Many of these requirements are inappropriate given the unique use of the vessel and incompatible with its teaching purpose.

Specifically, H.R. 6580 would establish a new class of vessels, "sailing school ships," and require the Coast Guard to promulgate new inspection regulations within 18 months of enactment which address the peculiar design, construction, alteration, or repair of sailing school vessels, as well as their operational requirements, including staffing and crew qualifications. The bill would also eliminate students and intructors, although not crew, from classification as seamen.

I urge my colleagues to vote to suspend the rules and approve this bill, helping at least in a small way to carry on the seafaring traditions of our country through the continuation of the nonprofit sailing schools which operate these vessels and train the sailors of tomorrow.●

● Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I urge support for passage of H.R. 6580, the Sailing School Vessels Act of 1982.

This bill permits the Coast Guard to regulate sailing school vessels used for navigation instruction while taking into account the particular nature of sail-powered vessels. Current statutes provide for regulation of steel-hulled, machine-powered vessels or passenger and ocean research vessels. Vessels propelled primarily by sail do not easily fit into these categories necessitating this change. Specifically, the bill would permit the Coast Guard to address the differences in vessel stability, compartmentation, and utility systems in developing the safety regulations for these vessels. Further, only those who are in the legitimate business of teaching sailing ship navigation would be permitted to operate under this law.

Mr. Speaker, in view of the above, I recommend that we enact H.R. 6580.●

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. STUDDS) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 6580, as amended.

The question was taken.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the provisions of clause 5, rule I, and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill just considered, H.R. 6580.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

FALSE IDENTIFICATION CRIME CONTROL ACT OF 1982

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 6946) to amend title 18 of the United States Code to provide penalties for certain false identification related crimes, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 6946

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "False Identification Crime Control Act of 1982".

SEC. 2. Chapter 47 of title 18 of the United States Code is amended by adding at the end the following:

"§ 1028. Fraud and related activity in connection with identification documents.

"(a) Whoever, in a circumstance described in subsection (c) of this section—

"(1) knowingly and without lawful authority produces an identification document or a false identification document;

"(2) knowingly transfers an identification document or a false identification document knowing that such document was stolen or produced without lawful authority;

"(3) knowingly possesses with intent to use unlawfully or transfer unlawfully five or more identification documents (other than those issued lawfully for the use of the possessor) or false identification documents;

"(4) knowingly possesses an identification document (other than one issued lawfully for the use of the possessor) or a false identification document, with the intent such document be used to defraud the United States; or

"(5) knowingly produces, transfers, or possesses a document-making implement with the intent such document-making implement will be used in the production of a false identification document or another document-making implement which will be so used; or attempts to do so, shall be punished as provided in subsection (b) of this section.

"(b) The punishment for an offense under subsection (a) of this section is—

"(1) a fine of not more than $25,000 or imprisonment for not more than five years, or both, if the offense is—

"(A) the production or transfer of an identification document or false identification document that is or appears to be—

"(i) an identification document issued by or under the authority of the United States; or

"(ii) a birth certificate, or a driver's license or personnal identification card;

"(B) the production or transfer of more than five identification documents or false identification documents; or

"(C) an offense under paragraph (5) of such subsection;

"(2) a fine of not more than $15,000 or imprisonment for not more than three years, or both, if the offense is—

"(A) any other production or transfer of an identification document or false identification document; or

"(B) an offense under paragraph (3) of such subsection; and

"(3) a fine of not more than $5,000 or imprisonment for not more than one year, or both, in any other case.

"(c) The circumstance referred to in subsection (a) of this section is that—

"(1) the identification document or false identification document is or appears to be issued by or under the authority of the United States or the document-making implement is designed or suited for making such an identification document or false identification document;

"(2) the offense is an offense under subsection (a)(4) of this section; or

"(3) the production, transfer, or possession prohibited by this section is in or affects interstate or foreign commerce, or the identification document, false identification document, or document-making implement is transported in the mail in the course of the production, transfer, or possession prohibited by this section.

"(d) As used in this section—

"(1) the term 'identification document' means a document made or issued by or under the authority of the United States Government, a State, local or foreign government, or an international governmental or quasi-governmental organization which, when completed with information concerning a particular individual, is of a type commonly accepted for the purpose of identification of individuals;

"(2) the term 'produce' includes alter, authenticate, or assemble;

"(3) the term 'document-making implement' means any implement or impression specially designed or primarily used for making an identification document, a false identification document, or another document-making implement;

"(4) the term 'personal identification card' means an identification document issued by a State or local government solely for the purpose of identification; and

"(5) the term 'State' includes the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and any other possession or territory of the United States.

"(e) This section does not prohibit any lawfully authorized investigative, protective, or intelligence activity of a law enforcement agency of the United States, a State, or a subdivision of a State, or of an intelligence agency of the United States, or any activity authorized under title V of the Organized Crime Control Act of 1970 (18 U.S.C. note prec. 3481).".

SEC. 3. The table of sections at the beginning of chapter 47 of title 18 of the United States Code is amended by adding at the end the following:

"1028. Fraud and related activity in connection with identification documents.".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HUGHES) will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. SAWYER) will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HUGHES).

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 6946, the False Identification Crime Control Act of 1982 was reported favorably to the House by the Committee on the Judiciary on August 10, 1982, by a voice vote.

False identification, in the last decade, has become a technique widely used by fugitives to avoid apprehension by law enforcement officials. False identification is used by illegal aliens to infiltrate the United States and to take advantage of the opportunities and expensive protection and benefits we provide for our citizens.

The use of assumed identities by criminals is one of the oldest means to avoid detection since criminals began running away from the scene of the crime. In modern society the numerous types of financial transactions and the need for personal security has led to the need to prove one's identity frequently. A person seeking to establish a new identity must therefore obtain the documents that verify that identity or else risk arousing suspicion and apprehension. Hence, there now exists a thriving market in counterfeit and stolen identification documents.

The question of how to deal with the problem has engendered a great deal of thought and study. Six years ago a Federal Commisson on False Identification reported on the need for protection of identification documents.

What has evolved is an ad hoc system that is based on driver's licenses and birth certificates, documents that are issued by the States. We need to protect State-issued documents of identity and it is with that goal that this bill is brought to the House for consideration.

H.R. 6946 creates three new offenses dealing with the counterfeiting and transfer of counterfeit and stolen identification documents and the equipment used to make false identification. It also creates an offense covering the possession of five or more false identification documents, and a prohibition on the possession of false identification documents with the intent to defraud the United States.

These offenses deal only with Government-issued identification and not those used by private organizations. Both State-and local-government-issued identification and foreign governmental or international quasi-governmental identification are also covered.

In the case of State-and local-issue identification, primarily birth certificates and driver's licenses, the bill provides for strong penalties for the production of these documents without lawful authority. That is because driver's licenses and birth certificates are the basic types of identification that are relied upon for the issuance of passports, social security cards and most of the other identification documents that the Nation relies upon.

The bill also carries an important exception for the activities of investigative, protective, and intelligence agencies which often need to produce documents for undercover police officers or to protect Federal witnesses and others.

I want to compliment my good friend from Illinois, HENRY HYDE, for his leadership on this issue. He has worked most diligently for a number of years, almost singlehandedly, to bring this issue to a proper resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I also want to commend my colleague from Michigan, HAL SAWYER, the ranking minority member of the Subcommittee on Crime of the Committee on the Judiciary for his leadership in this area. They have worked most diligently for a number of years to bring this issue to a proper resolution.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is the culmination of more than 8 years of work on the false identification issue by private industry, the Justice Department, many State and local officials, and the Congress.

Mr. Speaker, the administration supports this bill. It is a noncontroversial bill and I urge its passage.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I join the chairman of the subcommittee in urging my colleagues to vote in favor of H.R. 6946, the False Identification Crime Control Act of 1982. This is another bipartisan effort of the Subcommittee on Crime which has been endorsed by the administration.

Testimony before the subcommittee clearly demonstrated that there is an urgent need for Federal legislation to prevent the manufacturers and distributors of false identification documents from peddling their products with impunity. As the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE) demonstrated with the exhibits he presented to the subcommittee, these criminals shamelessly advertise in national magazines to provide identification tailored to the needs of the purchaser. If the buyer is a criminal, or course, these documents facilitate a variety of enterprising exploits—illegal immigration, drug smuggling, and terrorism.

Earlier this year, law enforcement officers in the State of Michigan brought to my attention the fact that false identification manufacturers are fueling the teenage drunk driving problem, while they line their own pockets. Their services are heavily advertised around high school and college campuses and in periodicals aimed at a young audience. While it is true here, as it is with the crime problem in general, that the primary responsibility for addressing this problem is at the local level, there is clearly a role for the Federal Government to play. Certainly, its involvement is appropriate where the trafficking involves Federal documents. In addition, there are many instances where the activities of a manufacturer outside of a State can thwart that State's efforts to protect the integrity of its own documents. In Michigan, for instance, the State police have established a 13-county area crackdown on the use of false identification documents by minors in purchasing liquor. Obviously, Federal obstacles to the influx of false ID's manufactured outside of the State would be of invaluable help.

In response to this problem, I introduced H.R. 6105, which concentrated on manufacturers who send phony ID's to minors. Most of the conduct which would have been proscribed in my bill is contained in H.R. 6946. In addition, H.R. 6946 provides strong penalties for those who produce identification documents without lawful authority or transfer them knowing that they are stolen or unlawfully produced and for those who produce, transfer or possess implements specially designed for producing false identification. The most serious offenses are punishable by a $25,000 fine and/or 5-years imprisonment. Certainly, these penalties will provide a strong disincentive to manufacturers and traffickers in false identification. H.R. 6946, coupled with existing State and Federal laws prohibiting fraud against the Government, will provide an arsenal for the various levels of Government to combat this costly sort of crime.

Let me emphasize to my colleagues that H.R. 6946 covers only major manufacturers and traffickers in false identification documents and hardcore criminals who use multiple documents to create false identities. It would not cover the use of a phony driver's license by a minor to buy liquor. This problem is more appropriately addressed by the State and local governments. However, H.R. 6946 will assist them by detering the manufacture and distribution of false identification documents.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that H.R. 6946 will put an end to the carefree pandering to alcohol abuse and crime by these greedy companies who seem impervious to the suffering that drunk driving and crime generate. I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of H.R. 6946, as it was reported by the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I have no requests for time, and I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE).

Mr. HYDE. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to reach this pinnacle of legislative progress today because it has been at least 5 years since I have been involved with this issue.

It was first brought to my attention by Frances Knight, who was formerly in charge of the Passport Division of our State Department. She presented me with a thick report of an advisory commission, the Federal Advisory Commission on False Identification, which certainly captured my interest because it underscored the dimensions of this very serious problem.

I am pleased to say that with the advent of the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HUGHES) as the ranking member of the Subcommittee on Crime of the Committee on the Judiciary, and the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. HAL SAWYER, who is the ranking Republican on that committee, the legislation finally saw the light of day and received the enthusiastic support of the committee, not only the members of the committee, the distinguished chairman, and ranking member, but the staff who contributed many long hours on this matter; Hayden W. Gregory, Eric Sterling of the majority staff, and Deborah K. Owen of the minority staff, who were indispensable in fashioning this legislation into the excellent bill that it is today, with the support of the Department of Justice.

So with many thanks to all who have contributed, I urge adoption of this very important piece of legislation.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. HYDE. I would be glad to yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

As a member of the Subcommittee on Crime, I recall when the gentleman from Illinois appeared before us and contributed so much to the concept of deterring the use of false ID's and the control of this abuse as one more step in our fight to deter illegal use by criminals.

This was the initiative of the gentleman from Illinois. I want to thank the gentleman for bringing this up, and I compliment the chairman of the committee and the ranking member for bringing this bill to the floor today.

Mr. HYDE. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, let me just say that when this CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is printed, I intend to take these remarks and mail them to Frances Knight as a memento that justice is sometimes delayed but never denied.

Mr. Speaker, as the sponsor of H.R. 352, the bill which was considered by the Subcommittee on Crime, and as sponsor of similar measures in past Congresses, I want to commend the chairman of the subcommittee (Mr. HUGHES) and the ranking minority member (Mr. SAWYER) for recognizing the urgent need for Federal legislation prohibiting the criminal misuse of identification documents. This pernicious crime has been able to thrive upon various loopholes in the Federal law and the inability of individual States to control the counterfeiting of their documents beyond their borders. H.R. 6946, as reported by the Judiciary Committee, will finally enable us to address a phenomenon that has gone unchecked for far too long.

My concern in this area began in early 1977, when Frances Knight, then Director of the Passport Office, called my attention to a report which had just been issued by the Federal Advisory Committee on False Identification (FACFI). The report culminated a 2-year study conducted under the auspices of the Justice Department, and concluded that false identification crime was a serious national problem that had been virtually ignored.

Criminals use false credentials as a shield to prevent law enforcement authorities from discovering their activities in drug trafficking, credit card fraud, passport fraud, illegal immigration, welfare fraud, terrorist activities, and other aspects of organized crime. The cost to American taxpayers was estimated at over $16 billion annually in 1976 when the FACFI report was issued. This was a modest estimate then, and testimony before the subcommittee suggests that the problem is even greater now.

Let me cite a few examples of how false identification facilitates a wide variety of crime. Bernard Welch, the convicted murderer of Washington heart specialist Dr. Michael Halberstam, had more than 20 false identities which he apparently used in fencing stolen valuables. Kristina Bersten, a member of the Baader-Meinhof gang of terrorists in West Germany, used an altered Iranian passport to cross the Canadian border before she was caught in Vermont by Federal authorities, and then deported. The well-known terrorist, Carlos "the Jackal," uses all varieties of false identification as he travels from country to country.

Curbing the misuse of identification documents will have a substantial impact in other problem areas, such as illegal immigration. The attorney general of Illinois, Tyrone Fahner, recently said that spot checks during a 2-week period showed that 45 percent of the aliens who applied for jobless benefits were illegal aliens who were not entitled to such benefits. Every-one of those illegal aliens had a counterfeit card that showed him to be in the United States legally. Mr. Fahner has estimated that unless the practice is stopped, illegal aliens in Illinois will be able to collect as much as $66.2 million each year in fraudulent unemployment benefits. Obviously, Federal legislation which would deter the production of these instrumental documents would lessen the burden of illegal immigration on the States.

The FACFI report identified two legislative problems. First, Federal law generally relates to specific documents and is inconsistent in the activities it proscribes. The offenses are multitudinous and there is an urgent need for an organized and consolidated tool that the prosecutor can use in this area. Second, Federal law does not address interstate trafficking in State documents. This is clearly an area where the States need Federal assistance.

My bill, H.R. 352, was designed to address both of these problems and was specifically endorsed in the FACFI report. The committee's bill, H.R. 6946, clarifies the language of H.R. 352 to bring it more into line with the amendment which I successfully offered to the proposed new Criminal Code 2 years ago. H.R. 6946 also improves the penalties applicable to producers and distributors of phony Federal and State identification documents and the implements used in making them. As reported by the committee, H.R. 6946 will undoubtedly be instrumental in drying up the source of these documents.

Mr. Speaker, 2 years ago, the Judiciary Committee voted to crack down on false identification fraud when it amended the Criminal Code reform bill. Unfortunately, that bill never made it to the floor. Today, in the context of separate legislation, we have another opportunity to close the loopholes in Federal law governing identification documents which give so much aid and comfort to the criminal element in this country. I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 6946.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. MAZZOLI).

PERMISSION FOR COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY TO SIT DURING 5-MINUTE RULE ON WEDNESDAY AND THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 15 AND 16, 1982

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Judiciary be permitted to sit while the House is reading for amendment under the 5-minute rule on Wednesday and Thursday, September 15 and 16, 1982.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further to me?

Mr. HUGHES. I would be glad to yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAZZOLI. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to join in what has been said about my good friend from New Jersey and his leadership on the Subcommittee on Crime of the Committee on the Judiciary, putting forth a bill today with my other good friend from Michigan, Mr. SAWYER. I think it is going to make a very healthy contribution to conquering some of the rampant misuse of documents and, of course, leading to misuse from a crime standpoint. I want to thank him for his leadership.

Mr. HUGHES. I thank the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman knows, this will dovetail very nicely with the comprehensive immigration bill that the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Immigration, Refugees, and International Law of the Committee on the Judiciary has developed and on which our committee is about to begin markup.

I thank the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HUGHES) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 6946, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

PENALTIES FOR CRIMES AGAINST CABINET OFFICERS, SUPREME COURT JUSTICES, AND PRESIDENTIAL STAFF MEMBERS

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the Senate bill (S. 907) to amend sections 351 and 1751 of title 18 of the United States Code to provide penalties for crimes against Cabinet officers, Supreme Court Justices, and Presidential staff members, and for other purposes, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

S. 907

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) subsection (a) of section 351 of title 18 of the United States Code is amended to read as follows:

"(a) Whoever kills any individual who is a Member of Congress or a Member-of-Congress-elect, a member of the executive branch of the Government who is the head, or a person nominated to be head during the pendency of such nomination, of a department listed in section 101 of title 5 or the second ranking official in such department, the Director (or a person nominated to be Director during the pendency of such nomination) or Deputy Director of Central Intelligence, or a Justice of the United States, as defined in section 451 of title 28, or a person nominated to be a Justice of the United States, during the pendency of such nomination, shall be punished as provided by sections 1111 and 1112 of this title.".

(b) Section 351 of title 18 of the United States Code is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(h) In a prosecution for an offense under this section the Government need not prove that the defendant knew that the victim of the offense was an official protected by this section.

"(i) There is extraterritorial jurisdiction over the conduct prohibited by this section."

SEC. 2. (a) The section heading of section 351 of title 18 of the United States Code is amended to read as follows:

"§ 351. Congressional, Cabinet, and Supreme Court assassination, kidnaping, and assault; penalties".

(b) In the table of sections at the beginning of chapter 18 of title 18 of the United States Code, the item relating to section 351 is amended to read as follows:

"351. Congressional, Cabinet, and Supreme Court assassination, kidnaping, and assault; penalties.".

(c) The chapter heading of chapter 18 of title 18 of the United States Code is amended to read as follows:

"Chapter 18—CONGRESSIONAL, CABINET AND SUPREME COURT ASSASSINATION, KIDNAPING, AND ASSAULT".

(d) The table of chapters at the beginning of part I of title 18 of the United States Code is amended so that the item relating to chapter 18 reads as follows:

"18. Congressional, Cabinet, and Supreme Court assassination, kidnaping, and assault ..... 351".

(e) Subsection (c) of section 2516 of title 18 of the United States Code is amended by striking out "(violations with respect to congressional" and all that follows through "assault)" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "(violations with respect to congressional, Cabinet, or Supreme Court assassinations, kidnaping, and assault)".

SEC. 3. (a) Subsection (a) of section 1751 of title 18 of the United States Code is amended to read as follows:

"(a) Whoever kills (1) any individual who is the President of the United States, the President-elect, the Vice President, or, if there is no Vice President, the officer next in the order of succession to the Office of the President of the United States, the Vice President-elect, or any person who is acting as President under the Constitution and laws of the United States, or (2) any person appointed under section 105(a)(2)(A) of title 3 employed in the Executive Office of the President or appointed under section 106(a)(1)(A) of title 3 employed in the Office of the Vice President, shall be punished as provided by sections 1111 and 1112 of this title.".

(b) Subsection (e) of section 1751 of title 18 of the United States Code is amended to read as follows:

"(e) Whoever assaults any person designated in subsection (a)(1) shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both. Whoever assaults any person designated in subsection (a)(2) shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not more than one year, or both; and if personal injury results, shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both.".

(c) Subsection (g) of section 1751 of title 18 of the United States Code is amended by striking out "this section" and inserting in lieu thereof "subsection (a)(1)".

(d) Section 1751 of title 18 of the United States Code is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(j) In a prosecution for an offense under this section the Government need not prove that the defendant knew that the victim of the offense was an official protected by this section.

"(k) There is extraterritorial jurisdiction over the conduct prohibited by this section."

SEC. 4. (a) The section heading of section 1751 of title 18 of the United States Code is amended to read as follows:

"§ 1751. Presidential and Presidential staff assassination, kidnaping, and assault; penalties".

(b) In the table of sections at the beginning of chapter 84 of title 18 of the United States Code the item relating to section 1751 is amended to read as follows:

"1751. Presidential and Presidential staff assassination, kidnaping, and assault; penalties.".

(c) The heading of chapter 84 of title 18 of the United States Code is amended to read as follows:

"Chapter 84—PRESIDENTIAL AND PRESIDENTIAL STAFF ASSASSINATION, KIDNAPING, AND ASSAULT"

(d) The table of chapters at the beginning of part I of title 18 of the United States Code is amended so that the item relating to chapter 84 reads as follows:

"84. Presidential and Presidential staff assassination, kidnaping, and assault ..... 1751".

(e) Subsection (c) of section 2516 of title 18 of the United States Code is amended by striking out "(Presidential assassinations, kidnaping, and assault)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(Presidential and Presidential staff assassination, kidnaping, and assault)".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HUGHES) will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. SAWYER) will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HUGHES).

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to bring this important bill to the floor today. S. 907, a Senate bill, as amended, would add certain high-level Federal officials to the protection of existing Federal law by providing criminal penalties for killing, kidnaping, attempting to kill or kidnap, or assaulting these officers.

Section 351 of title 18 currently protects Members of Congress and Members of Congress-elect. S. 907 would amend section 351 to add Cabinet Secretaries and nominees, and second in command in Cabinet departments; the Director and Deputy Director of the CIA and nominees to be CIA Director; Supreme Court Justices and nominees.

Section 1751 of title 18, protecting the President and Vice President, and President-elect and Vice President-elect, someone legally acting as the President; and if no Vice President those in line of succession to the Presidency.

S. 907 would amend section 1751 to add senior staff members in the President's and Vice President's office to its coverage. The reason behind these amendments is obvious. Those who will be added to the protection of the Federal law are high-ranking Federal officers, officers involved in controversial and high visible activities. Unfortunately, along with their high positions they incur risks to their personal safety. Currently, attacks on these Federal officials can generally be prosecuted only by State and local authorities. While the protections of State and local laws may often be adequate, it seems much better to avoid the inconsistencies in the scope of protection and in the punishment meted out to the attackers by making such attacks Federal crimes to be investigated, prosecuted, and punished by Federal authorities.

S. 907 also makes explicit that these statutes apply extraterritorially, so that no matter where an attack might occur the United States can prosecute. The need for this legislation is especially urgent in light of the tragic attack on President Reagan last year that left his press secretary, Jim Brady, permanently disabled, and the very recent attack on Supreme Court Justice Byron White, which fortunately did not cause serious injury to Justice White.

I do not believe that there is any controversy whatsoever about the substance of S. 907. Indeed, the President just this past Saturday in his radio address singled out S. 907 as one of the pieces of legislation requiring immediate attention by the Congress. I am happy to say this morning that the full Judiciary Committee reported out S. 907, and I do not think we could expedite a piece of legislation any more than we have expedited this particular one.

I want to particularly commend again my distinguished ranking minority member, HAL SAWYER of Michigan, without whose cooperation we could not have had this legislation before the House today. I urge the Members to vote to suspend the rules and pass S. 907, as amended. It is a good piece of legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I want to join the chairman of the subcommittee in urging this body to pass S. 907. This bill generated no controversy during our committee's consideration and has been endorsed by the administration.

Recent attacks on well-known public figures, such as President Reagan, Press Secretary Jim Brady, and Supreme Court Justice Byron White, have highlighted the need for this legislation. S. 907 would make it a Federal crime to kill, kidnap, or assault:

Cabinet heads and persons nominated to those positions;

Deputy Cabinet heads;

The Director of Central Intelligence, a person nominated to be Director, and the Deputy Director;

Supreme Court Justices and nominees; and High-level staff appointed by the President and Vice President.

The subcommittee also made two changes in the bill to clarify certain aspects of these offenses. First, S. 907 will provide for explicit extraterritorial jurisdiction over these offenses. Under current law, for instance, the defendant in the Leo Ryan murder case raised the issue that there was no extraterritorial jurisdiction over that offense. While the Court correctly held, in my view, that there was extraterritorial jurisdiction, there is no guarantee that other courts will make the same decision in the future. S. 907 corrects this deficiency. In addition, it clarifies the fact that the defendant need not be aware of the victim's official status. The Federal interest in protecting these high-level officials is sufficient to warrant excluding such a showing.

As I have frequently pointed out to my colleagues, the Federal Government's role in fighting violent crime is a limited one under our Constitution. S. 907 covers an area where the Federal Government's interest is substantial and the appropriateness of its involvement is unquestionable. I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of S. 907 so that assaults on highly regarded public figures such as Jim Brady will no longer go unpunished under Federal law.

Mr. Speaker, I have no requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HUGHES) that the House suspend the rules and pass the Senate bill, S. 907, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the Senate bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on the Senate bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

DIRECTING CLERK OF THE HOUSE TO MAKE CORRECTIONS IN ENROLLMENT OF H.R. 3517

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, I offer a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 405) directing the Clerk of the House of Representatives to make corrections in the enrollment of H.R. 3517, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the concurrent resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, I make this reservation for the purpose of asking the chairman of the subcommittee to tell us a little more about the concurrent resolution.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman very much for yielding. It is well that this be a matter of record.

What the concurrent resolution does is to simply correct two typographical errors in a measure which the gentleman and I passed through the House just last week, dealing with the U.S. Virgin Islands. It amends, in a sense, a typographical error which occurs on page 1, line 5 of the bill, and changes "1981" to "1982."

On page 6 of the bill at line 7, we change "202(b)" to "201(b)."

They are typographical errors. Otherwise, there is no change in the substance of the bill.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

H. CON. RES. 405

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill (H.R. 3517) to authorize the granting of permanent residence status to certain nonimmigrant aliens residing in the Virgin Islands of the United States, and for other purposes, the Clerk of the House of Representatives shall make the following corrections:

(1) Strike out "1981" in section 1(a) and insert in lieu thereof "1982".

(2) Strike out "202(b)" in section 2(c)(4) and insert in lieu thereof "201(b)".

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY ASSISTANCE GRANTS TO ASSIST TEACHING OF CITIZENSHIP PRINCIPLES

Mr. CORRADA. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 568) to provide Federal grants to assist elementary and secondary schools to carry on programs to teach the principles of citizenship, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 5658

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 582(1) of the Education Consolidation and Improvement Act of 1981 is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of clause (H);

(2) by inserting "and" at the end of clause (I); and

(3) by inserting after clause (I) the following new clause:

"(J) programs to teach the principles of citizenship;".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from Puerto Rico (Mr. CORRADA) will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. ERDAHL) will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Puerto Rico (Mr. CORRADA).

Mr. CORRADA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the legislation before us today will focus national attention on a serious problem affecting our Nation's youth without creating a costly, new Federal program.

H.R. 5658 addresses the problem of our young people's lack of knowledge about government and the responsibilities of citizenship. In subcommittee hearings on this bill, we discovered some alarming trends. Teenagers' understanding of government has declined in recent years. Only a small percentage of persons age 18 to 22 exercise the right to vote. Social problems such as crime, vandalism and alcohol and drug abuse suggest that too many young people are not functioning as responsible citizens.

Despite these trends, citizenship and government classes are receiving lower priority in the school curriculum than they did several years ago.

H.R. 5658 responds to these critical needs without any additional cost to the Federal Government. The legislation, as reported by the Committee on Education and Labor, amends an existing program, the education block grant authorized by chapter 2 of the Education Consolidation and Improvement Act, to allow these funds to be used for programs to teach the principles of citizenship. In keeping with the nature of this block grant, State and local educational agencies will have complete discretion over whether to fund citizenship education programs and the content of these programs.

Thus, we are really talking about a simple piece of legislation that will actually increase State and local flexibility to use Federal funds, while drawing attention to an important area. I urge my colleagues to suspend the rules and pass H.R. 5658.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. ERDAHL. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I want to commend our colleague, the gentleman from Puerto Rico (Mr. CORRADA) for explaining this bill, because it is one that we on the minority join in supporting. I also want to commend the distinguished gentleman from Florida (Mr. BENNETT) not only for his persistence over the years for producing the intent and direction of this bill, but also I think for his flexibility in permitting it to go into law without an appropriation.

On behalf of the minority, I rise in support of H.R. 5658 and want to let the Speaker and Members of the House know that it would be difficult to support a new authorization at a time when many of the more established programs are fighting to hold their own. H.R. 5658, as amended, specifically lists citizenship education among the list of approved activities under the education block grant. This proposal has the virtue of removing any ambiguity regarding the use of chapter II block grant funds for citizenship education, while avoiding the creation of a new separate categorical grant program.

This action would not involve new spending authorization. It would also have the advantage of protecting the duly enacted block grant and of avoiding the precedent of reestablishing categorical grant programs.

This bill was approved unanimously in committee and deserves bipartisan support.

Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time on this side of the aisle, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. CORRADA. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to our distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. BENNETT), who initially introduced this legislation in Congress.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of my bill, H.R. 5658, which would allow education block grant funds to be used by State educational agencies to assist them in establishing and carrying out programs under which students in elementary and secondary schools will be provided instruction in citizenship. The legislation leaves up to the States the content and nature of the instruction.

I strongly encourage the House to approve this legislation. It gives an important thrust to meet an important need in education—and leaves the methods and content under the control of local authorities. No massive bureaucracy is either established or encouraged.

We have all heard or read about youth crime in America. The problem is growing and it is not limited to any particular part of the country or to any one economic group. Crimes are being committed by young people from rich neighborhoods as well as poor; from small towns as well as big cities; from rural areas as well as suburbs.

Arrest statistics from the Justice Department indicate that juveniles account for a disproportionate share of police arrests nationally. In 1980, persons under 18 in our country accounted for 36 percent of the arrests for serious crimes, although that age group—not including those under the age of 10—constitutes but 15 percent of the population.

Youth crime has spilled over to the schools where vandalism costs the Nations's public schools hundreds of millions of dollars a year. In addition, there are tens of thousands of assaults on teachers each year. But as serious as these crime statistics are, they are only symptoms of an illness that is afflicting our schools and our society as a whole. This illness is a lack of knowledge and a lack of practice of the principles of good citizenship in our democracy.

I believe that this deterioration is due in part to the failure of our schools to provide an adequate education in the field of good citizenship and in what good citizenship means to our society and to each of us individually. This failure by the schools—at a time when family life is becoming increasingly fragmented—is giving us a new generation of Americans no longer guided by the principles that have made our Nation great.

Our culture, like that of other civilizations, is built upon widely accepted behavioral values. Although values of our culture may vary somewhat from individual to individual, there are certain basic and accepted values of citizenship in America. One of the most critical factors in the survival of any society has always been its ability to transmit effectively its carefully achieved values to each succeeding generation. Therefore, it becomes a responsibility of our American schools to educate our children about our values—an obligation which is shared with the home, church, the community, and its various agencies.

It is vitally important to the future of America that young people know about the hertiage of America in standards, principles, and behavior—and learn to formulate their citizenship values in an open academic atmosphere where free discussion may improve and strengthen our culture and perhaps our chances for survival.

Enactment of my bill would be a major step in providing the background in citizenship principles which I believe our young people should have in order to become effective, responsible, participating members of society. The recent hearings on my bill in the Elementary Education Subcommittee demonstrated that practical curriculums have been worked out in some locations. What is needed now is a positive expression on the part of the Congress that something in this area must be done on a nationwide scale. My bill, I believe, is such an expression. It is a modest start—but some start must be made.

□ 1315

Mr. CORRADA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNETT. I yield to the gentleman from Puerto Rico.

Mr. CORRADA. Mr. Speaker, I commend the gentleman from Florida (Mr. BENNETT) for his initiative and leadership in bringing this matter to the attention of the Committee on Education and Labor for its consideration. I believe that this is a significant and needed piece of legislation at this time, and I would like to thank the gentleman for his diligence in this matter.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman very much.

Mr. CORRADA. Mr. Speaker, I would also commend our distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Minnesota, (Mr. ARLEN ERDAHL), the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GOODLING), and all the Members of the minority side for their support of this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Puerto Rico, (Mr. CORRADA) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 5658, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

The title of the bill was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the use of education block grant funds to teach the principles of citizenship."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. CORRADA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on the legislation just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Puerto Rico?

There was no objection.

REEMPLOYMENT RIGHTS FOR MEMBERS OF THE NATIONAL GUARD AND RESERVE

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 6788), to amend title 38, United States Code, to clarify the period for which an employer is required to grant an employee who is a member of the National Guard or Reserve a leave of absence in order to allow the employee to perform required active duty for training.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 6788

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 2024(d) of title 38, United States Code, is amended by inserting after the first sentence the following new sentence: "However, an employer is not required to grant such a leave of absence for a total of more than three hundred and sixty-five days (excluding required weekend drills and required annual two-week training periods) within any thirty-six month period.".

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BENNETT). Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. MONTGOMERY) will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. NAPIER) will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. MONTGOMERY).

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the chairman of the Subcommittee on Education, Training and Employment, the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, (Mr. EDGAR).

Mr. EDGAR. Mr. Speaker, presently the job of a member of the Reserves or National Guard who is absent from civilian employment to perform active duty for training for more than 90 days is not protected under the veterans' reemployment rights program administered by the Department of Labor. These are the tours of training duty other than initial active duty training, weekend drills and 2-week summer encampments, which are clearly protected by existing law.

The great majority of the more than 900,000 members of the National Guard and Reserves do not need active duty training of greater than 90 days duration. However, according to the Department of Defense, there are approximately 6,000 members of the Reserves and National Guard nationwide who are annually required to take training in excess of 90 days, for this small group, there is no protection under current law as interpreted by the Department of Labor that their jobs will be there when they return to their civilian employment.

H.R. 6788 amends existing law to provide that a member of the National Guard or Reserves who is absent from civilian employment to perform active duty for training for more than 90 days will have reemployment protection for up to 12 months within 3 calendar years.

The Congressional Budget Office advises there would be no cost to the Government with the enactment of this legislation. On July 22, by unanimous voice vote, the committee ordered the bill reported to the House. The administration favors the enactment of H.R. 6788, and there is no objection to the bill. I strongly recommend that the bill be favorably considered and passed.

Mr. NAPIER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 6788, a bill designed to clarify the rules of reemployment with respect to certain members of the National Guard or Reserve military forces who are required to perform active military duty for training.

Mr. Speaker, this bill provides that the individuals concerned who enter active service duty for training for in excess of 90 days will have reemployment rights so long as the total period of training is not in excess of 12 months within any 36-month period.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 6788 seeks to provide reemployment protection for a relatively small but important group of about 6,000 reservists and guardsmen. Recent court decisions have limited historic protection to those individuals called to active duty for training for periods not exceeding 90 days in any 3-year period.

Mr. Speaker, this bill balances reservists' and guardsmen's rights with our military needs and with the needs of employers who must grant leave. It is a bill supported by the Department of Defense and the Department of Labor. It results from rather extensive consideration by the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, and particularly our Subcommittee on Education, Training and Employment. In this connection, I congratulate our chairman, the Honorable SONNY MONTGOMERY, our subcommittee chairman, (Mr. EDGAR), the ranking member of the subcommittee, the gentlewoman from Massachusetts (Mrs. HECKLER), and the ranking Republican member of the full committee, the gentleman from Arkansas, (Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT). H.R. 6788 is a good bill and I urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I, therefore, yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR.), a distinguished member of our Committee on Veterans' Affairs, for any comments that he would like to make.

Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. MONTGOMERY) one question with reference to this bill.

As I understand the matter, an employer is required to grant leave of absence, with job reinstatement rights, to an employee summoned to active or inactive duty for training with the National Guard or Reserves for up to 365 days within a 3-year time span, exclusive of leave time required for weekend drills and annual 2-week training sessions. As I understand it, that is the bottom line of this bill?

Mr. MONTGOMERY. The gentleman is correct. Weekend drills and the 2-week annual encampment, are covered under another provision of law.

Mr. SAM B. HALL, Jr. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. MONTGOMERY).

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly support H.R. 6788, which clarifies congressional intent in reference to reemployment rights for members of the National Guard and Reserve.

Last year, the Labor Department ruled that members of the Reserve components who are called to active duty or inactive duty for training for periods of more than 90 days, were not entitled to reinstatement of their jobs.

This came as a surprise since, historically, the Department of Labor had taken the position that members of the Reserve and National Guard who were absent from their civilian employment for the purpose of performing active or inactive duty for training were entitled to reinstatement to their jobs under the veterans' reemployment rights program, regardless of the length of such training.

Two recent decisions handed down by the Fifth Judicial Circuit of the U.S. Court of Appeals, are the basis for the new Labor Department policy on the extent of protection for reservists, as provided in the veterans' reemployment rights program. Simply stated, the new policy limits for the first time the protection of reservists of National Guardsmen on active duty for training for 90 calendar days every 3 years. The Department of Defense cannot live with this new policy and supports legislation to correct the problems the new Labor Department policy has created.

Upon learning of this change in policy, I introduced H.R. 5209, a bill similar to H.R. 6788. Hearings were held by the Subcommittee on Education, Training and Employment on H.R. 5209 at which the administration and public witnesses testified.

This new interpretation of the law and its effects on the members of the Reserve and National Guard who attend training for longer than 90 days is of great concern to the committee and the Department of Defense cannot live with it. The Labor Department has misread the ruling of the courts involving two cases pertaining to employment rights for active duty for training purposes and thus we find ourselves having to legislate to provide job security for a few critical members of our total force.

As reported, a member of the Reserve or National Guard who is absent from civilian employment to perform active duty for training for more than 90 days will have reemployment protection for up to 12 months within 3 calendar years.

I want to express my appreciation for the cooperation and assistance of JOHN PAUL HAMMERSCHMIDT, ranking minority member of the committee. In addition, I commend BOB EDGAR, chairman of the Subcommittee on Education, Training and Employment, for his leadership in developing and advancing this legislation, and the cooperation and assistance of MARGARET HECKLER, the ranking minority member of the subcommittee as well as all of the members of the subcommittee.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the adoption of the bill as reported by the committee.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. MONTGOMERY) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill. H.R. 6788.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

TECHNICAL CORRECTIONS ACT OF 1982

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 6056), to make technical corrections related to the Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981, the Crude Oil Windfall Profit Tax Act of 1980, and the Installment Sales Revision Act of 1980, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 6056

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; AMENDMENT OF 1954 CODE.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the "Technical Corrections Act of 1982".

(b) AMENDMENT OF 1954 CODE.—Except as otherwise expressly provided, whenever in this Act an amendment or repeal is expressed in terms of an amendment to, or repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

TITLE I—AMENDMENTS RELATED TO ECONOMIC RECOVERY TAX ACT OF 1981

SEC. 101. AMENDMENTS RELATED TO TITLE I OF THE ACT.

(a) AMENDMENTS RELATED TO SECTION 101.—

(1) EFFECTIVE DATE FOR AMENDMENT TO SECTION 21.—Paragraph (1) of section 101(f) of the Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981 (relating to effective dates for rate cuts) is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof the following: "; except that the amendment made by paragraph (3) of subsection (d) shall apply to taxable years ending after December 31, 1981".

(2) RATE REDUCTION TAX CREDIT.—Section 6428 (relating to 1981 rate reduction tax credit) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) SPECIAL RULES.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) INDIVIDUALS TO WHOM 50 PERCENT MAXIMUM RATE OR 20 PERCENT CAPITAL GAIN RATE APPLIES.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—In the case of any individual to whom this paragraph applies, in determining the amount of the credit allowable under subsection (a)—

"(i) the portion of the tax imposed by section 1 determined under section 1348(a)(2) (as in effect before its repeal by the Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981), and

"(ii) the portion of the tax imposed by section 1 determined under subsection (a)(2)(B) of section 102 of the Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981, shall not be taken into account.

"(B) INDIVIDUALS TO WHOM PARAGRAPH APPLIES.—This paragraph applies to any individual if the tax imposed by section 1 for the taxable year is determined under—

"(i) section 1348 (as in effect before its repeal by the Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981), or

"(ii) section 102(a)(2) of the Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981.

"(2) SPECIAL RULE FOR TAX IMPOSED BY SECTION 402(e).—The tax imposed by subsection (e) of section 402 shall be treated as a tax imposed by section 1."

(3) ELIMINATION OF 50-CENT ROUNDING ERRORS.—If any figure in any table—

(A) which is set forth in section 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (as amended by section 101 of the Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981), and

(B) by striking out "such person's domestic crude oil" and inserting in lieu thereof "such person's qualified production of oil", and

(C) by striking out the last sentence.

(3) Clause (i) of section 4992(d)(3)(B) (relating to small producer transfer exemption) is amended by striking out "has the property" and inserting in lieu thereof "has the interest".

(e) AMENDMENT TO SECTION 4993.—Subparagraph (B) of section 4993(c)(2) (relating to requirements for qualified tertiary recovery project) is amended to read as follows:

"(B) the date on which the injection of liquids, gases, or other matter begins is after May 1979,".

(f) AMENDMENTS TO SECTION 4994.—

(1) Subparagraph (A) of section 4994(c)(2) (relating to refunds for tertiary projects of integrated producers) is amended by striking out "the taxpayer" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "the producer".

(2)(A) Paragraph (1) of section 4994(e) (defining exempt Alaskan oil) is amended to read as follows:

"(1) from a well located north of the Arctic Circle or from a reservoir from which oil has been produced in commercial quantities through such a well, or".

(B) Paragraph (2) of section 4994(e) is amended by striking out "the divide of the Alaskan-Aleutian range" and inserting in lieu thereof "the divides of the Alaska and Aleutian ranges".

(g) AMENDMENTS TO SECTION 4995.—

(1) Subparagraph (A) of section 4995(a)(3) (relating to adjustments for withholding errors) is amended—

(A) by striking out "removed during any calendar year", and

(B) by striking out "removed during the same calendar year".

(2) Paragraph (3) of section 4995(a) is amended by striking out subparagraph (C) and by redesignating subparagraph (D) as subparagraph (C).

(3) Subparagraph (B) of section 4995(a)(4) (relating to time payment deemed made) is amended by striking out "The producer" and inserting in lieu thereof "For purposes of this chapter (and so much of subtitle F as relates to this chapter), the producer".

(h) AMENDMENTS TO SECTION 4996.—

(1)(A) Paragraph (1) of section 4996(a) (defining producer) is amended by redesignating subparagraph (B) as subparagraph (C) and by inserting after subparagraph (A) the following new subparagraph:

"(B) NET PROFITS INTERESTS.—Except to the extent otherwise provided by regulations, in the case of any property, all cost recovery oil covered by a net profits agreement (within the meaning of subsection (h)) shall be treated as produced by the parties to such agreement in proportion to their respective shares (determined after reduction for such cost recovery oil) of the production of the crude oil covered by such agreement."

(B) Subparagraph (A) of such paragraph (1) is amended by striking out "subparagraph (B)" and inserting in lieu thereof "subparagraphs (B) and (C)".

(C) Section 4996 (relating to other definitions and special rules) is amended by redesignating subsection (h) as subsection (i) and by inserting after subsection (g) the following new subsection:

"(h) TERMS USED IN SUBSECTION (a)(1)(B).—For purposes of subsection (a)(1)(B) and this subsection—

"(1) NET PROFITS AGREEMENT.—The term 'net profits agreement' means an agreement entered into (or renewed) after March 31, 1982, and providing for sharing part or all of the production of crude oil from a property where—

"(A) 1 or more persons are to be reimbursed for qualified costs by the allocation of cost recovery oil, and

"(B) 1 or more persons are to receive a share of any production of crude oil from the property remaining after reduction for the cost recovery oil referred to in subparagraph (A).

"(2) COST RECOVERY OIL DEFINED.—The term 'cost recovery oil' means crude oil produced from the property which is allocated to a person as reimbursement for qualified costs paid or incurred with respect to the property.

"(3) QUALIFIED COSTS.—The term 'qualified costs' means any amount paid or incurred for exploring for, or developing or producing, 1 or more oil or gas wells on the property.

"(4) SCOPE OF AGREEMENT.—A net profits agreement shall be treated as covering only shares of production of crude oil held by persons who hold economic interests in the property (determined without regard to subsection (a)(1)(B))."

(D) Subsection (b) of section 4988 (relating to net income limitation on windfall profit) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(6) COST RECOVERY OIL COVERED BY NET PROFITS AGREEMENT.—For purposes of paragraph (2), if any person is treated under section 4996(a)(1)(B) as the producer of any portion of the cost recovery oil covered by a net profits agreement (within the meaning of section 4996(h))—

"(A) such person (and only such person) shall include in his gross income from the property the gross income from such portion, and

"(B) the qualified costs allocable to such portion shall be treated as paid or incurred by such person (and only by such person)."

(E) If 90 percent or more of the remaining production referred to in subparagraph (B) of section 4996(h)(1) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 is to be received by governmental entities, and organizations described in clause (i), (ii), or (iii) of section 4994(b)(1)(A) of such Code, which do not share in the costs referred to in subparagraph (A) of such section 4996(h)(1), then the requirement of paragraph (1) of section 4996(h) of such Code that the agreement be entered into (or renewed) after March 31, 1982, shall not apply.

(2)(A) Paragraph (1) of section 4996(b) (defining crude oil) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "In the case of crude oil which is condensate recovered off the premises by mechanical separation, such crude oil shall be treated as removed from the premises on the date on which it is so recovered."

(B) Paragraph (3) of section 4996(b) (defining domestic) is amended by striking out "an oil well" and inserting in lieu thereof "a well".

(i) AMENDMENTS RELATED TO SECTION 4997.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Subsection (a) of section 4997 (relating to records and information; regulations) is amended by striking out "such information" and inserting in lieu thereof "such statements and other information".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from Florida (Mr. GIBBONS) will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from New York (Mr. CONABLE) will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Florida (Mr. GIBBONS).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill presently under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

□ 1330

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this is a completely noncontroversial proposal from the Committee on Ways and Means. It is in line with our customary action each year where the Committee on Ways and Means examines those revenue acts that are before it and, on a consensus basis, makes technical corrections and clarifications that are necessary to those acts.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, and as I hope all Members know, we have an excellent staff on the Committee on Ways and Means and the joint committee staff. They cooperated together with the Treasury Department and with the private sector and with all of the Members of the Congress, particularly the Members of the Ways and Means Committee, to put this legislation together.

There is absolutely no controversy with this legislation. It has been cleared by all sides and been passed unanimously by the Committee on Ways and Means.

I will be glad to answer any questions.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIBBONS. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Because of the scheduling, the gentleman from New York (Mr. CONABLE) was here earlier, but is now on his way back to the floor and, as I understand, will be here in a moment. But I just wanted to find out from the gentleman whether or not this was something which has the approval of the minority.

Mr. GIBBONS. Absolutely, yes sir. I can assure you unequivocally. The administration also approves of the bill.

Mr. WALKER. The administration is in support of it?

Mr. GIBBONS. The administration and the minority support the bill and, as far as I know, there is no objection.

I will be glad to describe the details of the bill.

Mr. WALKER. If the gentleman would provide us with a couple of details from the bill it might give time for the minority Member to get here and to have his views recorded on this.

I would thank the gentleman.

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Speaker, H.R. 6056, the Technical Corrections Act of 1982, contains technical, clerical, conforming and clarifying amendments to provisions enacted in the Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981, the Crude Oil Windfall Profit Tax Act of 1980, the Installment Sales Revisions Act of 1980, the Bankruptcy Tax Act of 1980, and certain other tax legislation enacted in 1980.

H.R. 6056 was introduced on April 1, 1982, by Mr. CONABLE and myself. Comments were invited on the bill and a public hearing was held by the Committee on Ways and Means on April 27, 1982. The committee approved several technical amendments on May 11, 1982, as a result of the testimony and comments received from the Treasury Department, the Internal Revenue Service, tax practitioners, and the general public.

The bill is divided into three titles. The first title provides technical amendments to the Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981. The second title provides amendments to the Crude Oil Windfall Profit Tax Act of 1980; and the third title provides amendments to the Installment Sales Revision Act of 1980, the Bankruptcy Tax Act of 1980, and other tax legislation enacted in 1980.

Mr. Speaker, the amendments made by H.R. 6056 are designed only to make technical or clarifying changes and to rectify inadvertent drafting errors and omissions. The committee made every effort to avoid making any substantive changes to the 1980 and 1981 tax legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to approve H.R. 6056, the Technical Corrections Act of 1982.

Mr. CONABLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, we have before us an important piece of tax legislation which has resulted from many hours of bipartisan effort by the minority and majority members of the Committee on Ways and Means. Specifically, H.R. 6056, the Technical Corrections Act of 1982, contains a series of technical amendments to three already-enacted tax laws: the Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981, the Crude Oil Windfall Profit Tax Act of 1980, and the Installment Sales Revision Act of 1980.

Each of these pieces of legislation effected major changes in the Internal Revenue Code. Because of their complicated makeup, it was inevitable that some clarification and corrections would be necessary to precisely delineate congressional intent and to eliminate ambiguities of the initial legislation. I believe H.R. 6056 generally accomplishes both of these desirable goals.

The importance of completing action on this legislation as soon as reasonably possible is also apparent. Many taxpayers are awaiting action by Congress to determine the applicability of the original pieces of legislation. I support its prompt adoption.

● Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, I rise to support H.R. 6056, the Technical Corrections Act of 1982.

This legislation makes a much needed technical correction to the Crude Oil Windfall Profit Tax Act of 1980 so as to insure that the State of California and the city of Long Beach will enjoy the full exemption from taxation afforded to governmental entities under the act. The principal beneficiary of this curative amendment will be postsecondary educational institutions as State law earmarks these oil revenues for their use and support.

The State of California and the city of Long Beach contract with a consortia of private companies to operate governmentally owned tideland oil fields. The contract, let on public bid, pays the contractors a 5-percent share of net profits. It is the application of these net profit contracts to the economic interest test, as set forth in the Windfall Profit Tax Act, which has caused this tax problem unique to California and Long Beach. H.R. 6056 cures this problem by crediting all expense oil under these net profit contracts on the basis of contract interest.

The adoption of this legislation will eliminate the current inequitable situation and will place California and Long Beach on parity with all other governmental entities in the future development of their oil interest. I urge your support of H.R. 6056 and this much needed curative amendment.●

● Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 6056, the Technical Corrections Act of 1982. H.R. 6056 exempts the State of California and the city of Long Beach from the windfall profit tax on oil. This tax has been applied to the city and State under the provisions of the Crude Oil Windfall Profit Tax Act of 1980 because of the unique "net profits" agreement the city of Long Beach and the State lands commission have with a consortium of private oil companies for production of oil on public lands in my district of California.

However, a reading of the legislative history of the Windfall Profit Tax Act of 1980 makes it abundantly clear that the intent of Congress with the Windfall Profit Tax Act was to exempt revenues to States and other governmental units from the tax if the oil revenues were used for public programs.

Mr. Speaker, by State of California law Long Beach revenues go to the public education system. I can imagine few wiser choices for spending oil revenues, which because of serendipity lie under the city of Long Beach, than to contribute to the education of future generations of Americans.

Because of a Department of Treasury ruling, the Treasury has withheld windfall profit tax money totaling nearly $50 million. However, the corrections encompassed in H.R. 6056 are applied retroactively, thereby restoring to the city of Long Beach and the State of California these moneys in a most timely fashion because of the current economic hardships facing my district. Furthermore, it is estimated that this clarification of the intent of the Windfall Profit Act will save the city and State a total of $20 million each year.

Mr. Speaker, I have for the past two Congresses introduced legislation that would accomplish this fair and much needed correction. This year, I have worked with my good friend and colleague, BOB MATSUI, who sits on the Committee on Ways and Means to insert this provision in a technical tax corrections bill, which because this is a technical correction is where this provision belongs. I am most appreciative of the contributions of my California colleagues on Ways and Means in getting this worthy provision passed.●

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time.

In conclusion, I want to say that the Committee on Ways and Means approved this technical corrections bill not because the committee makes a lot of errors but because we are proud of the work we do. The committee trys to be extremely accurate, and sure that taxpayers, tax practitioners, and the Government know exactly what is intended by the Congress.

I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MONTGOMERY). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Florida (Mr. GIBBONS) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 6056, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EARTHQUAKE HAZARDS REDUCTION ACT OF 1977 AUTHORIZATION

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 6272) to amend the Earthquake Hazards Reduction Act of 1977 to extend authorizations of appropriations, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 6272

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

TITLE I—EARTHQUAKE HAZARDS REDUCTION PROGRAM

SEC. 101. (a) Section 7(a) of the Earthquake Hazards Reduction Act of 1977 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(4) There are authorized to be appropriated to the Director, to carry out the provisions of sections 5 and 6 of this Act, $1,281,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1983, and such sums as may be necessary for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1984.".

(b) Section 7(b) of such Act is amended by striking out "and" after "1981;", and by inserting "; $33,843,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1983; and such sums as may be necessary for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1984" before the period at the end thereof.

(c) Section 7(c) of such Act is amended by striking out "and" after "1981;", and by inserting "; $25,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1983; and such sums as may be necessary for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1984" before the period at the end thereof.

(d) Section 7(d) of such Act is amended by striking out "and" after "1981;", and by inserting "; $475,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1983; and such sums as may be necessary for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1984" before the period at the end thereof.

(e) Section 7(e) of such Act is amended by striking out "the fiscal year ending September 30, 1982" and inserting in lieu thereof "each of the fiscal years ending September 30, 1982, September 30, 1983, and September 30, 1984".

TITLE II—MULTIHAZARD RESEARCH, PLANNING, AND MITIGATION

SEC. 201. Section 302 of Public Law 96-472 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(c) For the fiscal year ending September 30, 1983, there are authorized to be appropriated to the Director—

"(1) $2,774,000 to carry out section 301, which amount shall include—

"(A) not less that $300,000 to carry out the purposes of paragraphs (1) through (6) of such section;

"(B) such sums as may be necessary, but in any case not less than $939,000, for use by the United States Fire Administration in carrying out paragraph (7) of such section; and

"(C) not less than $1,535,000 to carry out paragraph (8) of such section with respect to those large California earthquakes which were identified by the National Security Council's Ad Hoc Committee on Assessment of Consequences and Preparations for a Major California Earthquake and with respect to other high seismic risk areas in the United States; and

"(2) such further sums as may be necessary for adjustments required by law in salaries, pay, retirement, and employee benefits incurred in the conduct of activities for which funds are authorized by paragraph (1) of this subsection.".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. WALGREN) will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. WEBER) will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. WALGREN).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 6272.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, at the outset I want to recognize the work of the members of the Subcommittee on Science, Research and Technology of the Science and Technology Committee, and in particular the contribution of the ranking minority member, the gentlewoman from Massachusetts, Mrs. HECKLER, and the others for their assistance in preparing this bill.

This is the third time the Earthquake Hazards Reduction Act of 1977 has been reauthorized. In addition, this year marks the third year that the Federal Emergency Management Agency has had responsibility for implementing the Earthquake Act and multihazard, research, planning, and mitigation programs.

Since both of these programs are a part of FEMA, our subcommittee authorized both programs in a single bill.

Although this authorization is not large, it is important. I want to directly address the reason the committee recommended an authorization that is $3,939,000 above the President's budget submittal, $939,000 for the multihazard, research, planning, and mitigation program, and the $3 million balance for the earthquake hazards reduction program of the U.S. Geological Survey.

The bulk of the fire programs conducted at the U.S. Fire Administration have already been authorized for fiscal year 1983. They were authorized in Public Law 97-80, which was last year's authorization bill, and these programs do not need to be reauthorized this year.

However, one program, the emergency first response program, was only authorized for fiscal year 1982 so that the committee could monitor the progress of this program during its first year of existence.

The committee has found that this program was extremely cost effective in training firefighters to respond to all types of hazards.

This program identifies and packages emergency management plans and procedures which then can be used by fire departments across the country to respond to a variety of hazards.

Although Government programs are often criticized as spending money on planning and really nothing more, I think reasonable people will agree that planning is the be all and the end all of saving lives.

If our emergency response is not planned in advance, there will be no good response. The end result will be that property and lives which would not have been lost will in fact be lost.

Since most of the agency's programs are covered by the standing 2-year authorization, no further action is required except for the extension of the emergency first response component.

Providing authorization for the full range of the USFA programs will allow the agency to use its appropriation in the most effective and productive way. That is why we bring this authorization, $939,000 above the President's budget submission, to the House floor for renewal.

At this level the authorized funding would be level to and equal with that of fiscal year 1982.

Turning to the area of earthquakes, the most vivid indication of needed action comes from the report entitled "An Assessment of Consequences and Preparation for a Major California Earthquake."

The report estimates that a repeat of the 1906 San Francisco earthquake which took 700 lives and destroyed buildings costing, in 1978 dollars, about $170 million, probably would not cause $24 billion in damages, cause up to 5,000 lives lost and 700,000 injuries. If a similar earthquake occurred in the Los Angeles area it would probably cause losses of about $45 billion and as many as 23,000 deaths.

Going east, a repeat of the New Madrid, Mo., earthquakes of 1811-12, estimated by many to have been the most violent series of earthquakes in the United States, could cause losses in the Midwest comparable with the "worst case" estimates for San Francisco or Los Angeles.

The significance of this threat is why our bill has $3 million above the President's submission for the U.S. Geological Survey to be devoted to the first phase of an earthquake prediction network. Existing instrumentation networks in sourthern California are for earthquake prediction research, not for an operational earthquake prediction.

The instrumentation and communication devices in place are not at the level of reliability that is needed for an operational system. Instrumentation networks must be geographically comprehensive and data generated must be analyzed immediately, 24 hours a day, at a central location.

At present the data from some instrumentation is collected only every few weeks. Consequently we are approaching the occurrence of a catastrophic earthquake in southern California in only a research mode.

□ 1345

Current earthquake monitoring systems in southern California are characteristic of current earthquake monitoring systems throughout the United States. By beginning to fully instrument and monitor one well-known fault area on an operational level, we as the Congress are recognizing that it is time to take the next step leading to the ability to make reasonable predictions about earthquakes for the country as a whole. California is not alone in the threat of earthquake activity. All or part of 39 States lie in regions classed as having major or moderate seismic risk. Within those 39 States more than 70 million people are vulnerable to Earth movements strong enough to threaten life and property. We have, certainly, the responsibility to take reasonable measures to anticipate the threats to their lives and property.

The earthquake hazard reduction and multihazard authorizations of this bill represent a 6.6-percent increase over the President's budget request. We believe that this sum is an effective investment in preventing life and property losses that will happen if we do not make this investment. I urge the other Members of the House to support the emergency efforts being made across the country by local firefighters in their emergency response teams and protecting against the very real hazards of earthquake and other kinds of emergencies in establishing this kind of an effort on a Federal level.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALGREN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GONZALEZ. I thank the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania for yielding, and I rise in support of this effort. I wish to commend the gentleman and the subcommittee for this work. I think it is very important work. The sense of security is, as the gentleman has well put it, kind of deceptive. I was going to ask a question, but there is no question in my mind that enough is known now scientifically that the predictions are almost mathematically accurate, and the ability to predict which has been developed in the last 5 years alone shows clearly that we have very special areas of responsibility in this country, particularly in such areas as California.

I have long supported this legislation. My interest also stems from the fact that I am now chairman of the Subcommittee on Housing and Urban Development, and I have been a member of that for 20 years. We had hearings on the housing programs and their impact on lessening the destructiveness of an earthquake. Therefore, my concern is very keen. The only question I have is whether at this time, under the pressure of budgetary restrictions, we are not being a little bit too economical. Is the level of authorization we are requesting here realistic, in the gentleman's opinion?

Mr. WALGREN. We feel—I think I can speak on behalf of the committee, or certainly some strong feelings of individual members of the committee—that this is adequate to cover the very immediate steps that we can take, and we honestly believe that out of this is going to come an awareness and a sensitivity to this problem that will make us feel that we should be taking broader steps, particularly in the housing area and the structural planning, to protect lives in such an event. As the gentleman says, we have done little, and the threat is extreme.

Mr. GONZALEZ. I commend the gentleman and his associates on the subcommittee once again for doing a very good job, despite the handicap of lack of awareness, I guess you could say. It is so hard to try to set up a climate for sympathetic consideration for something that has not happened. I commend the gentleman for his very wonderful work, very important work. This is really crucial work. I hope that the gentleman will succeed in arousing more concern and greater support. I certainly want to volunteer any kind of personal help that I, as one individual Member, could render to the subcommittee.

Mr. WALGREN. We certainly appreciate and honor that interest and commitment of the gentleman. Before I came to Congress and in my first several years here prior to becoming chairman of the subcommittee, I was not actively involved in this area. But I think the Congress as a whole deserves credit for its foresight in this area. The fact that we are doing this much I believe is an indication that the people can have confidence that there are reasonable people in the Congress who are trying to look down the road and make prudent investments in areas that affect their safety. This is one of those prudent investments.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Once again I commend the gentleman.

Mr. WALGREN. I thank the gentleman for his remarks, and I commend the gentleman for his interest in the subject.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from West Virginia (Mr. RAHALL).

Mr. RAHALL. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 6272 was jointly referred to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs due to our oversight responsibilities for the U.S. Geological Survey within the Department of the Interior. On May 12 of this year the Interior Committee by a unanimous voice vote ordered the bill favorably reported to the House.

The earthquake hazards reduction program, established by the Earthquake Hazards Reduction Act of 1977, provided an opportunity for participation in a national program by State and local governments, industry, universities, and other professionals. Without the direction and coordination provided in the 1977 act, the national program would lack direction in focusing on earthquake problems.

Several objectives were enumerated in the act to accomplish the ultimate goal of reducing the loss of lives and property from earthquakes: Earthquake resistent construction; earthquake prediction; development of model code; earthquake-related issue comprehension; public education; earthquake hazard mitigation research; and seismic phenomena research.

The U.S. Geological Survey carries out scientific research and engineering studies that contribute to a better understanding of earthquake hazards. Results of USGS research are communicated to others for use in construction designs for hospitals, government buildings, houses, dams, nuclear power-plant sitings, and oil pipelines, to name a few uses.

The Geological Survey is responsible for conducting five specific tasks set down in the implementation plan of the Earthquake Hazards Reduction Act. They are:

First, to conduct research on the nature of earthquakes, earthquake prediction, earthquake hazards evaluation, and induced seismicity;

Second, to prepare national seismic risk maps;

Third, to evaluate earthquake hazards on a regional basis;

Fourth, to provide data and information on earthquake occurrences and hazards; and Fifth, to evaluate earthquake predictions with the advice of a National Earthquake Prediction Evaluation Council.

A sixth task—to acquire, analyze, and disseminate strong ground motion data—is currently performed by the Geological Survey for the National Science Foundation.

Mr. Speaker, the successful implementation of the earthquake hazards reduction program will be a valuable tool in preventing a mass catastrophe. On behalf of MORRIS UDALL, chairman of the Interior and Insular Affairs Committee and JIM SANTINI, chairman of the Mines and Mining Subcommittee, I urge my colleagues' support in reauthorizing this program.

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time.

Mr. WEBER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, we all tend to assume that it is only our colleagues from California who have reason to be concerned about the dangers and destruction caused by earthquakes. While it is true that California is located in an extremely hazardous zone, the fact is that studies have shown 39 States lie in regions classed as having major and moderate seismic risk. Thus the scope of possible earthquake destruction could affect as many as 70 million American citizens. This authorization provides for an extensive earthquake hazards and risk assessment program, global seismology studies, and the operation of seismic engineering programs. In addition to scientific studies on earthquakes, this legislation also provides for multihazard planning in order that we may better cope with emergencies when devastating earthquakes occur. The possible panic and crisis situation that would exist should another major earthquake strike San Francisco or Los Angeles, point out the absolute necessity of planning now for all contingencies. The United States has been truly fortunate in the post-World War II era that no major catastrophic earthquakes have taken place in the seismically active zones under many of our major cities. We cannot continue to rely exclusively on that good fortune. This authorization helps provide the needed research and the planning and mitigation programs that can make the effects of a major earthquake less devastating to the population.

The committee has provided approximately $4 million more in this authorization than the administration has requested. This additional authorization has come primarily in two areas. First, there is $3 million more provided to fund several design studies for instrumenting fault zones in southern California. Second, $939,000 extra is authorized for the emergency first responder program. I have no particular quarrel with either of these two programs, but I do question whether they are truly needed when this Congress is working so hard to control the growth of the Federal budget. I think it best that we stand back for a couple of years and look at these types of programs and see whether further on down the road they should figure prominently in our list of high priority items. While the dollar amounts are relatively small in these instances, we all know that these are exactly the types of programs that have caused the Federal deficit to mushroom so in the last 20 years. For example, once the California earthquake design studies are completed, I am certain in future years we would see a further request for Federal funding of an extensive monitoring system. I am not saying that this is necessarily bad, but I do have some question as to whether this should be a Federal responsibility. I want to express a note of caution that this could possibly lead to substantial Federal expenditures in the future.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. WALKER), a member of the committee.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I join with the gentleman in noting that there is no particular controversy about this bill, and everybody agrees with the merits of the bill. It appears to have administration support. But I think we do need to emphasize the fact that it is a bill that comes in here over budget. It is about $4 million over budget, as the gentleman from Minnesota has pointed out. That $4 million is a relatively small amount, it is a relatively small amount as this bill goes, it is a relatively small amount as the total budget goes; but the fact is that all of these drops in the ocean are exactly what has created the ocean of debt that this Nation is now faced with. If every time we get a bill like this on the floor, with an item in it that raises the amount of money being spent over the budget request, we are in fact contributing to expanding that ocean of debt in the future. So I would hope that, as the House passes this bill—and it seems evident that the House will—we will realize that we are passing a budget buster, albeit a fairly small one, but also recognize that the administration will request of the other body that they amend the bill and try to bring that spending limit down.

I think there is one other point that needs to be made. One thing that concerns me about the procedure we are using here in bringing such bills up under this particular calendar, under the Suspension Calendar, is that we are precluded from the opportunity of making those kinds of amendments here in the House. We now see a bunch of bills being crowded onto the Suspension Calendar where probably the House should have a chance to work its will rather than taking them up under this process. I have no doubt in my mind that if this bill came up under regular procedures and an amendment was offered to eliminate the $4 million, this House would probably adopt that amendment, and it would get us within the budget. We are precluded from that opportunity. I am disappointed to see that we are now going to have a jam of bills on the Suspension Calendar which will keep us from maintaining some kind of budget control. I would hope that we would have some review of the kinds of things we are doing under the Suspension Calendar to allow this House to exercise its rights with regard particularly to budget matters.

□ 1400

Mr. WEBER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. WEBER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I would lke to commend the gentleman for again expressing his concern; and, in a broader context, I commend the gentleman for being the watchdog of this House on budgetary matters, whether they be relatively small matters, such as the budget that we are considering today, or the larger programs when the gentleman finds the entire House filled to listen to him basically preaching the same message for pieces of legislation where the matters in excess of the budget were not a few million but tens of billions of dollars.

I would join with the gentleman in pointing out that although this bill is not going to find me in opposition, time and time again when we take up different pieces of legislation, we very rarely find a piece of legislation coming before this House which is under budget.

So these matters add up one on the other. This is how we build the size of the deficit we have.

I would also like to commend the gentleman for continuing to bring to the attention of Members the problems we face with regard to the procedures of the House and the rules under which legislation such as this are considered that make it difficult for the membership to exercise their judgment as it would like to do.

Again I do not object to this bill, but I would like to commend the gentleman for his continued vigilance in watching the taxpayers' money being spent.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman. I think the gentleman made the point well in his statement that what we are dealing with here is a situation where we have a fairly small amount of money; but I think the House needs to continue to be on notice that even these small amounts of money should be watched because in total they are a problem for our budget deficits.

● Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 6272. The bill authorizes appropriations for the Earthquake Hazards Reduction Act of 1977 and for the multihazards research planning and mitigation program for fiscal year 1983. The U.S. Geological Survey, the National Science Foundation, the National Bureau of Standards Center for Building Technology, and FEMA have key roles in carrying out the national earthquake hazards reduction program.

Mr. Speaker, as one Member from California I am acutely aware of the potential hazards of a severe earthquake. My State lives in expectation of the inevitability of such an occurrence. The Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) currently assesses a 5- to 8-percent probability per year of a catastrophic earthquake in California. But California is only one of many States where earthquakes occur. Perhaps the most violent quakes on record in the United States occurred in New Madrid, Mo., in 1811 and 1812. Another event of large magnitude took place near Charleston, S.C., in 1886. Geologists believe that earthquakes are likely in more than 30 States, although the probability in any one spot is much less than that in the Pacific States.

A catastrophic earthquake in California could cause $20 to $50 billion in direct property damage and 5,000 to 25,000 fatalities. Proper prediction and response planning are critical to reduce losses and provide for recovery of an impacted community following an earthquake. Dr. Philip Abelson wrote in the October 2, 1981, Science magazine:

> Present knowledge and experience do not permit dependable and accurate forecasting of the time of an earthquake. Some of them are attended by obvious premonitory phenomena, others are not. Through observing and heeding such phenomena, the Chinese were successful in avoiding great loss of life in one instance. On another occasion, precursors were now evident and several hundred thousand lives were lost. Ultimately, there will be better understanding of the events culminating in major quake. For now, the most practical approach is to identify the likely locations and magnitudes of earthquakes and to design structures to withstand the disturbances. Around the world most of the lives lost in earthquakes have resulted from collapse of buildings.

Clearly, an earthquake prediction system can be a critical component of an earthquake program. For this reason, the authorizing committees have included funding for the U.S. Geological Survey to develop a prototype earthquake prediction network for continuous geophysical monitoring of the fault systems threatening major California population centers. Such a program could be expanded to other earthquake-prone areas of the country once working experience had been gained in California.

The nature of earthquake prediction is such that Federal involvement is critical. Prediction networks must cover wide areas, cross jurisdictional boundaries, and require great coordination. It is difficult to envision the successful establishment of a prediction network without the help of the Federal Government. This is true with most complex issues, but is especially true in a field where the Federal Government is the acknowledged leader, such as meteorology and geophysics. Ultimately, the burden of a major earthquake will fall on the Federal Government. No State can come close to coping with the billions of dollars in damages caused in the aftermath of a major earthquake.

I urge my colleagues to support the programs included in this legislation designed to improve predictive capability, prepare emergency response plans, and engage in earthquake-related research.

Another hazard of constant concern is fire. FEMA is also the coordinator of the Federal effort in preventing and controlling fire. Most of the fire programs at FEMA are conducted at the U.S. Fire Administration (USFA).

Annually, fires in this Nation cause approximately 8,000 deaths, 300,000 injuries and over $5 billion of destroyed property. If one included the total cost of meeting fire and building codes, installing protective systems, maintaining fire departments and insuring property, the total rises to a staggering $21 billion.

The national fire picture becomes more grim in light of arson statistics. The national direct loss due to arson is estimated at $1.23 billion per year. This is a figure that is comparable to losses due to other major crimes such as larceny-theft, $1.1 billion, or burglary, $1.4 billion. Beyond this, tax losses due to arson multiply these losses many times. Arson is a cruel killer. Over 700 lives are lost each year to arson. It is evident that our Nation needs increased emphasis on prevention and control of fire. However, the President's budget proposals do not include funding of the USFA. Since the creation of the USFA in 1974, it has provided a Federal focal point for development of programs to prevent and control fires. The programs of the USFA need to be continued.

Title II of this bill authorizes the multihazard, research, planning, and mitigation program at FEMA which combines programs applicable not only to earthquakes and fires but also to other hazards. Mitigation and response plans for earthquakes and fires can be applied to other hazards. Furthermore, a hazard such as an earthquake may be accompanied by other manmade and natural disasters in the course of events and a multihazards mitigation and response plan will be necessary to deal with these related problems. Considerable cost savings could be achieved by using this approach of advanced integrated planning for different hazards. It is the key to whether we simply put up with repeated loss of life and property from the many hazards that we face, or whether we move to prevent them, and to use our resources more efficiently to recover from them.

Let us work toward programs which insure the most effective and coordinated investment in reducing the costly penalty of earthquakes, fires, and other hazards.

I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 6272.●

Mr. WEBER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I have no more requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Speaker, I have no more requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman fron Pennsylvania (Mr. WALGREN) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 6272.

The question was taken and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Senate bill, S. 2273, to amend section 7 of the Earthquake Hazards Reduction Act of 1977 (42 U.S.C. 7706) to extend authorizations for appropriations, and for other purposes, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do so because it was my understanding that the administration is going to seek an amendment to bring this bill within the budget in the Senate. Is the action we are about to take going to preclude the administration from having the opportunity to reduce the spending by $4 million in the Senate?

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALGREN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, that is not my understanding although I do not profess to study what happens in the other body.

Mr. WALKER. Further reserving the right to object, let me understand the procedure that we are going through here. We have a Senate passed bill we are substituting now for the House passed bill.

Does that mean that we are going to go to conference and that we have a Senate passed bill that is within the $60 million limit that we could bring back a conference report on that would meet budget standards?

Mr. WALGREN. It is my understanding we would still be in the position to negotiate with the Senate as to what their position is and that that negotiation would occur either in a conference——

Mr. WALKER. Further reserving the right to object, does the Senate passed bill come within the $60 million of expenditures that the administration has requested?

Mr. WALGREN. It is my understanding that the Senate passed bill is the same as the President's request.

Mr. WALKER. So that would meet the $60 million standard. So what we would have then is a negotiation between the House and Senate with regard to a spending limit of $60 million or $64 million or somewhere in between; is that correct?

Mr. WALGREN. That seems to make sense.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman, and I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. WALGREN)?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

S. 2273

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That paragraph (3) of section 7(a) of the Earthquake Hazards Reduction Act of 1977 (42 U.S.C. 7706(a)(3)) is amended by inserting the following immediately before the period at the end thereof: "; and for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1983, $3,100,000 to carry out the purposes of this Act".

SEC. 2. Section 7(b) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 7706(b)) is amended by striking "and" after "1981;", and by inserting "; and $30,843,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1983" immediately before the period at the end thereof.

SEC. 3. Section 7(c) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 7706(c)) is amended by striking "and" after "1981;", and by inserting "; and $25,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1983" immediately before the period at the end thereof.

SEC. 4. Section 7(d) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 7706(d)) is amended by striking "and" after "1981;", and by inserting "; and $475,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1983" immediately before the period at the end thereof.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. WALGREN

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WALGREN moves to strike all after the enacting clause of the Senate bill, S. 2273, and to insert in lieu thereof the provisions of the bill, H.R. 6272, as passed by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title of the Senate bill was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend the Earthquake Hazards Reduction Act of 1977 to extend authorizations of appropriations, and for other purposes."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill, H.R. 6272, was laid on the table.

TECHNICAL CORRECTIONS IN HEALTH LAWS

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 6355), to make technical corrections in health and other laws amended by the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1981, and for other purposes, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 6355

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a)(1) section 931(a) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1981 is amended by striking out " '1980,' " in paragraphs (1), (2), and (3) and inserting in lieu thereof " '1980;' ".

(2) Section 1001(c), 1003(b), and 1005(b) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 300(c), 300a-1(b), 300a-3(b)) are each amended by striking out the comma after "1981" and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon.

(b) Section 936(b)(1) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1981 is amended by striking out "300m(d)(1)(B)(ii)" and inserting in lieu thereof "300m(d)(1)(B)".

(c) Section 942(i) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1981 is amended by striking out " 'feasible (1)' " and inserting in lieu thereof " 'feasible (i)' ".

(d)(1) Section 963(b)(4) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1981 is amended by striking out "clause (2)" and inserting in lieu thereof "clause (3)".

(2) Section 311(a)(3) of the Comprehensive Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism Prevention, Treatment, and Rehabilitation Act of 1970 (42 U.S.C. 4577(b)(3)) is amended by striking out the period at the end and inserting in lieu thereof a comma.

(e) Section 965(a) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1981 is amended by striking out paragraph (A) and by redesignating paragraphs (B), (C), and (D) as paragraphs (1), (2), and (3), respectively.

(f) Section 1101(b) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 300b(b)) (as in effect before its repeal by section 2193(b)(1) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1981 is amended byt inserting a comma after "1981".

(g) Section 2741(a)(3) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1981 is amended by striking out "and 'and' ".

SEC. 2. (a) Section 338B(e) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 254m-(e)) is amended by inserting before the period the following: "or under section 225 as in effect on September 30, 1977".

(b) Section 337(a) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 254j(a)) is amended by striking out "carrying out this subpart" and inserting in lieu thereof "carrying out this subpart (other than section 338G)".

(c) Section 338D(b) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 254o(b)) is amended by striking out "section 338F(b)" and inserting in lieu thereof "section 338E(d)".

(d) Section 338E(d)(1) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 254p(d)(1)) is amended by striking out "section 338D(c)" and inserting in lieu thereof "section 338D(b)".

(e) Section 1536 of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 300n-5) (as amended by section 935 of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1981) is amended by striking out "this title and" inserting in lieu thereof "this title and—".

(f) The second sentence of section 1904(a)(1)(F) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 300w-3(a)(1)(F)) is amended by striking out "equipment for the systems" and inserting in lieu thereof "equipment for the systems (other than systems with respect to which grants were made as prescribed by section 1905(c)(2))".

(g) Effective October 1, 1982, section 1912(b) of the Public Health Service Act is amended to read as follows:

"(b)(1) From the remainder of the amount appropriated under section 1911 for any fiscal year, the Secretary shall allot to each State an amount which bears the same ratio to such remainder for that fiscal year as the amounts—

"(A) which would have been provided by the Secretary to the State and entities in the State under section 301 of this Act for mental health services demonstrations and under the Community Mental Health Centers Act and the Mental Health Systems Act for mental health services for fiscal year 1981 if the Secretary had obligated all the funds for such purposes available for such Acts under Public Law 96-536, and

"(B) provided by the Secretary to the State and entities in the State under the laws referred to in subparagraphs (D) and (E) of paragraph (2) for fiscal year 1980, bore to the total amount appropriated for mental health services demonstrations and mental health services for fiscal year 1981 under Public Law 96-536 for section 301 of this Act, the Community Mental Health Centers Act and the Mental Health Systems Act and the total amount appropriated for fiscal year 1980 for the provisions of law referred to in subparagraphs (D) and (E) of paragraph (2).

"(2) The provisions of law referred to in paragraph (1) are the following provisions of law as in effect on the day before the date of the enactment of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1981:

"(A) The Community Mental Health Centers Act.

"(B) The Mental Health Systems Act.

"(C) Section 301 of this Act.

"(D) Sections 301 and 312 of the Comprehensive Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism, Prevention, Treatment, and Rehabilitation Act of 1970.

"(E) Sections 409 and 410 of the Drug Abuse Prevention, Treatment, and Rehabilitation Act.

"(3) For purposes of paragraph (1), the total amount appropriated under Public Law 96-536 for mental health services demonstrations under section 301 of this Act shall be deemed not to exceed $20,000,000; and if such total amount did exceed $20,000,000, the amount that would have been provided to each State and entities in each State shall be ratably reduced for purposes of paragraph (1)(A) to conform to the limit prescribed by this paragraph.

"(4) To the extent that all the funds appropriated under section 1911 for a fiscal year and available for allotment in such fiscal year are not otherwise allotted to States because—

"(A) one or more States have not submitted an application or description of activities in accordance with section 1915 for the fiscal year;

"(B) one or more States have notified the Secretary that they do not intend to use the full amount of their allotment; or

"(C) some State allotments are offset or repaid under section 1916(b)(3); such excess shall be allotted among each of the remaining States in proportion to the amount otherwise allotted to such States for the fiscal year without regard to this paragraph.".

(h) Section 1915(c)(5) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 300x-4(c)(5)) is amended (1) by inserting "procedures for" before "procedural", and (2) by striking out "review procedures" and inserting in lieu thereof "review".

(i)(1) Section 1915(c)(6)(A)(i) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 300x-4(c)(6)(A)(i)) is amended—

(c)(1) Section 709(d) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 292i(d) is amended to read as follows:

"(d) Funds appropriated under this title may be used by the Secretary to provide technical assistance in relation to any of the authorities under this title.".

(2) Title VIII of such Act is amended by adding at the end the following:

"TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE

"SEC. 857. Funds appropriated under this title may be used by the Secretary to provide technical assistance in relation to any of the authorities under this title.".

(d) Section 1602(f)(2) of such Act is amended by inserting after "including" the following: "selling real property pledged as security for such a loan or loan guarantee and".

(e) Section 306(l)(2) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 242k(l)(2)) is amended by striking out subparagraph (D) and redesignating subparagraphs (E), (F), and (G) as subparagraphs (D),(E), and (F), respectively.

(f) Section 308(d) of the such Act (42 U.S.C. 242m(d)) is amended (1) by inserting ", if an establishment or person supplying the information or described in it is identifiable," after "No information", and (2) by striking out "authorized by guidelines in effect under section 306(l)(2) or under regulations of the Secretary" and inserting in lieu thereof "such establishment or person has consented (as determined under regulations of the Secretary) to its use for such other purpose".

(g) Section 330(d)(2) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 254c(d)(2)) is amended by inserting before "and the costs" the following: ", the costs of repaying loans made by the Farmers Home Administration for buildings,".

(h) Section 207(a)(1) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 209(a)(1)) is amended by inserting "psychology," after "pharmacy,".

(i) Section 302 of the Health Planning and Resources Development Amendments of 1979 (Public Law 96-79) is repealed.

SEC. 7. (a) Title of the Public Health Service Act is amended by adding at the end the following new part:

"PART F—OTHER AGENCIES OF THE NATIONAL INSTITUTES OF HEALTH

"NATIONAL INSTITUTE FOR OCCUPATIONAL SAFETY AND HEALTH

"SEC. 481. The National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health is an agency of the National Institutes of Health.".

(b)(1) Subsections (a) and (b) of section 22 of the Occupational Safety and Health Act of 1970 (29 U.S.C. 671) are amended by striking out "in the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare".

(2) Subsection (b) of such section 22 is amended by adding after the first sentence the following: "The Institute shall be an agency of the National Institutes of Health.".

(3) Such section 22 is amended by striking out "Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare" each place it occurs and inserting in lieu therof "Secretary of Health and Human Services".

SEC. 8. (a) The paragraph beginning with "Service and supply fund:" under the heading "PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE" in the Federal Security Agency Appropriation Act, 1946, (42 U.S.C. 231) is amended by inserting ", or in advance," after "stock furnished".

(b)(1) The matter in section 1706(a) (42 U.S.C. 300u-5(a)) of the Public Health Service Act preceding paragraph (1) is amended by striking out "Health Information, Health Promotion and Physical Fitness and Sports Medicine" and inserting instead "Health Promotion".

(2) The heading to section 1706 (42 U.S.C. 300u-5) of such Act is amended to read "Office of Health Promotion".

(c) The first sentence of section 311(c)(2) (42 U.S.C. 243(c)(2)) of the Public Health Service Act is amended by striking out "forty-five days" and inserting instead "six months".

SEC. 9. Section 340(g) (42 U.S.C. 256(g)) is amended (1) by striking out "and" after "1980," in paragraph (1) and by inserting before the period in that paragraph a comma and "and $3,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1982", and (2) by inserting "and" after "1980," in paragraph (2) and by striking out in that paragraph ", and $3,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1982".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. MADIGAN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California (Mr. WAXMAN) will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. MADIGAN) will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California (Mr. WAXMAN.)

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the principal purpose of H.R. 6355 is to correct errors made in drafting the various health portions of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1981. Public Law 97-35 was drafted last summer in considerable haste and this legislation is intended to rectify some of our grammatical and typographical mistakes.

The legislation also contains a number of additional provisions which are necessary to streamline and improve administration of various health authorities. These provisions include allowing advance payments to the National Institutes of Health's service and supply fund and extending the period of time States may receive technical assistance during health emergencies. These provisions were included at the suggestion of the Department of Health and Human Services.

In addition, the legislation contains three largely noncontroversial provisions the first of which would provide an authorization of appropriations for 2 fiscal years for the training of nurse anesthetists. These funds will help ease the current shortage of nurse anesthetists in U.S. hospitals.

The second and more controversial provision would transfer administration of the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health to the National Institutes of Health. The shift would enhance the interaction between Federal researchers in occupational and environmental health, and improve the ability of NIOSH to obtain resources and attract qualified scientists.

The third would permit the use of community health center grants for the purpose of repaying Farmers Home Administration Act loans made for the purpose of constructing new buildings.

Mr. Speaker, the legislation was reported by unaminous voice vote of the Committee on Energy and Commerce. I urge support for the committee proposal.

Mr. MADIGAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. BROYHILL).

Mr. BROYHILL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the motion to suspend the rules and pass H.R. 6355. I take this action for one simple reason: This bill contains a provision which is sufficiently controversial as to violate the suspension procedure.

The principal problem with this bill is that it proposes to transfer the National Institute of Occupational Safety and Health (NIOSH) from its parent centers for disease control (CDC) to the National Institutes of Health (NIH). This amendment was not discussed in public hearings before the committee, as acknowledged in House Report 97-793.

Before discussing the problems with this transfer which cause difficulty, I want to advise the House that there has been no comparable legislation acted on by the Senate.

I oppose this transfer for a number of reasons. The principal among these is that the mandated mission of the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health (NIOSH) is incompatible with the existing mission of the National Institutes of Health (NIH). This is so for a number of reasons:

First. NIOSH is mandated to respond to requests for health hazard evaluations and is authorized to use warrants and subpenas for right of entry and right of access to data. NIH neither has nor depends on these field response capabilities;

Second. NIOSH is authorized to recommend health based standards to the Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) and the Mine Safety and Health Administration (MSHA), while NIH conducts or supports research on which these standards may be based;

Third. NIOSH is mandated to carry out programs to test and certify personal protective equipment. NIH is not involved in regulating industry in any manner.

In addition, the centers for disease control is the principal agency of the Public Health Service concerned with the prevention of illness and premature death. By contrast, NIH, through stimulating and supporting basic investigator initiated research, works to improve human health by acquiring new scientific knowledge. This is a clear divergence between the application of existing knowledge on the one hand and the expansion into new areas of intellectual endeavor on the other.

Further, occupational safety and health research as performed by NIOSH focuses heavily on identifying and characterizing work place conditions that cause disease or injury and on recommending technologies for prevention. This requires an emphasis on subjects not generally within the purview of NIH—such as industrial accidents, mining, and engineering—and outside the mission of NIH (regulation).

Finally, the centers for disease control operate national surveillance systems not only for infectious disease but also for chronic environmental health problems through a network of State and local public health agencies. This CDC expertise is important for the assessment of the magnitude of health problems, the monitoring of national trends, and the conduct of epidemiological studies that will assist NIOSH in identifying effective control mechanisms. NIH is not involved in such national surveillance activities.

For these reasons, it should be clear that this provision renders the bill H.R. 6355 indisputably controversial. Consideration of this provision under suspension of the rules, a procedure designed to expedite the passage of noncontroversial items, would do violence to the rules of this House. For this reason alone, if not for substantive reasons enumerated above, I urge my colleagues to oppose the motion and return this bill to the Union Calendar for consideration at a later time under the usual procedural rules of the House.

□ 1415

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Energy and Commerce, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL).

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I thank my good friend and colleague, the gentleman from California (Mr. WAXMAN) for yielding to me on this measure.

This bill was reported by a voice vote from the Committee on Energy and Commerce. It was part of an agreement and an understanding between the majority and the minority. Our good friends and colleagues, the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. BROYHILL) and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. MADIGAN) came to an agreement with our friend and colleague, the gentleman from California (Mr. WAXMAN) with regard to the content of this legislation.

No controversey attached to the legislation at the time it was under consideration in the Committee on Energy and Commerce.

There are some strong arguments for all parts of the bill. First of all, the technical amendments make sense, have no controversy, and have significant merit and will make the Public Health Service function better.

Second of all, moving the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health to NIH makes excellent good sense. First of all, the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health is a research institution. It engages in research. It is not a regulatory body.

OSHA, the regulatory body which deals with occupational safety and health, is in the Department of Labor.

NIOSH was put, at the insistence of our former friend and colleague, the Honorable Jacob Javits, the Senator from New York, into the Department of Health and Human Services to conduct research and to separate it from the regulatory agency, OSHA; so there is no OSHA regulatory function which exists at NIOSH. NIOSH has a research grant program administered at this particular minute through the National Institute of Health's Division of Research Grants. NIOSH has a sister agency at the National Institute of Health which does similar work, the National Institute of Environmental Health Sciences.

It appears to be extraordinary good sense to move the two programs under one agency so that duplication, waste, and overlap can be eliminated, and so that the two might have close and intimate contact and coordination under the aegis of the National Institutes of Health.

As mentioned, the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health has a grant program which is already administered through the National Institutes of Health. As mentioned, this is legislation, which comes without controversy from the Committee on Energy and Commerce, was reported by a voice vote after agreements between the majority and the minority, and certainly the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. BROYHILL) is to be commended for his part in that agreement, as is the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. MADIGAN).

Mr. BROYHILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BROYHILL. I think the record needs to be corrected. I do not recall being a part of the agreement on this particular amendment. There may have been other agreements.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DINGELL. I thank the gentleman.

I was of the impression that the gentleman from North Carolina was a part of the understanding. In any event, my good friend, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. MADIGAN) was a part of it.

Mr. BROYHILL. The gentleman from Illinois did agree on this amendment. He will have to speak for himself; but my agreement did not go to this amendment.

Mr. DINGELL. Well, I am always delighted to commend the gentleman from North Carolina, because I have the most intense respect and affection for the gentleman, as I do for my good friend, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. MADIGAN), to whom now I happily yield.

Mr. MADIGAN. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman for yielding.

I intend to speak on all of this later; but I think there are three things at issue. One is health planning, the other was the National Institutes of Health; the third was this technical corrections bill, originally urged upon us by the Department.

The gentleman from North Carolina, the gentleman from Michigan, and the gentleman from California, with the gentleman from California (Mr. WAXMAN) and myself, were all parties to an agreement to move those bills in a certain order and the provisions of the health planning bill were discussed and the provisions of NIH were discussed; but in fairness to the gentleman from North Carolina, while he agreed to the procedure and to the particulars of health planning and NIH, I do not believe that the particulars of this technical corrections bill were ever discussed with him; so I do not believe that the gentleman has a commitment to the provisions of the technical corrections bill. I believe that I do, because I knew what was in it.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. DINGELL. I am delighted to yield. I just want to observe that the gentleman from Illinois has always kept his commitments to me in a most honorable fashion.

I am delighted to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WAXMAN. I also want to add my recollections to the record. The gentleman from Illinois, the ranking minority member of our subcommittee, did agree to the substance of all that is in this proposal before us today; but we always knew that the administration opposed the transfer of NIOSH to NIH and that in agreeing to move the various health bills before our committee in a certain fashion, that we did not plan to waive the substantive arguments later down the road.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MADIGAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BLILEY).

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Speaker, we have been asked to suspend the rules in order to consider on the floor the matter of the organizational placement of the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health. But I must raise two warnings. In the first place, this is not a minor "technical amendment" to legislation, but rather a substantive reordering of programs that would have a significant impact on the health operations of NIOSH, a $60 million agency. And, we are being offered political shenanigans that would be sold to us under the label of improved organizational effectiveness. We should not let ourselves become victims of the hoax.

Let us examine the impact of this amendment. NIOSH is now a part of the Centers for Disease Control, which is the principal Agency of the Public Health Service concerned with the prevention of illness and premature death. NIOSH fits well in this organizational environment where the focus is on pragmatic and service-oriented health programs.

NIOSH conducts field investigations to evaluate health hazards in the workplace—an activity akin to the well know epidemic assistance provided by CDC. There are other similarities. NIOSH provides scientific recommendations to regulatory agencies as CDC does in the area of clinical laboratory practice and immunization. NIOSH carries out regulatory powers in its testing and certification of personal protective equipment, whereas CDC enforces the Nation's foreign quarantine requirements.

The amendment would move NIOSH out of this compatible organizational environment, and place it in the National Institutes of Health. Although there is some similarity between the two in that both conduct research, there is a significant difference in the focus of that research. NIOSH focuses heavily on identifying workplace hazards that cause injury or disease. This is directed research that must be related to prevention through regulation or other means. At the Bethesda campus we have, on the other hand, the Nation's premier biomedical research organization whose sole mission is to acquire new scientific knowledge. I submit that even in the one area of apparent similarity, research, there are very important differences between NIOSH and NIH. The Director of NIH has stated that the NIOSH mission is incompatible with that of NIH. Therefore, we must consider carefully the diversionary and detrimental impact that would result by the mismatch of the other mandated NIOSH activities, which can be confrontational in nature, on the basic research environment of NIH. To do this work, we, the Congress, have authorized NIOSH to use warrants and subpenas in the execution of right of entry and right of access to data. These are hardly the tools of Nobel Prize winners. I reiterate, this bill is not a technical amendment.

I contend that the motivations are purely political. The amendment is being offered as a part of a partisan political effort to reverse the move of NIOSH headquarters from the Washington area to Atlanta, Ga.

Appropriation language was passed which stopped that move midstream, with the top NIOSH leadership in Atlanta, and a dissident support staff remaining in Rockville, Md. Obviously, it is more difficult to exert day-to-day influence on an organization located more than 600 miles away. This current amendment is a blatant maneuver to deepen the disruption of NIOSH by having it report to another organization located in the Washington area—NIH. This ploy is being proposed by those who, under the cover of last year's budget conflicts and crises, slipped through an apparently innocent provision which has handcuffed an important health agency. However, this move is not simply a political ploy. The long delays and disruption caused by postponing the transfer of NIOSH to the CDC is causing serious safety hazards to America's workers. For 12 long months, the move of the NIOSH headquarters has been in limbo. This hiatus has resulted in the discontinuation or delay of program activities and in missed opportunities. For example, we are still waiting for the production of the scientific document on radio frequency microwaves. Plans to upgrade some 20 standards have for the most part been delayed and, it has been impossible to proceed with plans to improve the effectiveness of the NIOSH safety program. We cannot allow this sort of thing to continue to jeopardize the safety and health of our Nation's work force. In fact, we should take steps now to assure that last year's mistake is corrected.

Mr. MADIGAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. DANNEMEYER).

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my colleague, the gentleman from Illinois, for giving me these 3 minutes. I very much appreciate his courtesy.

Mr. Speaker, there are about 751 permanent employees of this agency, most of whom work here in the Washington area. I am sure that many of these employees will watch this debate with a great deal of interest. The reason? Because this controversy, ostensibly part of a minor technical bill, is nothing more than an illustration of how the Washington bureaucracy deals with those who seek to effect change.

One year ago, a decision was made to transfer the 10-year-old Agency from Washington, D.C., to Atlanta, Ga., and to Cincinnati, Ohio, in an effort to improve the effectiveness of the Agency.

What happens when that decision is made by management? Employees of the Agency react by saying, "Who is trying to do this to us now? What plot is afoot to deprive us of working in the Washington area where we have our families, our friends, and our children in school? We are not going to stand still for this. We will fight this move." So they organize as a part of an effort to teach those in charge of the bureaucracy, "Thou shalt not move us without our concurrence."

So employees have now fought the efforts of the administration to move this function to Atlanta where in the judgment of the administration, it belongs. Last year those opposed to the move were successful in getting an amendment to the appropriations bill which prohibited the move. So these people are now trying to prevent a move to Atlanta. We in this Chamber should not countenance this effort for two reasons: One, the current proceeding is designed for noncontroversial measures. This is certainly not one of that type. It is a controversial measure. It should have been brought up under ordinary rules, under the procedure whereby amendments could have been offered on the floor of the House.

Second, I do not believe that we in the Congress have the background and knowledge to know frankly where this activity should best be placed. I believe that the administration's position should be respected and the bill should be rejected.

□ 1430

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY).

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

I find the comments of the previous speaker quaint, to be kind.

In my judgment, the action of the gentleman from California (Mr. WAXMAN) and the action of the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. MADIGAN) and the full committee have been appropriate in this instance.

Mr. Speaker, I must come to the House and confess that virtually every dollar which has been added to the NIOSH budget over the past few years in the Appropriations Subcommittee has been added at my urging, because of the importance of their mission. But I must say that without significant restructuring of the bureaucratic procedures under which that organization operates, it is very difficult for me to recommend to the House additional funding for that Agency.

The fact is that CDC, in which NIOSH presently is lodged, is a fine instrument, the finest the Nation has, in terms of attacks on infectious diseases. But NIOSH is misplaced within that agency because the mission of NIOSH is not to deal with infectious diseases; it is to deal with the different kinds of diseases that have nothing whatsoever to do with the skills with which epidemiologists may have gained in tracking infectious deseases.

It seems to me, therefore, highly appropriate that the committee does what it is doing today. We do not need NIOSH to be an HEW version of OSHA. We need them to be the best scientific agency we can possibly support, and to do that I think we need them attached directly to what is, I think by common agreement in this place, to be attached to the best scientific arm in the country, which is NIH.

I simply want to say that I recognize that this issue is essentially an arcane one in terms of the average layman or in terms, even, of the average Member of this House who is not privileged to serve on the committee with jurisdiction today, or the Appropriations Subcommittee with jurisdiction in this area.

But I think what the committee is doing is terribly important. As we all know, NIOSH has been criticized on many occasions in the past for the quality of the research which it has brought to a number of the issues under its purview. This is very simply an effort to rearrange the bureaucratic structure so that NIOSH has the best opportunity possible to produce the best quality research which is used by other Government agencies.

I think the committee is absolutely right in the substance and the end process of this procedure.

Mr. MADIGAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I think perhaps the most important responsibility that any Member of this body has to the institution and to the other Members of the body is that that individual be a man or woman of his or her word and that once he or she has given their word, that that word be kept, regardless of the personal or political cost.

There is some difficulty throughout this session of Congress in dealing with the legislation relating to health matters, and that difficulty primarily evolves from trying to determine exactly who the spokesman for the administration on health matters is. On one occasion, it may be a White House lobbyist, on another occasion OMB, and on another occasion someone from the Department of Health and Human Services.

The gentleman from California (Mr. DANNEMEYER) has just, in the well a few minutes ago, made a speech about one particular provision of this bill. In the committee, he and I discussed that provision of this bill before this was voted upon, before it was passed out of the committee by a unanimous voice vote.

At that point the gentleman from California showed me a letter that had been handed to him by a woman lobbyist from one of the agencies in the audience saying that the administration was opposed to this provision in this bill and I showed him a communique from the administration telling me that the package that we had agreed to dealing with NIH, dealing with the technical corrections and dealing with health planning was being supported by the spokesman for the administration with whom I was doing business as the ranking minority member of the subcommittee.

With all that having transpired, this bill and the other bills which we had agreed upon were passed out of the committee by unanimous voice vote.

Now some other spokesman from the department may come forward and say, "The administration is opposed to this one provision," or that one provision, or some other provision, but the fact of the matter is that at one point the administration had signed on to everything that we had done with regard to this entire package of bills, had put that in writing for me, and I was able to show that to the gentleman from California (Mr. DANNEMEYER) and to other members of the committee before these packages of bills were passed out of the committee by unanimous voice vote.

Now, if the administration or some individual spokesman from one agency or department of the administration not previously heard from wants to come forward and say this one little part of this bill we did not agree to, they can do that, but I am not going to do that. I am going to keep the word that I gave to the other members of the Committee on Energy and Commerce and to the other people who were involved in this, and I am going to support this bill because I do not think that there is a thing in the world wrong with it.

I think it is part of a package and that package was very important to the administration, and the administration objectives.

With regard to health planning, NIH and these other things will be very well served if the agreement made by all the ladies and gentlemen who were involved here in the beginning is kept.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

● Mr. CRAIG. Mr. Speaker, today we are considering, under suspension of the rules, H.R. 6355 which contains provisions that will organizationally transfer the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health (NIOSH) from the Centers for Disease Control (CDC) to the National Institutes of Health (NIH). While I support many of the provisions in the bill, I cannot support the proposed transfer.

I object to this bill on three main grounds. First, there are numerous functions of NIOSH which are not compatible with NIH, specifically making field investigations in response to requests, recommending standards to regulatory agencies, and regulating of protective equipment. Why combine incompatible functions?

Second, whenever a proposed transfer is contemplated, there should be committee hearings. Neither the Energy and Commerce Committee or the Education and Labor Committee have considered the ramifications of this transfer. We all know that whenever an agency or division of any department of Government is moved from one jurisdiction to another there are additional costs involved. What are these additional costs?

Third, there appears on page 9 of the bill report some very ambiguous language. After reading carefully, I can only conclude that House committee jurisdiction for NIOSH would be transferred from Education and Labor to Energy and Commerce Committee. Why is committee jurisdiction being changed?

For these and other reasons, I ask that you oppose passage of this legislation in its present form.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. WAXMAN) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 6355, as amended.

The question was taken.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the provisions of clause 5, rule I, and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill, H.R. 6355.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION FOR COMMITTEE ON INTERIOR AND INSULAR AFFAIRS TO FILE SUNDRY REPORTS

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs may have until 5 p.m. today to file sundry reports.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WALGREN). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

END THE PESO PANIC

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. GONZALEZ) is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, several weeks ago I came to the House floor and reported that I had freshly returned from the border at Laredo, right at the beginning of what has turned out to be this financial crisis, and I reported for the first time in this House the omnibus potential thereof. The fact, there was quite a bit of chaotic conditions reflected even at the stretch of the border.

I also warned and predicted and feared what now, I fear, has been publicized quite a bit, unfortunately, always as a reaction to a crisis. It just seems that we can never, ever, anticipate; we can never have anticipatory action or planning, even.

I also brought out the fact that my continuing efforts to bring about responsibility and accountability on the part of the fiscal agent of our Government, the Federal Reserve Board—which very few people realize is a fiscal agent; they think it is the independent master—its responsibility in this evolving crisis. I want to underline the fact that today the situation is alarming. It will continue to grow in desperation and in intensity with very, very great potential for devastating damage to our own interests, both economic and political, as well as hemispheric, because Mexico, being our immediate southern neighbor, placed by destiny to share this part of the world with us, is just the one that is closer and, therefore, with these developments in the last month or so, is brought a little bit more to the level of consciousness in our country, even though not quite completely as yet.

But it is only there, and that is only the beginning. I have also brought out, but no one has reported, for weeks the basket cases of Brazil and Argentina, just to speak of two of the most critical situations that I think long ago should have called for some kind of anticipatory action on the part of not only the Congress but particularly our money managers and our responsible agencies such as the Federal Reserve Board.

At this point, commerce and industry and trade in Mexico have been devastated by that country's huge, immense financial problems.

□ 1445

I have reported for several years the fact that Mexico has had an average of unemployment reaching almost 50 percent, which today it exceeds. The rate of inflation is now about that, but it has been on an average of over 30 percent. I have also pointed out that the average age now—that is, on a median average—is 15 years in Mexico and that the emerging labor market reflected the fact that it is inescapable that we have a responsibility to evaluate and figure out on a binational basis. This has been the whole missing element.

For 20 years I have advocated that we work binationally. The problem, any problem, including the so-called illegal alien, or undocumented worker problem, cannot be resolved unilaterally. The United States acting alone cannot and never will. We would have to build a solid concrete barrier at least 30 feet high along the nearly 2,000-mile border, or we would have to have soldiers every 3 yards, and even then we probably would not succeed.

But, if we work binationally, and that is the only way it is going to be resolved, we might perhaps start, just begin. As a matter of fact, I met recently with the manager or director of housing authority of Hong Kong in the Far East, and it was most interesting to discuss with him the same problem that had agitated and victimized Hong Kong from mainland China. They had been constantly inundated with so-called illegals, and I was surprised when he told me that the problem had been brought under control during the last year, and only after the mainland China Government decided to come in and join and do something in a bilateral way. It was not until both of those entities agreed on what to do and how to do it, plus a very rigid identification or ID system in Hong Kong.

Now, I have maintained all along that it is necessary to have binational cooperation, but in an environment in which we do not even have happy relations with our northern neighbor, with Canada, I think it is easy to see how impossible that task has been for 20 years. But at this point the devastation in Mexico cannot be adequately described in words. We must not forget that this kind of economic problem and situation does not stop at the border any more than disease. For years also I have been a long-time advocate of a binational border control on disease control. Tuberculosis germs do not obey borders or rivers or mountains, and it has not been until just very lately that we have had the beginning of some realistic work along those lines.

The American border areas have been devastated by the peso panic for three reasons. First, the tremendous loss of value in the peso means that Mexican customers of American stores—and we must never forget that Mexico is our best customer, No. 1 in our trade with the world—and other businesses simply do not possess the buying power that they enjoyed a few months ago. A peso today will buy perhaps 35 percent of what it would just last winter. It is inevitable, then, that a U.S. firm or firms that were and still are very much dependent on the patronage of Mexican citizens are finding their customers suddenly unable to buy anything, even compared to anything that they used to buy.

Second, there is the fact of exchange controls, and here is where we have a big contributing factor and responsibility, which severely limit the amount of currency that Mexican citizens can take out of their country. Just last weekend the Government of Mexico limited the amount of pesos that could be taken out of the country to 5,000, or about 70 U.S. dollars. Mexicans can accordingly spend much less than they could before, and what they have to spend buys very little.

Third, there is the fact that Mexico is not repatriating pesos for dollars, at least through the normal channels. There is a lot of black market speculative effort, but not through normal channels. This means that an American merchant who accepts pesos has no reliable way of converting that currency to dollars, and of course the merchant has to pay his suppliers and employees in dollars, not in pesos.

There is nothing the United States can do about Mexican currency controls, and very little our country can do to prop up the value of the peso. However, we can take action to make the peso a currency that can be exchanged for dollars.

All our newspapers have printed about the emergency aid that we, through the Federal Reserve Board, have given Mexico. Well, this is inaccurate. We have not given Mexico anything. The money we provided was to bail out our American banks. It was relief, bailout for the American banks which this administration does not draw the line on. It draws the line on American corporations. They do not want any bailouts there. They do not want any bailouts for the small businessman, but if it is a bank, why, $1 billion without questions overnight was what they did in order to save such banks as Chase Manhattan and the Hanover Manufacturers Trust, which incidentally I must report has in a very unwise way—you know, you always talk about and hear all of these people talking about the profligate spenders and the liberals, but the most conservative elements by definition are the ones that have been the unwise investors and spenders and speculators through sheer greed. Greed is what is getting us under. This is what got them under here.

The Hanover Manufacturers Trust is in Mexico out on a cliff, and is saved only at this time by American taxpayers' dollars through the Federal Reserve Board, more money than it has in its capitalization structure. If that is not a most unconservative, most speculative, most foolish type of way of doing banking business, I do not know what is. Now, we can take action to make the peso a currency that can be exchanged for dollars, and this is what I am proposing as of last week. I proposed it by requesting in writing of the Federal Reserve Board and the Secretary of the Treasury that they look into a suggestion contained in that letter, in two letters which I offer for the RECORD at this point:

WASHINGTON, D.C.,
September 10, 1982.

Hon. DONALD T. REGAN,
Secretary of the Treasury, Department of the Treasury, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I am enclosing herewith a copy of a letter I have sent to Chairman Volcker, outlining a procedure that could go a long way toward restoring commerce in American firms that are now devastated by current Mexican currency controls.

In brief, my suggestion is that the Federal Reserve agree to accept peso deposits of member banks, and exchange them for dollars at the official Mexican rate of exchange. This peso facility would be limited to amounts that are demonstrably in the normal range of peso deposits, so as to insure that it would not be used in a way that would encourage speculation or abuse. Although I have suggested that the Federal Reserve establish this facility through its swap line resources, the Treasury could create a similar facility through use of its Exchange Stabilization Fund.

The economic devastation in the Mexican border region is immense, and has been recognized by the Administration, which has offered relief through certain Small Business Administration programs. However, the need is not for loans—many firms cannot, in fact, qualify for nor benefit from loans. What is needed is a restoration of commerce, which can only be done through a program to enable a resumption of peso redemption, at reasonably stable rates. Currently, the only trade possible is through the currency black market, which is extremely risky and cannot in any way substitute for a reasonable, open and stable method of exchange.

I believe that my suggestion is prudent and workable, and I hope that you will urge its adoption by the Federal Reserve, or move for its implementation through the resources of your own Exchange Stabilization Fund.

I believe that both the Treasury and the Federal Reserve have all the authority needed to carry out this program.

Sincerely yours,

HENRY B. GONZALEZ,
Member of Congress.

WASHINGTON, D.C.,
September 10, 1982.

Hon. PAUL A. VOLCKER,
Chairman, Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I know that you are keenly aware of the difficulties confronting Mexico, and of the circumstances that forced Mexico to adopt exchange controls. Those controls have, unfortunately, resulted in severe problems for numerous businesses and banks in the United States. My purpose in writing is to request that the Federal Reserve provide some relief to Americans who have been harmed by the emergency actions taken by the Government of Mexico.

Let me emphasize that I do not suggest any action that would damage Mexican efforts to regain financial stability, nor any action that would create opportunities for currency speculators. My request is limited to actions that would alleviate problems confronted by persons who now have great difficulty in conducting ordinary business, specifically, merchants and bankers in the border area who normally accept pesos.

Merchants in the border area today face circumstances in which their Mexican customers cannot obtain dollars, except on the black market. The merchants, themselves, cannot accept pesos except at the greatest risk, since they can only convert pesos to dollars on the black market, at rates that fluctuate enormously from day to day. In normal times, merchants could accept pesos, deposit them with their banks, and the banks then convert the pesos to dollars. Presently, however, banks can only convert pesos at the greatest risk—on the black market. Thus, border area businesses face a situation in which a great part of their regular clientele cannot obtain dollars, and the businesses cannot accept pesos unless they are willing to take the enormous risks of dealing in the black market.

I believe this situation could be resolved easily, through the intervention of the Federal Reserve. The action I suggest could restore devastated American businesses, prevent numerous bankruptcies, and restore some stability along the border area.

My suggestion is that the Federal Reserve agree to accept the peso deposits of its member banks, and credit dollars to the banks at the official Mexican rate of exchange. Pesos so acquired could be credited to the Federal Reserve's swap line, and redeemed at such time as your currency traders find it prudent to do so. Any such agreement to accept pesos, however, should be limited to amounts that banks can show they would normally handle—so as to eliminate chances that the exchange facility could be used to evade Mexican currency controls or facilitate the work of speculators. For example, the Federal Reserve might limit its commitment to accept pesos in any thirty day period to one-sixth of the amount handled by a bank in the six months from January to July, 1982. Alternatively, the peso facility might be limited to a similar average of the amount the bank handled for a business that historically accepted pesos in the course of trade. Further, the peso facility might be limited to a specified border zone, say a region within 150 miles of the border. This is the region in which businesses frequently accept pesos in lieu of dollars, and as such is typical of both the U.S. and Canadian border trade pattern.

The Federal Reserve peso facility that I suggest would enable Mexicans to resume at least some degree of their normal trade in the United States. It would free residents of the border zone of the fear and instability that is now so widespread, and it would go a long way toward curbing the black market in pesos. It would prevent numerous bankruptcies in the United States, help curb the growth of unemployment, and provide a quick, effective and low-risk way to restore commerce. Since the exchange rate that would be offered by the Federal Reserve would be only at the official Mexican rate, the risk should be prudent to take. The overall impact of such a facility should be beneficial to Mexican efforts to stabilize the value of the peso, as well as to relieve some of the disruption that has affected citizens of that country, particularly those who normally conduct business in the United States.

The suggested peso facility could easily terminate when the emergency situation has passed. In the meantime, it would do much to contain economic damage and restore confidence. There does not appear to be any statutory provision that would prevent your establishing a peso facility, and I hope that you will take whatever action you can to relieve the enormous problems that now confront border area businesses and banks.

Sincerely yours,

HENRY B. GONZALEZ,
Member of Congress.

Now, this more than anything else would end the sense of panic and doom that pervades along the border areas. When I talk about the border zone, I am not talking about right immediately across the border. I am talking about areas that extend as far in as my city of San Antonio, that is, 150 miles down the way. But in deeper terms it goes even further, to Houston, to Dallas, which has developed a tremendous Mexican trade.

This idea would enable some degree of business to go on. It would restore order to an area that very much needs to find some degree of stability.

I have suggested to Treasury Secretary Regan and Federal Reserve Board Chairman Volcker that the U.S. Treasury or the Federal Reserve agree to accept a limited amount of pesos from American banks in order that those banks can offer their commercial customers a way to redeem pesos for dollars. As long as merchants cannot take the pesos to the bank and find a ready exchange, as they have all through the years, they simply cannot take the risk of accepting pesos. But right now, the banks cannot find a way to exchange pesos for dollars. The only ready way to end this logjam and to restore commerce to the border would be to have the U.S. Government agree to convert a limited number of pesos into dollars. This can be done within the authority of existing statutes. It can be done through the swap lines of the Fed or through the exchange stabilization fund of the Treasury. It can be done in a way that does not encourage people to evade or undermine Mexico's efforts to restore order within its own borders.

My suggestion is more fully explained in the letters that I submit for the RECORD, that I addressed as of a week ago to Secretary Regan and Chairman Volcker.

PROPOSED AMENDMENTS TO H.R. 6046, THE EXTRADITION ACT OF 1982

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CROCKETT) is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. CROCKETT. Mr. Speaker, H.R. 6046, the Extradition Act of 1982, as reported out by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, fails to provide adequate legal safeguards to a person whose extradition is sought by a foreign state. Therefore, when and if the bill comes to the floor, I intend to offer a series of amendments and I intend to see that all the amendments are debated to the fullest extent possible. These amendments are attached to this statement.

Section 3194 of the bill imposes additional limitations on the availability of the political offense exception. In its present form, the political offense exception of the bill unnecessarily limits those acts that would constitute a political offense. Those limitations, in my opinion, would deprive the exception of any real meaning.

Section 3194 also codifies the current practice of allowing the Secretary of State to determine whether extradition is sought because "of such person's political opinion, race, religion, or nationality." Additionally, this section also gives the Secretary sole discretion to refuse the extradition of a person for humanitarian reasons.

I believe that these issues are too important to warrant only the Secretary's discretionary review. Thus I will offer amendments providing for judicial inquiry into these issues. At the very least other procedures of review should be incorporated into the bill. Specifically, I would suggest that the Secretary, before ordering the surrender of a person who is being sought by a foreign state, be required to give the person an opportunity to submit evidence that supports his or her claim that extradition is being sought because of the person's political opinions, race, religion, or nationality. Additionally, the Secretary of State should be required to provide the person, before he or she is extradited, with a written statement of the reasons for the Secretary's determination in regard to these civil, political, and humanitarian issues.

These additional requirements will undoubtedly extend the extradition proceedings. Nevertheless, I strongly believe that, if the Secretary is required to respond to these issues in a formal manner, our extradition laws will function more credibly and equitably.

The amendments that I will propose to deal with these issues and an explanation of the purpose of each amendment follows:

AMENDMENT A—PROTECTING FREEDOM FIGHTERS, BUT NOT TERRORISTS, FROM EXTRADITION

The purpose of the Extradition Act of 1982, to facilitate the surrender of terrorists, is laudable, but the exceptions it would make to the political crimes defense, sweep too broadly, and would endanger the very persons that the United States has historically shielded.

Both bills would make it nearly impossible for a person accused by a foreign government of a crime of violence to invoke the protection of the political crimes defense to extradition. Both bills would make it substantially easier for military juntas and autocratic regimes to recover and punish former officials of democratic governments, and would even allow Communist regimes to recapture freedom fighters against their oppression.

The problem lies with the unnecessarily broad language of Section 3194(e)(2)(E) and (F) of H.R. 6046 (and subsections (A) and (B) of the same provision in S. 1940). These subsections would deny benefit of the political crimes defense to any person charged by a foreign government with committing a crime of bodily violence or a crime involving the use of a firearm, except in "extraordinary circumstances." Neither bill defines what an extraordinary circumstance might be, but the implication is clear. If Congress passes these provisions without change, it will signal an intent to retreat radically from the current political crimes defense.

The better solution would be to enact the wanton violence standard adopted by the court in Eain v. Wilkes which authorized the extradition of an alleged PLO terrorist for the wanton and indiscriminate bombing of a marketplace. This can be accomplished by striking subsections (E) and (F) and substituting:

"(E) an offense that consists of the taking of a hostage;

(F) an offense that consists of an intentional, wanton or indiscriminate act of violence resulting in death or bodily injury to persons not taking part in armed hostilities;

(G) an offense consisting of an act of violence intended to spread terror among the civilian population;"

SUPPLEMENTARY LANGUAGE TO EXPLAIN AMENDMENT A

Subsection (e)(2) sets forth, in subparts (E), (F) and (G), offenses which are normally too heinous to merit protection under the political crimes defense to extradition. The crime of rape has been dropped from this list because it is impossible to conceive of any circumstances in which it would be entitled to the political crimes defense.

Hostage-taking is already forbidden by treaties to which the United States is a party. The taking of hostages in armed conflict is prohibited by the 1949 Geneva Conventions regarding international armed conflicts and non-international armed conflicts (Common Article 3; Civilians Convention, Article 33). Hostage-taking is also prohibited by the 1979 International Convention Against the Taking of Hostages (which has received the consent of the Senate, but will not formally take effect until 22 ratifications have been completed.) Thus subpart (E) is intended to be expressive of current, or pending legal obligations of the United States to extradite or punish hostage-takers.

However, the term "taking of a hostage" is not without ambiguity. It is here understood to mean the deliberate detention of a person for the purpose of obtaining a ransom or reward, or of securing compliance with a demand upon a government or third party, rather than the incidental detention of a person as part of an effort to escape an authoritarian nation with closed borders or to escape other forms of unjust imprisonment including imprisonment that is illegal under international law.

Subpart (F) would simply codify the ad hoc acts of the wanton violence standard enunciated in Eain v. Wilkes, the recent case of the alleged PLO terrorist charged with bombing a marketplace in a resort town in Israel. In that case, the magistrate interpreted the political crimes defense as not applying in those situations where the offense was particularly heinous or lacking in military justification: "Accepting that the defendant was a member of the P.L.O. organization and with motivation toward its political objective, there is nothing in the evidence which "tends" to show that this act was directed in opposition to the State of Israel and that the crime furthered the cause of the group objective. The random and indiscriminate placing of an explosive near a bus stop on a public street in any trash bin defuses any theory that the target was a military one or justified by military necessity. It was an isolated act of violence. The commission of these alleged offenses is so remote from the political objective that it could not reasonably have been believed by the offender to have a direct political effect on the government of Israel; nor was it directed at the government of Israel." In re Extradition of Ziyad Abu Eain, 21 Magistrate No. 79 M. 175 (N.D. Filed Dec. 18, 1979).

Under Section 3194 (e)(2)(F) and (G), the bombing of a public marketplace, the machinegunning of an airport waiting room, or an attack upon the children of occupying soldiers would be too remote from any justifiable military objective, too terrifying to presumptively innocent persons, and too contemptuous of the value of human life to warrant protection under the political crimes defense. Similarly, the recent bombing by the PIRA of a military band concert in London was too remote from the conflict in Northern Ireland, even if it was true that the musicians had been, or might again be, engaged in that conflict. Since the concert was being held for the benefit of elderly persons and children, the bombing also constituted a "wanton and indiscriminate act of violence" against "persons not taking part in armed hostilities." On the other hand, the bombing of an Army barracks or a police station relevant to the hostilities could be considered a sort of act which warrants invocation of the political crimes defense, even if injury to persons not taking part in armed hostilities was an incidental consequence.

Subpart (F) is consistent with the norms established under Common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions. That article protects persons taking no active part in the hostilities of a non-international armed conflict against various violations of their human rights, including violence to life and persons, murder, cruel treatment, and the taking of hostages. Among the persons protected by the Geneva Conventions who would be considered as not participating in armed hostilities under subpart (F) are wounded, sick, and shipwrecked persons, medical personnel, and prisoners (Fourth Convention, Article 4).

The term "armed hostilities" is intended to apply not only to non-international armed conflicts like the American Civil War fought by conventional armies, but to a wide range of insurrectionist activity, whether or not the established government of the territory concedes that the conflict has actually risen to the level of a non-international armed conflict. Evidence of "armed hostilities" would normally include organized, armed resistance of sufficient scale or a threat to require the government to use military or para-military forces, in addition to civil police, in an effort to suppress the resistance to its authority. Not all armed hostilities need be directed against military or police targets; resistance to private death squads and vigilante groups, and attacks on armed civilians associated with an occupying force would also qualify the accused for benefit of the political crimes defense, provided always that the violence of which he is accused was focused rather than indiscriminate, proportioned rather than excessive, and respectful rather than careless of the difference between dangerous adversaries and helpless or uninvolved persons.

Subpart (G) provides that where the violence is intended to spread terror among the civilian population the accused shall not be granted benefit of the political crimes defense. To ascertain an intent to spread terror rather than to gain a tangible advantage in armed hostilities, the court will normally have to draw inferences from the totality of the circumstances. In making this judgment, the court may look beyond the representations of the accused to the patterns of conduct and the statements of intent of the organization of which he is a part.

Finally, it is understood that governments, no less than private organizations, have engaged in wanton violence for the purpose of frightening civilian populations into surrendering their freedoms. Thus subparts (E), (F), and (G) are intended to deny benefit of the political crimes defense not only to anti-government terrorists, but to terroristic officials as well.

Amendment B—Avoiding Assistance to Foreign Persecutions: A Judicial Duty

The United States, through all its branches, has the moral and legal obligation not to serve as the long arm of foreign injustice. Both the executive and courts have a duty to make sure that requests for extradition are not subterfuges for foreign persecution, and will not result in persecution. The duty is analogous to that imposed on the executive and the courts by the Immigration and Nationality Act, which provides that persons shall not be deported if their lives or freedom would be threatened "on account of race, religion, nationality, membership in a particular social group, or political opinion." Section 243(h). The U.N. Protocol Relating to the Status of Refugees (19 U.S.T. 6276) contains virtually identical language to protect refugees. A similar duty should be incumbent on both the courts and the executive as they consider extradition requests.

To accomplish this end, a new subsection (D) should be added to section 3194(d)(2) of H.R. 6046 so that "The court shall not order a person extraditable after a hearing under this section unless the court finds—

"(D) the person's life or freedom would not be threatened in the requesting State on account of his race, religion, nationality, membership in a particular group, or political opinion."

In addition, subsection 3194(e)(3)(A), assigning this task to the Secretary of State, at his discretion, should be deleted. Such concerns are too important to be left to executive discretion.

Statement on Amendment B

The United States today has extradition agreements with approximately 100 countries, including some highly repressive regimes. To expect the State Department to abrogate these agreements in order to prevent injustice is unrealistic; to do so would be to lose the reciprocal benefits that these agreements afford for the recovery or ordinary criminals.

On the other hand, the United States has moral and legal obligations not to serve as the long arm of foreign injustice. In particular, the courts and the Secretary of State have the duty to make sure that requests for extradition are not subterfuges for foreign persecution. This duty is implicit in the due process clause of the Fifth Amendment and the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus. It is also analogous to the duty imposed on the executive and the courts by the Immigration and Nationality Act, which provides that persons shall not be deported if their lives or freedom would be threatened "on account of race, religion, nationality, membership in a particular social group, or political opinion." Section 243(h). The U.N. Protocol Relating to the Status of Refugees, to which the United States is a party (19 U.S.T. 6276), contains virtually identical language to protect refugees.

Accordingly, section 3194(d)(2) should be amended to impose a similar duty on both the executive and the courts as they consider extradition requests. The amendment alters the so-called "rule of non-inquiry" which forbids inquiry into the motives and capacities of the requesting State to the extent necessary to avoid complicity in foreign persecutions, but does not require either the court or the Secretary of State to deny extradition simply because foreign legal procedures differ from American legal procedures.

On its face, this change may seem to be a departure from current law; in fact it would conform current law to current practice. The rule of non-inquiry has never been absolute, see Gallina v. Fraser, 278 F.2d 77, 79 (2d Cir., cert. denied, 364 U.S. 851 (1960), and in practice it is usually disregarded when the likelihood of "victor's justice" is manifest. See. e.g., United States v. Artukovic, 170 F. Supp. 383 (S.D. Cal. 1959) (return of pro-Nazi Croatian charged with war crimes to regime dominated by Serbian Communists denied), In re Mylonas, 187 F. Supp. 716 (N.D. Ala. 1960) (return of anti-Communist Greek convicted in abstentia of embezzlement by Communist-dominated local government denied), and Roman v. Diaz, 179 F. Supp. 459 (S.D. Fla. 1959) (return of Cuban defector sought by Castro regime denied). See also, Nicosia v. Wall, 442 F.2d 1005, 1006 (5th Cir. 1971) ("the United States intends to . . . deny extradition in cases in which it is demonstrated that a fugitive's life or freedom would be threatened on account of his political opinion").

The need for this modification of the rule of non-inquiry has been recognized by the British Parliament an the legislatures of other Commonwealth nations. Reciprocal legislation typified by Britain's Fugitive Offenders Act provides that "no court shall order the return of any person to a member State of the Commonwealth if it appears that the person might be "prejudiced at his trial or punished, detained or restricted in his personal liberty by reason of his race, religion, nationality, or political opinions." Fugitive Offenders Act, 1967, c. 68, s 4 (1). Thus, what is proposed here would simply bring American law into line with the established practice of English-speaking nations generally.

Amendment C—Assuring Just Treatment for the Accused: An Executive Duty

Section 3196(a) of H.R. 6046 provides that the Secretary of State "may" impose conditions on the surrender of a person found extraditable by a court where the Secretary believes that the conditions are "necessary to . . . the interest of justice." The purpose is laudable, but the duty is phrased in terms that are unnecessarily vague and discretionary.

Since it is inconceivable that Congress would vest any executive official with authority to act contrary to the interest of justice, the word "may" in the last clause of subsection 3196(a) should be changed to "small."

The term "interest of justice" is vague, and would be improved by a reference to internationally recognized standards of justice. To achieve this end, the following new sentence should be added to subsection 3196(a):

"The Secretary of State shall condition the surrender of a person ordered extraditable by a court upon such conditions as will assure compliance with international law, including international law relating to the protection of human rights, at all stages of the requesting State's legal proceedings, including pretrial detention and interrogation, trial, and punishment."

Supporting Language to Explain Amendment C

Since the Declaration of Independence was signed in 1776, Americans have recognized that all men "have certain inalienable rights, and among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." Moreover, "when governments become destructive of these ends, it is the right of the people to alter or abolish them." These principles are also enshrined in the 140 year-old political crimes defense to extradition.

Among the universal liberties referred to in the Declaration by the Founders was the right to due process of law, which the signers particularized in their list of complaints against the King. The existence of universal rights to due process of law was also recognized by the United States when it ratified the Geneva Conventions of 1949. Article 6 of Protocol II to those conventions enumerates some of these judicial guarantees which are "recognized as indispensible by civilized peoples," including:

a. an independent and impartial court;

b. procedures requiring that the accused be informed without delay of the particulars of the offense charged against him;

c. procedures which afford the accused before and during his trial all necessary rights and means of defense;

d. conviction based only on individual penal responsibility;

e. prohibition of ex post facto liability or penalty;

f. a presumption of innocence;

g. a right of the accused to be present at his trial;

h. a prohibition against compulsory self-incrimination; and

i. a requirement that a convicted person be informed of his judicial and other remedies.

Having been a prime mover in the movement for international human rights, the United States has a special obligation to conform its law and conduct to the norms it has espoused. The addition of a sentence to subsection 3196(a) acknowledging the obligation of the Secretary of State to "condition surrender of a person ordered extraditable by a court upon such conditions as will assure compliance with international law . . . ." is meant to be expressive of this duty.

AMENDMENT D—CLARIFYING THE RIGHT OF THE ACCUSED TO PETITION THE SECRETARY OF STATE

Both H.R. 6046 and S. 1940 recognize that an accused who has been found extraditable by a court has a right to petition the Secretary of State to refuse surrender on the ground that the foreign state is seeking extradition for a political offense or an offense of a political character, or for the purpose of prosecuting or punishing the person for his political opinions. Section 3196(a)(3). This provision codifies current practice and is laudable, but it does not go far enough.

More important than the right to reargue the political crimes defense at this stage is a right to petition the Secretary of State to impose conditions on the surrender sufficient to serve the interests of justice, to carry out the Secretary's obligation to international law, and to otherwise avoid complicity in "victor's justice" and other forms of foreign persecution. The Secretary should not be expected to recognize the need for these conditions on his own; he needs the assistance of formal submissions and arguments by the accused.

Now that judicial administration of the political crimes defense has been preserved, these formal submissions need not necessarily be presented at a formal hearing. However, if the Secretary chooses to make his decision on the basis of written evidence and arguments alone, he should be required to issue formal findings of law and fact, not only give the petitioner and his supporters faith in the integrity of the Secretary's decision, but to assure that the Secretary's analysis is thorough, careful, and uninfected by political pressures from the requesting State.

To achieve these ends, a new subsection (a) should be inserted in Section 3196:

"(a) If a person is found extraditable pursuant to section 3194, that person shall have the right to petition the Secretary of State for an order refusing surrender to the requesting state, or conditioning surrender on such conditions as will assure compliance with this act and international law and otherwise serve the interest of justice. The Secretary may, at this discretion, provide a hearing or decide the petition on the basis of written evidence and arguments alone. A final decision adverse to the petitioner shall be in writing, and shall include findings of fact and conclusions of law which are responsive to the petition. Findings of fact, if set forth in statutory language, shall be accompanied by a concise and explicit statement of the underlying facts supporting each of the respective findings."

AMENDMENT E—ASSURING THAT TRIAL WILL ONLY BE FOR THE EXTRADITABLE OFFENSE

It is a well settled rule of international law, called the "rule of speciality," that the requesting State may not obtain extradition on one charge and then add or substitute others. To assure that this fundamental principle of due process is not forgotten, and to assure that the Secretary of State does not leave its administration entirely to the requesting State, this rule should be codified as a standing condition on the surrender of any person ordered extraditable by the United States. This purpose may be accomplished by inserting a new subsection (b) in Section 3196 of H.R. 6046:

"(b) The surrender of a person who has been ordered extraditable shall be conditioned on the requesting State's assurance that the person will not be detained, tried, or punished in the territory of the requesting State for an offense other than that for which extradition has been granted, nor be extradited by that State to a third State."

SUPPORTING LANGUAGE TO EXPLAIN AMENDMENT E

Adding the "rule of speciality" to H.R. 6046 would simply underscore provisions already in most modern American treaties of extradition. Implicit in this general requirement is the understanding, universally recognized, that the principle of speciality does not extend to crimes committed by the accused after surrender. Similarly, it is understood that the requesting State, by agreeing to this condition, is also agreeing not to surrender the accused to a third State in connection with this or some other previous offense. In addition, it should be understood that the requesting State would not be in violation of this condition if the offense for which the accused is ordered extraditable is recharacterized in the course of trial, provided that the new characterization is based on the same set of facts contained in the extradition request (and supporting documents), and provided that the defendant would not be subject to a penalty more severe than that provided for in the case of the offense for which the accused was extradited. These understandings, as well as the general rule of speciality, are already enumerated in recent treaties of extradition. See, e.g. Extradition Treaty Between the United States and the United Mexican States, T.I.A.S. 9656, signed May 4, 1978.

AMENDMENT F

One of the primary functions of the political crimes defense to extradition is to help the United States remain neutral in foreign political conflicts.

Unfortunately, both H.R. 6046 and S. 1940 violate this principle by providing that all requests for extradition be argued by attorneys from the U.S. Department of Justice. This requirement would require the United States in all extradition cases to be on the side of the established regimes and against the alleged revolutionaries; even when the established regimes operate police states and the revolutionaries are fighting for constitutional democracy.

Given the availability of American law firms eager to represent foreign clients and the ease with which an attorney's mandate can be confirmed through modern communications, there is no practical reason to employ Justice Department attorneys in this capacity.

Accordingly, H.R. 6046 should forbid Justice Department attorneys to take sides in extradition disputes. This change may be accomplished by replacing all references to the Attorney General as a legal representative of the requesting State with "Counsel for the requesting State," and by including a new subsection within Section 3191 which expressly provides:

"The United States shall not provide legal representation to the requesting State in an extradition hearing, but the Secretary of State shall establish procedures whereby attorneys representing a requesting State may establish their authority to act on the requesting State's behalf."●

H.R. 7092, THE HIGHWAY REVENUE ACT OF 1982

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI) is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I am today introducing H.R. 7092, the Highway Revenue Act of 1982, which would extend the highway trust fund and related highway excise taxes for 1 year, until October 1, 1985. This legislation has been prepared at the request of the House Committee on Public Works and Transportation as a companion to the legislation approved by the Public Works Committee authorizing highway program expenditures for fiscal year 1983. The bill will be considered by the Committee on Ways and Means on Wednesday, September 15, 1982, and if approved, will be offered on the floor as the revenue title to the Public Works Committee legislation.

H.R. 7092 contains three basic provisions. The first extends the present law tax rates for the various highway excise taxes for 1 year, through September 30, 1985. Under present law, these excise taxes are scheduled to decline or expire after September 30, 1984. The second provision extends the period during which the revenues from these taxes are deposited into the highway trust fund for 1 year, until October 1, 1985, and transfers the highway trust fund provisions to the Trust Fund Code of the Internal Revenue Code, effective October 1, 1982. In making this transfer, the trust fund language is modernized and conformed to that of other trust funds but no major substantive changes in the trust fund's purposes or operations are made or intended. The third provision permits expenditures out of the trust fund, as provided by appropriation acts, before October 1, 1985, as authorized under prior law or by titles I and II of the Surface Transportation Assistance Act of 1982 (H.R. 6965, as introduced). Authority is also continued, as under present law, for transfers from the trust fund for the payment of refund claims, for certain income tax credits and for motorboat fuel taxes to the national recreational boating and safety improvement fund and the land and water conservation fund. In addition, the present law Byrd amendment language is transferred to the trust fund code.

In conclusion, I expect this legislation to be acted upon expeditiously by the Committee on Ways and Means, and I hope by the House as well. Legislation to provide highway authorizations for fiscal year 1983 is needed, and the proposed revenue title described above is also necessary in order to avoid triggering the trust fund apportionment limitation required by the Byrd amendment with regard to fiscal year 1983 authorizations out of the trust fund. In other words, without an extension of the highway trust fund taxes beyond September 30, 1984, the full amount of the fiscal year 1983 trust fund authorizations proposed by the Committee on Public Works and Transportation could not be made.●

TEAMSTERS' CENTRAL STATES PENSION FUND REFORM

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL) is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, today, I am introducing, along with my distinguished colleague, Mr. PICKLE, legislation requested by the administration to assure that trustees and administrators of certain multiemployer employee benefit plans, like the Teamsters' Central States Pension Fund, comply with conditions relating to asset management which are contained in Internal Revenue Service issued determination letters.

The Congress must give the Government agencies responsible for administering the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (ERISA) adequate enforcement mechanisms to safeguard pension plan assets. Retirement income security must truly be a reality for the hundreds of thousands of participants in these plans who are relying on ERISA to protect their pension benefits. I intend to do all I can to insure that this confidence in ERISA is well founded. These bills are important steps toward this goal.

The legislation I am introducing today as H.R. 7094 and H.R. 7095 was proposed by the administration on July 2, 1982, and examined in detail during the July 26, 1982, hearing held by the Ways and Means Committee's Oversight Subcommittee, which I chair, to examine the Government's efforts to reform the Teamsters' Central States Pension Fund and the adequacy of enforcement remedies under ERISA. This hearing confirmed that complete reform of the fund is not a reality and that current negotiations between the Government and this fund probably have a long way to go before a comprehensive settlement is at hand. In fact, all parties—the Labor Department, IRS, the General Accounting Office, and the Central States Pension Fund itself—agreed that the fund's continuation of outside independent asset management after the expiration of the current agreement on October 3, 1982, is warranted.

What I want to do by introducing this legislation is to give the Government what it now says it urgently needs to better protect assets by having a sanction that is exclusively directed at those directly responsible for the wrongdoing, and which, unlike the present remedy of revocation of a plan's tax exemption, leaves unharmed the innocent.

The administration has told my subcommittee at the hearing that this additional enforcement sanction would give it the missing tool it needs to insure that the Central States Pension Fund continues to have truly independent asset managers after October 3 of this year. The evidence supports the need for such legislation; the fund does not oppose it.

Indeed, it was due to the weight of evidence at that July 26, 1982, hearing that the Oversight Subcommittee on August 3, 1982, issued a letter report to the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee recommending that the committee promptly consider and report the legislation requested by the administration.

It is my sincere hope that by introducing this legislation today the legislative process will move forward to insure that the Teamsters' Central States pension fund continues to have truly independent asset managers after October 3 of this year. The time in which we must act is running out. I urge my colleagues to review and support these two bills.

The importance of a continuing independent asset management arrangement is too crucial to meaningful reform of this fund to be left to chance or a bargaining process. The retirement security of over one-half of a million participants and beneficiaries in this particular fund alone is much too important to depend upon the application of the ERISA sanction of revocation, which can leave harmless the guilty, hurt the innocent and above all fail to safeguard the plan assets themselves.●

LEGISLATION TO REVISE AND REORGANIZE PORTIONS OF TITLE 46, UNITED STATES CODE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. STUDDS) is recognized for 10 minutes.

● Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I am today introducing, for myself, Mr. JONES of North Carolina, Mr. BIAGGI, and Mr. YOUNG of Alaska, legislation to clarify, without substantive change, virtually the entire body of U.S. law dealing with merchant marine vessel safety and personnel. This legislation, which is identical to a bill introduced in the other body (S. 2660), represents the partial culmination of decades of efforts aimed at reorganizing and bringing up to date the marine safety-related statutes of the United States.

Anyone who has ever dared to rustle his or her fingers through the mystifyingly complex, redundant, chaotically organized and obsolete provisions of title 46 of the United States Code can appreciate the need for this legislation. Several generations of marine safety law currently cohabitate within the 1,610 sections of this title, and identifying the relationships between them is more difficult than defining with confidence the parentage of every alley cat currently walking the streets of Washington, D.C.

Although the legislation I am introducing today has not yet officially been endorsed by the administration, it is consistent with recommendations contained in the Department of Transportation's recent report on the roles and missions of the U.S. Coast Guard. The bill, itself, is derived from a vast amount of both past and quite recent Coast Guard efforts to make sense out of the maritime statutes the agency is charged by law with administering.

Title 46 currently contains no fewer than 13 separate sections which deal with penalties for violations of vessel inspection laws and regulations. While these 13 sections are presently scattered throughout the title, the new legislation would group them in easy-to-locate form in each chapter to which penalties apply.

Sections of law which deal with similar subjects are often now widely separated within title 46. For example, sections 221 through 236—inclusive—discuss the subject of merchant marine officers and their duties. Sections 561 through 712—inclusive—cover merchant seamen, their duties, and related laws. The new legislation groups all of these sections into a single chapter dealing with merchant marine personnel.

Several sections of title 46, including, for example, those dealing with the slave trade, are today obsolete and would be repealed by the proposed bill.

The legislation being introduced today is 206 pages long, and yet it will cover only 10 of the 39 chapters of title 46. Generally, the chapters which will be affected are those which apply most directly to vessel safety standards and to regulations affecting the responsibilities of merchant marine personnel. It is my hope that the task of completely reorganizing and simplifying this title of law can be accomplished fairly quickly in the years ahead.

I wish to emphasize that it is the intent of the sponsors of this legislation that it not have any significant substantive effect on U.S. maritime law as it currently applies to the U.S. merchant marine, and to others affected by the statutes involved. Our purpose is solely to reorganize and to clarify the law, and to eliminate provisions which are wholly obsolete. Our intent is to enact this legislation as rapidly as possible so that a framework can be established for any future changes in those laws which may be required.

The text of the bill which I am introducing today is identical to S. 2660, the measure which is currently pending before the other body. I chose to introduce the identical text in order to simplify the process of receiving public and congressional comment on the legislation. Numerous changes, primarily of a technical nature, will have to be made before final action may be taken. The Subcommittee on Coast Guard and Navigation of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries will, in cooperation with the Subcommittee on Merchant Marine, be holding a hearing on the bill on September 23.

If there is any possibility that action can somehow occur on this legislation during the few weeks remaining in this Congress, I plan to pursue that option. More likely, however, the introduction of this bill, and the initiation of hearings, will serve simply to lay the groundwork for early action in the 98th Congress. I am hopeful, for the sake of all those who have come to know, and who would like to have greater affection for, title 46, that such action does indeed occur.

● Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I join today with my colleague and chairman of the Coast Guard and Navigation Subcommittee and others in introducing this bill to consolidate and reenact certain of the marine safety and seaman's welfare laws of the United States.

The purpose of this bill is intended to be a codification without substantive change of the complex maze of marine safety laws administered by the Coast Guard in title 46 of United States Code. These laws relate to the safe operation of vessels generally; the inspection, regulation, and documentation of vessels; the procedures relating to marine casualties; and the laws relating to the licensing, certification, and documentation of merchant marine personnel and the manning of vessels. In addition, it includes those laws relating to the protection and relief of merchant seamen. As one can see from this list of topics, this body of law is very important to the maritime industry of the United States and therefore requires our careful attention so that unintended changes are not inadvertently made.

Further, my understanding is that the law will be revised so that it can be read and understood by everyone rather than being the exclusive domain of maritime lawyers who I understand also have difficulty in sorting out how title 46 applies. I am also pleased that we are not making any substantive change so that the existing provisions which are so important to the shipping and fishing industries, as well as maritime labor and recreational boating, will be preserved. Once the clarification and reorganization of these laws is accomplished, we will then be able to squarely and easily address and correct the problem areas that arise in the maritime laws administered by the Coast Guard.

These laws have been enacted in bits and pieces over the last 200 years. Thus, this codification which has been underway for over 15 years is overdue. I am confident that we will proceed at a pace so that the concerns of all of those in the maritime community can be heard with the ultimate goal of enacting a well organized and comprehensible body of marine safety laws for the United States.●

SPORTS COMMUNITY PROTECTION BILL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California (Mr. STARK) is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, recently, on August 16, Congressman DON EDWARDS and I testified before the Senate Judiciary Committee in support of the Major League Sports Community Protection Act, S. 2784, which was introduced in the Senate by Senators DECONCINI, HEFLIN, SIMPSON, HUDDLESTON, and BENTSEN, and now has 20 cosponsors in the Senate.

S. 2784 has a nearly identical counterpart in the House, H.R. 6467, introduced by Representatives EDWARDS, HYDE, and myself, and it now has over 150 cosponsors. At these same hearings, a panel of distinguished mayors—Mayors Feinstein of San Francisco, Caliguiri of Pittsburgh, Berkley of Kansas City, and Halloin of Green Bay—also testified as to the urgent need for the passage of this legislation to protect pro sports fans in this country. I understand that this legislation is now strongly supported by the mayors of more than 40 cities, including, for example, Baltimore, Boston, Chicago, Dallas, Houston, Indianapolis, Jacksonville, Memphis, Milwaukee, Minneapolis and St. Paul, New Orleans, Philadelphia, Phoenix, Portland, San Antonio, Tampa, and, to be sure, Mayor Lionel Wilson of Oakland.

Now that Congress has returned from its Labor Day recess, I want again to stress the importance of this legislation and the need for prompt attention by the Congress. I am pleased that Chairman RODINO intends to schedule hearings to take place shortly before the House Antitrust Subcommittee. These hearings will further underscore the necessity for prompt passage of this legislation.

One feature of this legislation has been misunderstood. In recent weeks, there have been some questions about the scope of H.R. 6467. Some have suggested that this legislation would let professional sports leagues move teams from areas that have supported these teams without any concern for the antitrust laws. Anyone who understands my concern for the sports fan knows I would never support such legislation. All that H.R. 6467 is intended to do is to allow leagues to take steps to protect fans in areas that have supported teams and who are now faced with the loss of those teams by unilateral actions of an individual team. H.R. 6467 would only allow leagues to prevent such moves. It gives no antitrust immunity for decisions that allow such moves. I stated this in my testimony before the Senate Judiciary Committee, and I want to reconfirm it now.

Reasonable men can disagree over the meaning of words, but I want no disagreement with respect to the scope of this legislation. I thus want to reiterate that at the appropriate time I will seek revision of H.R. 6467 to replace the current language in section 2(1)(a) of H.R. 6467 with the language now contained in section 2(1)(a) of the companion Senate bill, S. 2784. As a result, the team location provision of H.R. 6467 would merely authorize leagues to enforce rules allowing a league to decide that a member club of such league shall not be relocated from its territory.

With this change, I believe the bill, when passed, could only come into play in two possible situations: First, a team could desire to move, and the league could conclude that the team should not be relocated; in that circumstance, the community's interests would have been protected, and the league's action would be authorized by this statute. Second, a team could desire to move, and the league could give its blessing to such a move; in that circumstance, if a community felt aggrieved, this bill would have no effect on the remedies available to a community or on the team's or league's exposure to legal challenge for abandoning the territory. In short, I see no situation in which this legislation can disserve public interests.

I also want to emphasize that, apart from the legislation that Congress should enact, the Oakland-Alameda authorities have done everything in their power to keep the Raiders in Oakland and to protect the taxpayers' investment in the Oakland-Alameda Coliseum, which was built specifically for the Raiders and has major unpaid public debt service outstanding through the year 2005. Indeed, the city of Oakland was successful under California State law in establishing, through a decision of the California Supreme Court, that the city is entitled to exercise eminent domain powers to buy the Raiders and keep them in Oakland for the purpose of serving vital public interests in the Oakland community.

Now, however, it is evident that the Oakland Raiders intend to take further steps to deprive the Oakland community and its taxpayers of their rights under State law. The Raiders, assisted by Los Angeles interests who seek to take the team from Oakland to Los Angeles, have been in the California Legislature seeking special interest, retroactive amendments to the California eminent domain statute to overturn the supreme court's ruling and to preserve the Raiders' opportunity to walk out on Oakland merely for higher profits elsewhere. This punitive measure would strip the Oakland community of its right under State law to protect the multi-million-dollar taxpayer investment in the Oakland-Alameda Coliseum made at the Raiders' behest in 1965. In my view, we in the Congress have an obligation to act before the overriding public interests of communities and taxpayers can be defeated in this manner.

Congress has always urged sports leagues to keep their commitments to communities, and the Oakland community along with the NFL is attempting to do this in the Oakland Raiders' instance. Congress should in this session, therefore, legislate to give concrete effect to congressional policies requiring teams to keep their commitments to communities, and Congress should not by its inaction endorse efforts by the Raiders retroactively to amend California State law to override the eminent domain ruling of the California Supreme Court in favor of the city of Oakland. I am including in the record several recent news stories describing the efforts of the Raiders to ram these amendments to California law through the legislature in Sacramento.

Finally, I was pleased to hear recently on the August 22 edition of ABC's Sportsbeat that even Howard Cosell, an outspoken and longtime admirer of Al Davis, condemns the Raiders' move. Mr. Cosell stated that in leaving Oakland "what Davis did was morally wrong." He might have said also that it was a rip-off of taxpayers and the public.

I was also heartened when, after Mr. Cosell questioned whether any legislation on this subject should be applied to the Raiders still pending relocation, the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania, Senator ARLEN SPECTER, vigorously supported applying the bill to the Raiders. In addition to mentioning the direct conflict between State and Federal law created by the city of Oakland's successful suit to purchase the Raiders in eminent domain, Senator SPECTER noted that Congress often has the obligation to take immediate action to correct wrongs to the public. Senator SPECTER further noted that applying the bill to the Raiders clearly would "not violate due process." This "is one of the most complex and confusing legal situations that could be formulated," SPECTER said, concluding that application of congressional action to the Raiders case "would bring clarity and finality to that mess." Senator SPECTER concluded by emphasizing what we in northern California all know; namely, that the support of the Oakland-Alameda community for the Raiders deserves protection. He put it this way:

I think if you balance the interests of the Oakland fans as opposed to the interests of the Los Angeles fans where the Raiders have not yet become established and there has not been that relationship or that fan affinity or the cheering or the familiarity with the Raiders players, that there is a great deal more of an emotional attachment between the Oakland fans and the Raiders than between the Los Angeles fans and the Raiders. The romance in Los Angeles has just gotten started. The marriage in Oakland is of long standing.

One other point, Mr. Speaker, is that I believe the Raiders' management has clearly violated the promise given to Congress in 1966 during consideration of the football merger legislation. In that legislation—both on the floor of the House and in the Senate committee report—promises were given that "the plan for an expanded league assures that all 24 of the existing professional football teams will continue to operate in their present locations."

To ignore the Oakland move is to break faith with that promise, and should not be tolerated.

We have drafted H.R. 6467 narrowly. It will do much to protect the financial well-being of many of our Nation's cities which have built stadiums with taxpayer dollars. It should be enacted in this session.

L.A. RAIDERS LOSE A ROUND IN SACRAMENTO

SACRAMENTO.—Supporters of the Oakland Raiders' move to Los Angeles failed to pass a measure that would have blocked a legal attempt to keep the team in Oakland.

Southern California lawmakers tried unsuccessfully yesterday to revive a rejected bill by Senate Republican leader William Campbell, R-Hacienda Heights, that would have prevented Oakland from using its powers of eminent domain to buy the football team.

Senate President Pro Tem David Roberti, D-Los Angeles, ruled that an attempt by Sen. Alan Robbins, D-Van Nuys, to amend the bill's provisions into another measure dealing with elections was out of order.

Robbins said he would find another bill and try to amend it at a later session.

The Campbell bill, rejected Tuesday on a 17-18 vote, needed a 27-vote, two-thirds majority to pass. Robbins tried to amend its provisions into a bill requiring only a majority vote.

PRO-RAIDERS BILL LOSES IN SENATE

(By Virgil Melbert)

Outvoting the powerful Los Angeles delegation 18-17, a coalition of Northern and Southern California senators killed Tuesday legislation designed to prevent Oakland from buying the Raiders football team.

While the emotional Senate vote represented the city of Oakland's first major victory in the effort to hold onto the Raiders, it may be shortlived.

Van Nuys Democrat Alan Robbins vowed to reintroduce the anti-Oakland legislation in a hijacked Assembly bill today and seek another vote when four Los Angeles senators who were missing Tuesday are back on the floor.

"The bottom line is that we'll have a bill out before the week is over," Robbins said.

Oakland Democratic Sen. Nicholas Petris, who led the battle against the Los Angeles bill, said the hijacking of an Assembly bill for a new attempt would be "highly unorthodox" and possibly could be blocked through parliamentary maneuvers.

With only a week left in the 1981-82 legislative session, Robbins took over the Los Angeles bill Tuesday morning after its author, Republican Minority Leader William Campbell of Hacienda Heights, was admitted to a Sacramento hospital with chest pains.

The Campbell bill was introduced Aug. 2 after the California Supreme Court ruled Oakland has the legal right to attempt to acquire the Raiders franchise through eminent domain proceedings. The city's suit is pending in Monterey County Superior Court.

The Campbell bill would have rewritten state law to forbid retroactive use of eminent domain by a city or county to acquire a professional sports franchise.

The bill would have to clear both houses of the Legislature before the Aug. 31 adjournment.

In its original form Tuesday, the Campbell bill was an "urgency" measure—requiring a two-thirds, 27-vote approval in the 40-member Senate so it could take effect immediately. In his first roll call, Robbins was able to muster only 13 "yes" votes.

Later, he unsuccessfully attempted to make it a simple majority-vote bill, one which would not become law until Jan. 1. Even then, he could rise only 17 of the needed 21 votes.

But, early Tuesday evening, after the Senate's presiding officer, Sen. John Foran, D-San Francisco, declared the bill dead, Robbins said the Los Angeles delegation would amend it into an unidentified measure which had already cleared the Assembly and try for a new vote today.

Petris said he will move instead to have the bill sent to a policy committee for a hearing.

Petris said the Oakland-Alameda County Coliseum was built with public funds specifically for the Raiders with the promise that the team would remain in the community.

"There's no point in my recounting here the gory, selfish, greedy details of what the owner has done," Petris said.

Sen. John Holmdahl, D-San Leandro, charged that attempts to lure the Raiders to Los Angeles with promises of extra seats and benefits for the owners amounted to bribery with public funds.

Speaking for the bill, Robbins noted that Oakland regularly comes before the Legislature pleading for extra state support.

RAIDERS, FERRIES TOP LEGISLATURE'S LOGJAM OF BILLS

(By Steven A. Capps)

SACRAMENTO.—Lawmakers diverted their attention to San Francisco ferryboats, Oakland-Los Angeles Raiders football and other legislative games as they crept toward the final deadline to finish this year's work.

They also sent to the governor a measure restoring lobbying powers to the Commission on the Status of Women and approved a bill that would strengthen the state's drug paraphernalia laws and, according to its author, close down "head shops."

With the Legislature's final adjournment set for Tuesday, the list of unresolved measures has grown so long the Senate has taken to holding grueling floor sessions from morning until night, with only brief breaks for meals.

In fact, after such a session Monday night, Republican leader William Campbell of Hacienda Heights was taken to the hospital complaining of chest pains. He was admitted for observation and was expected to remain there until later in the week.

Behind-the-scenes disputes between individual lawmakers—during which action on various bills has been delayed—is partly to blame for the legislative logjam, although both Assembly Speaker Willie Brown, D-San Francisco, and Senate President pro tem David Roberti, D-Los Angeles, yesterday dismissed the skirmishes as normal and not an all-out war between the houses.

"There are individual members who are arguing, but there's no war," Brown said.

One bill earlier delayed during a fight between members of the Senate and the Assembly would give legislators a pay raise. It has been stuck in the Assembly, but Brown said yesterday it's not because of a fight.

"The pay bill is not hung up because of any interhouse squabble," he said. "It's hung up because I can't get 54 votes for it."

Among the topics that were taken up yesterday:

The Raiders: By a vote split north-south rather than Republican-Democrat, the state Senate yesterday rejected a measure to finalize the Oakland Raiders' move to Los Angeles.

The Raiders bill was drafted by Campbell, but since he was in the hospital, fellow Southern California Sen. Alan Robbins, D-Van Nuys, agreed to take up the bill for him yesterday.

The bill is aimed at halting the City of Oakland from using its powers of eminent domain to force the Raiders' owners to sell the team to the city. The matter is now before a court in Monterey County.

The vote yesterday was 17-18. At least 27 votes—a two-thirds majority—are needed for the bill to take effect immediately upon the governor's signature, thus heading off court action.

But Robbins said he would try to amend the bill today to require only a simple majority of 21 votes, in which case it wouldn't go into effect until Jan. 1 following the governor's signature.

Robbins predicted he would get the votes when four absent Southern California members return to the Capitol.

"The issue is: Should a city or county have the right under eminent domain to acquire a professional sports franchise," Robbins said. "I think they should not. It is not a wise or justifiable use of public funds."

Democrat Nicholas Petris, who happens to be from Oakland, argued against the bill, saying eminent domain was the proper avenue for the city to take, especially since taxpayers there had built a stadium for the Raiders.

"The understanding at the time (the stadium was built) was that the team would stay on for a long, long time," he said. He said the reasons behind the Raiders' move to Los Angeles were "selfish" and "greedy."

"It's up to the court to determine if this is a proper public use (of eminent domain)," he said.

MOVE TO KILL RAIDER SUIT IS STAVED OFF

(By Virgil Meibert and Gayle Montgomery)

Eastbay legislators won another chance today to block Los Angeles legislators from killing Oakland's chances for acquiring the Raiders football team through eminent domain.

The latest action came after the Los Angeles legislators, with help from Assembly Speaker Willie Brown, scored a victory over Oakland in their effort to prevent the city from buying the Raiders.

In an Assembly Judiciary Committee hearing this morning, Assemblyman Bill Lockyer, D-San Leandro, won a ruling from Assembly Clerk James Driscoll that it would require 54 votes on the Assembly floor to get the amended anti-Oakland bill into judiciary committee.

The date for sending bills to the committee has passed and it will require a two-thirds vote of the lower house to waive that rule.

Judiciary Committee Chairman Elihu Harris, D-Oakland, attempted to stall the bill earlier by walking out of the committee when it failed to have a quorum 32 minutes after the hearing time, but Los Angeles Assembly members countered by electing a temporary chairman and continuing. At that point, Lockyer asked and received from Driscoll the 54-vote ruling.

Earlier in the day, with help from Speaker Brown, the Los Angeles legislators had won a crucial victory by beating down a Northern California challenge to the germaneness of the Los Angeles amendment.

Brown, a San Francisco Democrat, stunned Eastbay legislators by prolonging voting long enough for the Los Angeles delegation to win a five-hour Assembly floor fight shortly after 1 a.m.

Then, Brown exacted a promise from Democratic Majority Leader Mike Roos of Los Angeles that the bill—which would prevent Oakland from buying back the Raiders through an eminent domain action—will be amended so it will not apply to San Franciso and, presumably, the 49ers if they should want to move.

Twenty minutes earlier. Eastbay legislators and their allies had cheered happily on the Assembly floor when they thought they had killed the Los Angeles bills in a 38-34 vote disallowing key amendments because they weren't "germane."

But Brown ruled that the decision wasn't final, that Los Angeles legislators could continue to try to change the votes of other legislators. He had previously ruled against granting the same privilege on other bills in the post-midnight proceedings.

Ultimately, three Northern California Assemblymen—Byron Sher, D-Palo Alto, Tom Hannigan, D-Vallejo, and Stan Statham, R-Chico—switched to the Los Angeles side along with two from Southern California and Los Angeles had its victory.

Eastbay legislators, who had thought Brown was at least neutral in the feud, were shaken.

"He broke the rules at least twice to help them," said Sen. Nicholas Petris, D-Oakland. "I don't understand it."

The last-ditch battle to strip Oakland of its right to purchase the Raiders through an eminent domain lawsuit was expected to continue through today and tonight until the Legislature adjourns for the year at midnight.

Unable to budge the state Senate in the same effort last week, the powerful Los Angeles delegation switched the fight to the Assembly floor Monday evening.

Roos "hijacked" a pending bill, already approved by the Senate, dealing with municipal court clerk appointments.

He gutted the existing bill and inserted amendments prohibiting any city from using eminent domain proceedings for buying a sports franchise. The bill also stated that in legal terms a sports franchise is "not a public use for which the power of eminent domain may be exercised."

Roos' maneuver touched off a frantic bipartisan Eastbay lobbying effort throughout the evening hours to persuade legislators that the Roos amendments were not "germane" to the content of the previous bill and were therefore improper.

Oakland Democrat Harris led the effort to round up support on the Assembly floor, with the help of Assemblymen Lockyer, Gilbert Marguth, R-Livermore, Tom Bates, D-Oakland, and Bill Baker, R-Danville.

Petris, who had blocked the same bill in the Senate by protesting it was not germane, also showed up on the Assembly side.

Outside the chambers, legislators were being called out for more lobbying by Oakland City Councilman Dick Spees, city lobbyist Lynn Suter and Alameda County Democratic Party Chairwoman Mary Warren.

If approved by the Assembly, the measure would be sent back to the Senate, which would have to concur before tonight's midnight adjournment.

Petris said that if the bill comes back to the Senate he hopes there will be enough pro-Oakland votes to kill it.

If not, it would be sent to Gov. Brown to sign or veto.

Oakland was given the go-ahead to attempt to buy back the Raiders through eminent domain proceedings by the state Supreme Court in a ruling earlier this summer.

The city's only legal hurdle, in its pending lawsuit, is to prove that a sports franchise is a legitimate "public use."

The Los Angeles-backed legislation would retroactively prohibit Oakland from pursuing this lawsuit. City officials believe the eminent domain lawsuit may be the only remaining solid chance of regaining the football team.

Immediately after the Los Angeles victory early today, Brown, who was presiding, asked Roos if the bill could be amended so it would apply only to Los Angeles and Oakland.

"I'm not sure I would want to do that in San Francisco," he said.

Roos agreed to amend the bill today to limit its eminent domain restraints to Oakland and Los Angeles.

The maneuver could cost Oakland the support it has had in the voting from San Diego, Orange County and San Francisco legislators, who would like to retain the threat of eminent domain to keep sports franchises in their own communities.

Meanwhile, a judge Monday postponed start of the damages phase of the Oakland Raiders-National Football League antitrust trial from Sept. 20 until Nov. 1.

U.S. District Court Judge Harry Pregerson said the delay is necessary because attorneys need more time to prepare.

The same six-woman jury which ruled unanimously last May that the NFL had violated antitrust law by blocking the Raider's move from Oakland to Los Angeles will hear the damages phase of the trial.

The league has appealed the decision. The jury will hear arguments, then decide monetary damages due the Raiders because the NFL delayed their move.

L.A. BEATEN IN TRY TO HALT RAIDER SUIT

(By Gayle Montgomery and Virgil Meibert)

Outnumbered, but never outmaneuvered, a small group of Northern California legislators succeeded in knocking down the Los Angeles effort to prevent Oakland from buying the Raiders football team.

One hour before the end of the 1982 legislative session at midnight, Assembly Democrat Mike Roos of Los Angeles threw in the towel on a two-week effort to legislate an end to Oakland's move to buy the Raiders through an eminent domain action.

A last-ditch effort failed when Roos was able to get only 33 of the 54 votes (a two-thirds majority) necessary to move the Los Angeles legislation through committee, thanks to an Oakland legislator's last-minute discovery of the two-thirds requirement.

"I'm giving up," Roos said. "We needed 54 votes. I couldn't get them. We're effectively blocked."

The anti-Oakland forces were formidable. Led by Minority Leader William Campbell, R-Hacienda Heights, in the Senate, and Majority Leader Roos, in the lower house, they had the Los Angeles delegation at their disposal.

Late Monday, Roos had "hijacked" a pending bill dealing with municipal court clerk appointments, had gutted it and inserted amendments prohibiting any city from using eminent domain proceedings to buy a sports franchise.

With the unexpected aid of Assembly Speaker Willie Brown, D-San Francisco, the amendments had received narrow approval at 1 a.m. Tuesday on a vote to determine whether they were "germane" to the bill.

The revised bill was then sent to the Assembly Judiciary Committee.

After that defeat, the Northern Californians responded with ingenuity by using legislative rules to reverse the battle.

At 2 a.m. Tuesday, Assemblyman Tom Bates, D-Oakland, found an obscure rule which requires a two-thirds majority—54 votes—on the final day of a session to get a late bill into the Judiciary Committee.

Assemblyman Elihu Harris, another Oakland Democrat, started the upset Tuesday morning by walking out of the Judiciary Committee, which he chairs, when Roos was unable to get a quorum within 30 minutes after a hearing was to start on the Raider bill.

The Los Angeles group responded by appointing a temporary chairman, but was blocked immediately by Assemblyman Bill Lockyer, D-San Leandro, who brought up the 54-vote rule. It was quickly upheld by Assembly Chief Clerk James Driscoll.

That action stunned the Los Angeles group and kept Oakland's momentum rolling.

Then shortly after the full Assembly convened Tuesday, Oakland Mayor Lionel Wilson arrived and was introduced by Lockyer.

Speaker Willie Brown came back to greet the mayor and was seen engaged in a tense discussion for 15 minutes. Brown had been instrumental Monday night in keeping the anti-Oakland legislation alive, and Wilson obviously wanted no repeats.

Wilson said later that he had asked the speaker, a long-time political ally, for help. He at least got no further problems from Brown.

The Oakland Mayor and Vice Mayor Dick Spees spent all day in the Assembly, encouraging both Democratic and Republican Northern Californians to hang tough.

Walnut Creek Assemblyman Bill Baker, and Livermore Assemblyman Gilbert Marguth, both conservative Republicans, worked closely with Wilson and the Eastbay Democrats.

Former Assembly Minority Leader Carol Hallett, of San Luis Obispo, the Republican nominee for lieutenant governor, also worked closely with Eastbay legislators, along with her Democratic opponent, Leo McCarthy of San Francisco.

On the Senate side, where Sen. Nicholas Petris, D-Oakland, had earlier blocked repeated moves by Southern California legislators to shove through bills to stop the Oakland effort, the Republican leader, Campbell—as did Roos in the Assembly—conceded defeat about an hour before the session was to close.

"If it's alive, its going to need CPR to save it," Campbell said. "We're looking at a two-thirds vote over there (in the Assembly). The Oakland legislators have done a very good job. Nick Petris did a good job here, and Elihu Harris did a great job over there."

Oakland also was aided by some San Diego legislators. The San Diego votes were surprising, because the Assembly Speaker appeared to have diluted Southern California support for Oakland by asking for amendments that specifically limited the legislation to Oakland and Los Angeles. He said he did not want San Francisco held by such action.

Mayor Wilson said he felt some legislators may have been worried that the eminent domain procedure could be used to gain control of any professional team.

"Actually, it's a very narrow application." Wilson said. "It wouldn't work for the Warriors, for instance. It would have to be a very special set of circumstances."

One political figure who must have breathed a sigh of relief was Gov. Brown. As a candidate for U.S. Senate, he did not look forward to either signing or vetoing a bill that could have angered half of the state, aides conceded.

In a related action, the city of Oakland asked the state Court of Appeals Tuesday to hear arguments earlier than scheduled on reinstating a preliminary injunction against the team's transfer until the eminent domain suit can be tried.

If Oakland wins a favorable ruling, the Raiders would have time to arrange for their first home game of the National Football League season to be played at the Oakland Coliseum instead of in Los Angeles.

Oakland asked the appellate court to hear arguments Sept. 15 instead of Sept. 20, and also asked the court to stop the team's move pending a decision on the injunction.

A judge in Monterey County Superior Court, where the eminent domain lawsuit will be heard, had denied an injunction, and Oakland asked the state Supreme Court earlier this month to reverse that decision.

The high court transferred the matter to the Court of Appeals.●

NEEDED—A FOOD PROGRAM FOR MEXICO

(Mr. SEIBERLING asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.)

● Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, the Akron Beacon Journal for Friday, September 10, contains an Associated Press article by Norm Clarke about the impact of Mexico's financial crisis on the poor in cities like Tijuana. I offer it for printing in the RECORD following these remarks.

As one who is greatly concerned about the effect of Reaganomics and budget cuts on the poor in our own country, I nevertheless believe that we also have a cause for great concern about the conditions in our neighbor to the South. As the article points out, Mexico's 100 percent inflation and three peso devaluations in 5 months have brought the condition of its impoverished masses to a breaking point. Unless there is prompt remedial action, violent outbursts and possible civil uprisings seem inevitable in Mexico. If that point is reached, there will undoubtedly be the same tendencies on the part of many in the U.S. administration to start casting about for ways of helping Mexico's authorities impose order by military force, after the fashion of El Salvador. Yet, it is obvious that Mexico's problems, like those of other countries in Central America, are fundamentally economic and social, and cannot be solved by military measures but only through economic growth and an equitable distribution of the fruits of the economy.

Obviously, a violent upheaval in Mexico would pose a very real danger to the United States. Both self interest and common morality suggest that it is time for our own administration and the Congress to launch an immediate program to alleviate the most extreme hardship in Mexico.

Mr. Speaker, here we are with huge crop surpluses and depressed agricultural prices while our neighbors to the South are starving. Yet, as far as I know, no one in the administration has even suggested emergency action to provide food aid for Mexico. Where is the food-for-peace program? Where is the spirit of the Marshall plan? Is the administration so steeped in the dogmas of Adam Smith and its drive to cut social programs, that it is impotent to act in this kind of crisis. Even Herbert Hoover achieved his niche in world history as being the administrator of food relief to starving people in Europe during and after World War II. Maybe the administration is holding back out of fear that if it undertook a food relief program for Mexico, it might be harder to justify its efforts to cut back on food stamps for the folks back home.

On the other hand, maybe it is time the administration rethought its policy there, too. Whether it does so or not, Congress can and should act promptly to combat mass starvation in the United States and in our neighbor states.

FOOD CRUNCH STINGS MEXICO'S POOR

(By Norm Clarke)

TIJUANA, MEXICO.—The elderly widow, shriveled and weary, can't remember her last meal with meat. A mother of three college-age sons works for a few sacks of groceries. A man carrying an old food sack worries that Mexico's crumbling economy will break the poor.

They are among the scores who line the courtyard at the Casa de los Pobres—Tijuana's "House of the Poor"—for their only food.

Reeling from Mexico's 100 percent inflation and three peso devaluations in five months, Tijuana's impoverished masses have reached a breaking point.

"People can just take so much," said 60-year-old Gordden Cordoba, his thread-bare food sack slung over his shoulder. "We are resilient, but there is a limit."

Tijuana, a magnet to poor Mexicans because it borders California, has a population of 1 million, many poor and living in shacks. The population is double what it was five years ago.

Hard times have become a way of life, and as Mexico struggles with its worst recession in 70 years, the effects here are devastating.

Located on a trash-strewn street close to downtown Tijuana, the tiny mission sustains 150 families a week and supplies 1,000 meals a day to the down and out.

"I can't tell you how much it hurts to see this," Sister Armida, administrator of Casa de los Pobres, said Thursday.

The charity institution has been hard pressed to meet the growing numbers of hungry.

"If we opened the doors, we wouldn't have enough to feed all those who want in," the nun said in tones of resignation.

Donations are few and the budget is strained by the eroding peso, she said as the aroma of bean soup, rice and stew drifted from the mission kitchen.

"Food costs are up 50 percent. We try to serve balanced meals, but it is difficult. There is no milk to buy and meat prices are terribly high," she said.

The Mexican economy is bottoming out after a period of unparalleled prosperity. The oil boom has stopped; industry development projects have stalled. The government owes foreign banks billions of dollars and has issued currency-control regulations in an attempt to control the flow of dollars in and out of the country.

To cut expenses the government withdrew subsidies, doubling the prices of gasoline, electricity and basic foods such as tortillas.

Thousands of workers have been laid off. Unemployment affects 40 percent of the working-age population.

Tijuana is marked by stark contrasts between rich and poor. Million-dollar homes overlook miles of multi-tiered shanties that line dusty roads. Many of the shanties lack insulation or running water.

"The injustices won't end," said Manuel Medina, 72, as he leaned on his cane. "The rich will only get richer and the poor will get poorer."

Maria Nicanor, 63, trudes a mile each day through gullies and rocky, unpaved streets to work at the mission. For payment, the mother of three sons receives three sacks of groceries.

"She says it has helped her save pennies for her sons' education," Sister Armida said.

Others simply survive a day at a time.

"Some days we eat, some days we don't," said Trinidad Angeles, a widow who picked up her weekly ration Thursday. It included 1½ pounds of beans, some bread, fruit and vegetables.

"Everything is so high I can't afford anything anymore. Even the price of water has almost doubled," she said.

Asked if she had received any meat, she wearily shook her head. "Beans and chillies, that's a luxury," she said.●

PIPELINE FIASCO CARRIES SEEDS OF CATASTROPHE

(Mr. SEIBERLING asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.)

● Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, the Cleveland Plain Dealer for Sunday, September 12, contained a reprint of a New York Times article by George W. Ball, former Under Secretary of State, which lays out, in the most compelling way, the folly of the administration's efforts to block the construction of the Soviet-European natural gas pipeline. As Mr. Ball says, it "provides a case history of how not to conduct U.S. foreign policy."

It is bad enough that the administration's decision has already cost American industry the loss of millions of dollars of business and hundreds of jobs, and will possibly produce retaliation on the part of European countries which will cause further losses of business and jobs. If the administration's policy could truly produce a weakening of aggressive tendencies in the Soviet Union or save our allies from a dangerous dependency on Soviet gas, it might have some basis in fact. However, as Mr. Ball points out, it will achieve none of these objectives and will, indeed, be counterproductive.

In fact, it would be difficult to think of anything that has been done by any administration that has greater potential for disrupting the NATO Alliance and drastically weakening the balance of forces against the Soviet Union. To forestall such a catastrophe, Mr. Ball emphasizes that now is the time for the President to promptly alter course. If the President is unable to do so, then Mr. Ball believes Congress should take the initiative. Certainly, we have an obligation to save the Nation from a blunder of such magnitude.

The full text of the George Ball article follows these remarks:

PIPELINE FIASCO CARRIES SEEDS OF CATASTROPHE

(By George W. Ball)

Hypocrisy, self-deception and an astonishing ignorance of experience mark the Reagan administration's frenetic efforts to obstruct the building of the Soviet-European natural-gas pipleline. More importantly, those efforts show a lamentable confusion of basic philosophy on the Soviet Union and the Western alliance.

The pipeline episode provides a case history of how not to conduct U.S. foreign policy.

Although many contracts for pipeline equipment had already been signed, the United States sent a mission to Europe in March to urge the key governments there to abandon the project. The answer was a resounding no, and at the Versailles summit in early June, Reagan gave the impression that the United States would stop trying to block the deal. So it came as a bombshell when, on June 18, he extended sanctions to apply not only to U.S. companies but to the overseas subsidiaries of American companies and to non-American firms producing equipment under U.S. license. Any foreign company violating the ban, the Commerce Department announced, could be barred from obtaining merchandise and data in the United States and possibly fined. Reagan made good on the threat two weeks ago when Creusot-Loire of Paris and Dresser-France, a subsidiary of Dresser Industries of Dallas, disregarded the embargo and were barred from buying goods and services from the United States.

Though Reagan publicly justifies the blocking of the pipeline as pressure on the Polish government to ease its repressive measures, any causal connection is so obscure as to suggest mere shadow play. In the search for more convincing rationalization, he first complained that the pipeline would make Europe excessively dependent on Soviet gas. That conflicted with the considered view of European governments that it was better to accept a small degree of dependence on Moscow than to continue almost total reliance on precarious African and Middle East energy sources.

Some pipeline opponents then argued that the Russians would gain access to American technology by buying 25-megawatt compressors; others contented that the foreign exchange Moscow would derive from the project would ease the worsening Soviet economy. Finally, opponents seized on the argument that the project was being financed at concessionary rates and was thus a form of foreign aid to the Soviet Union. There were even mutterings that the Russians would build the pipeline with slave labor.

Such a frantic search for a rationalization suggests that a vindictive desire to damage the Soviets and to discipline upstart Europeans who challenge the president's diktat motivates some pipeline opponents more than does logic.

The emphasis on hurting the Soviet Union as an end in itself is a Reagan innovation. His predecessors had followed a well-articulated policy toward Moscow: Try to maintain an essential balance of power by confining Soviet influence to the geographical boundaries set in the immediate postwar years, while exploiting opportunities to develop a modus vivendi. This policy has recognized that changes are subtly occurring on both sides, and has assumed that peace is possible so long as neither side challenges the other's vital interests.

Though that fundamental working hypothesis has served the United States for at least 30 years, Reagan has introduced an ideological bias one might call the Manichaean Heresy. Today's Manichaeans espouse the doctrinal concept that Soviet communism is the Anti-Christ—an evil element that must be rooted out if we are to have world peace. Neo-conservative intellectuals have joined the Moral Majority in sharing this view. The former have formed a pressure group called the Committee for the Free World, to which several leading members of the Reagan administration have been attached. The committee's manifesto calls on Americans to try to break the Soviet hold on Eastern Europe by denying Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union "Western loans, Western grain and—above all—Western technology."

For the Manichaeans, the Polish tragedy is merely a tactical "opportunity"—an excuse—to apply economic pressures that would, in their view, hasten the disintegration of the Soviet empire. But niggling sanctions, no matter how persistently applied, could never prove more than a marginal nuisance to the Soviets.

More sophisticated opponents of the pipeline hold a less ideological view. They object because of the foreign-exchange aspect. Denying the Kremlin a potental flow of hard currency might, they reason, constrain Soviet military expenditures.

Yet no one has convincingly shown that depriving Moscow of $1 billion in foreign exchange will force it to spend $1 billion less on weapons. Under the Soviet system, the claim of the military sector on the total resource pie is determined far less by the magnitude of the pie than by the political clout of the military leadership.

We will never weaken the Soviet will or capacity for aggession through economic pressures publicly announced. That would offend an elementary principle: No government of a great power can ever appear to yield to overt pressures. American sanctions are more likely to strengthen the aggressive tendencies in Soviet policy than to impel the leadership toward arms reduction.

While Moscow seems astonished by our obsession with the gas pipeline, it cannot help but be grateful to us for creating anger and division in the Western alliance. It is extraordinary that in only 10 years, America has drastically moved from detente to rhetorical confrontation, while Western Europe has continued to build stronger ties with the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe.

Yet more than just divergence of policy is poisoning the alliance. Reagan's intolerance of any differences and blindness to their underlying causes is also to blame. With arrogance in inverse proportion to experience, he and his administration are using crude methods to try to ride roughshod over the considered judgments and interests of allied governments.

The Germans and French did not lightly decide to participate in the pipeline project. Lacking our indigenous natural-gas reserves, they felt it only prudent to diversify their energy supplies and diminish their reliance on such uncertain sources as Algeria, Libya and Qatar. Natural gas delivered by the Yamal pipeline would not, they concluded, make them dangerously dependent on the Soviet Union—while the jobs provided by a massive construction program would greatly benefit their depressed economies.

Because they made these decisions only after careful study and extensive debate that took account of American concerns, European leaders were understandably outraged when—after agreements had been reached and contracts let—Reagan abruptly asserted that he knew best and erected roadblocks to prevent them from executing their plans.

Whenever the United States has used economic restrictions and obstructions to force its idiosyncratic policies on friends, it has had to pay for it. And so it is now. Though its greatest cost of the pipeline incident will be political—the weakening of the alliance, the erosion of our leadership, the growing doubts among our friends as to our motives and judgment—we cannot escape the large economic costs. These are likely to be far greater than the immediate losses in profit and employment resulting from the cancellation of contracts with our hard-pressed industrial companies. The thunder and lightning being generated by our action are not the mere manifestation of a localized, passing storm; they must be seen in the context of a threatening Atlantic trade war that could undo our patient effort over four decades to build a trading world in which all could prosper.

We should stop trying to play nanny to our allies before we do irreparable damage. Nothing could more help the Soviet Union than a bitter argument within the alliance that would weaken the West's cohesion. That brings us to the heart of the matter. If the U.S. government thinks that the pipeline is not a good idea, it should quietly urge that view on its allies and try to persuade them to pursue a different course. That is what alliances are all about.

If we are not to turn stupidity into catastrophe, Reagan must promptly alter course. A wise president could gracefully extricate himself. While reiterating his belief that the pipeline was a bad idea, he could announce that the United States was halting its efforts to block constuction, in recognition that maintenance of a strong Western alliance was paramount. Our partners would hail that as a statesmanlike action. If it should prove impracticable because of threats from the administration's right wing, Congress should take the initiative. It would not be the first time it had saved the nation from a presidential blunder.●

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON THE BUDGET TO THE SPEAKER

(Mr. JONES of Oklahoma asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.)

● Mr. JONES of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I would like to submit to the RECORD the current level of spending in fiscal year 1982 as certified by the Committee on the Budget pursuant to section 311 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON THE BUDGET,
Washington, D.C., September 14, 1982.

Hon. THOMAS P. O'NEILL, Jr.,
Speaker, U.S. House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: On January 30, 1976, the Committee on the Budget outlined the procedure which it had adopted in connection with its responsibilities under Section 311 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 to provide estimates of the current level of revenues and spending. The Budget Committee is herewith transmitting the status report under S. Con. Res. 92, which revised the Second Budget Resolution for Fiscal Year 1982. This report, approved by the Budget Committee on September 14, 1982, reflects the Revised Second Budget Resolution of June 23, 1982, and estimates of budget authority, outlays, and revenues based on all completed action on spending measures as of the close of legislative business September 10, 1982.

Sincerely,

JAMES R. JONES,
Chairman.

REPORT TO THE SPEAKER OF THE U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FROM THE COMMITTEE ON THE BUDGET ON THE STATUS OF THE FISCAL YEAR 1982 CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET ADOPTED IN SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 92—REFLECTING COMPLETED ACTION AS OF SEPT. 10, 1982

[In millions of dollars]

	Budget authority	Outlays	Revenues
Appropriate level	777,672	734,100	628,400
Current level	774,462	733,004	628,600
Over resolution by			200
Under resolution by	3,210	1,096

BUDGET AUTHORITY

Any measure providing budget or entitlement authority which is not included in the current level estimate and that exceeds $3,210 million for fiscal year 1982, if adopted and enacted, would cause the appropriate level of budget authority for that year as set forth in S. Con. Res. 92 to be exceeded.

OUTLAYS

Any measure providing budget or entitlement authority which is not included in the current level estimate and that exceeds $1,096 million in outlays for fiscal year 1982, if adopted and enacted, would cause the appropriate level of outlays for that year as set forth in S. Con. Res. 92 to be exceeded.

REVENUES

Any measure that would result in a revenue loss that exceeds $200 million for fiscal year 1982, if adopted and enacted, would cause revenues to be less than the appropriate level for that year as set forth in S. Con. Res. 92.

U.S. CONGRESS,
CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE,
Washington, D.C., September 13, 1982.

Hon. JAMES R. JONES,
Chairman, Committee on the Budget, U.S. House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Pursuant to section 308(b) and in aid of section 311(b) of the Congressional Budget Act, this letter and supporting detail provide an up-to-date tabulation of the current levels of new budget authority, estimated outlays and estimated revenues in comparison with the appropriate levels for those items contained in the most recently agreed to concurrent resolution on the 1982 budget (S. Con. Res. 92). This report for fiscal year 1982 is tabulated as of close of business September 10, 1982 and is based on our estimates of budget authority, outlays, and revenues using the assumptions and estimates consistent with S. Con. Res. 92.

The House and Senate Budget Committees have different budget resolution assumptions regarding borrowing authority for the Commodity Credit Corporation (CCC). Borrowing authority for the CCC was provided in the 1982 Supplemental Appropriations, Public Law 97-257, and this letter includes separate calculations of current level for the House and Senate under the two different assumptions. The result is different levels of budget authority for the House and Senate calculations—revenues and outlays are identical.

CURRENT LEVEL UNDER HOUSE TREATMENT OF CCC BORROWING AUTHORITY

[In millions of dollars]
